I have heard of too many instances in which the minicab customer has had an argument, or worse, with a violent or sexually abusive driver. It is a sad fact that women are more likely to receive such treatment. Hon. Members may have read the harrowing articles in the Evening Standard, describing a whole range of ordeals that minicab users have gone through. I commend the newspaper for its excellent coverage on the issue. By publicising the sometimes dreadful events, it has been a powerful force in the campaign to promote the Bill.

Some may be surprised to learn that men, too, suffer abuse. A young doctor's experience late one Saturday night in south London is frightening to relate: with not a black cab in sight, he took a minicab that had touted for his business in the street. He got in the front passenger seat, and minutes later the driver pulled over and another man got in the back and demanded money. He pulled out a knife, forcing the doctor out of the car, having taken his house keys and cash. The car drove off. That was a terrifying experience at 4 o'clock in the morning, and one that could easily have ended in tragedy.

People run an unacceptable risk in our city every day, and Conservative Members want it brought to an early end. With the licensing system proposed by the Bill, customers will be able to feel safe in the knowledge that the firm taking their bookings is fit for business. They will know that the driver who collects them has been approved and knows where he is going, and that the car has been passed for hire. That will establish a triple guarantee for safer travel.

For those of us who are concerned about cost, the scheme has been priced at about £4 million a year, as the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Efford) said. It will be set up so as to be largely self-financing through licence fees. Fees may rise slightly as a result, but one of the attractions of minicab travel is that fares are quite cheap in any case. It is right that those who use the service should pay for its regulation. In that way, little cost is passed on directly to the already over-burdened taxpayer.

Regulation will also mean the end of tax and benefit fraud in the trade. Some drivers claim benefit illegally. Some firms are not registered for value added tax. In my constituency, the cash-in-the-pocket cowboys are undermining and under-cutting legitimate minicab companies that meet International Standard Organisation accounting standards. That will come to an end.

The hon. Member for Eltham spoke in some detail of the black cab trade's concern and referred to the famous turning circle of the London taxi. That reminded me of the story of the fabulously wealthy billionaire, Mr. Gulbenkian, who came to London in the 1930s and got rather interested in black cabs. When someone asked him what a black cab was, he said, "It's one of those things that turn on a sixpence—whatever that may be."

As my right hon. Friend said, there are approximately 20,000 licensed black taxis in London, offering a service that is unique and of a very high standard. There are more than 2 million passenger journeys a week, and the industry makes an immensely valuable contribution to London's economy, with an annual turnover of more than £700 million.

I am sure that hon. Members who have taken taxis in other capital cities will agree that London enjoys one of the finest cab services in the world—perhaps the very finest. I pay tribute to the way in which the black cab trade has worked so constructively with my right hon. Friend. Not for one moment do I think that it will suffer as a result of the Bill. Crucially, the law will continue to allow for only black cabs to be flagged down in the street. That is fair and right.

We can reassure the black cab trade: if there is a thriving unregulated minicab trade without the legislation, surely regulation will take the cowboys out of the system and ensure that only approved drivers and vehicles are on the streets of London. There is no threat to black cabs. That is certainly good news for the people of London.

Last week, I attended an excellent seminar on the Bill, organised by the Suzy Lamplugh Trust. It was addressed by my right hon. Friend and by the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge). The trust is a tremendous example of how courage and great achievement can come from adversity. I pay warm tribute to the hard work and determination of its founder, Diana Lamplugh, and her husband Paul.

The trust has been behind the campaign for the regulation of London's minicab drivers for many years. I hope that its efforts will be rewarded this Session. At the seminar, it became clear that the Bill had the support of the Metropolitan police, the London tourist board, the Consumers Association and the Greater London Association for Disabled People. Moreover, representatives from both the minicab and black cab trades voiced their support for the Bill in principle.

Mr. Efford: Will the hon. Gentleman confirm that the representatives at the seminar all expected topographical knowledge to be included in the Bill?

Mr. Ottaway: I do not know exactly what their personal knowledge was before they came to the meeting, but they agreed that details such as topographical training could be dealt with later by the Public Carriage Office as the appointed licensing authority.

London must not be made to wait a minute longer than necessary to enjoy the same legislation that covers the rest of the country. Each of us has a right to expect the protection and weight of the law to apply to London's minicab trade. The Labour party supported the changes in opposition, and I am pleased that the Minister will confirm today that the Bill will enjoy from the Government the same unqualified support as it has from the Conservative party.

It would be unfair to the black cab trade, with its excellent regulated service, for the present unsatisfactory arrangements to continue in London. It would be unfair to the legitimate minicab trade outside London, and, above all, it would be grossly unfair to Londoners and those visiting our vibrant capital city, if the Bill did not succeed. We support it.

Ms Margaret Hodge (Barking): I am delighted to participate in the debate today, especially—as the hon. Member for Croydon, South (Mr. Ottaway) pointed out—because it affects women in the capital. I am the first woman to participate in the debate, and I join other hon. Members in congratulating the right hon. Member for North-West Hampshire (Sir G. Young) on using his opportunity to introduce this legislation.

If I were to leave the Chamber now and walk to the Members' Entrance, I would probably walk straight into a black cab. If I walked a little further, out of the Members' Gates and down Victoria street, I could probably hail a black cab within a few seconds. If I went a little further, beyond Victoria, I would probably be passed by 30 or 40 black cabs. If I got into any of those black cabs, I would be certain of my safety.

The London taxi has existed in some form for many years, and has been subject to regulation since the time of Oliver Cromwell. The regulatory system has been built up over time, and it ensures that, by and large, black taxis are constantly checked for roadworthiness and to ensure that the drivers have a criminal record check, a medical, a driving test, a financial test and, lastly, the knowledge.

Many people are familiar with some or all of those requirements. We are aware that prices are regulated and metered. The enduring sight of the London taxi is a testament to the quality of the service. Indeed, London's black cab fleet is a tourist attraction, and many a visitor has snapped the timeless design of the Fairway cab.

However, while black cabs are regulated and we know what we get, the same cannot be said for the other form of private hire cars in London—minicabs. Most people are unaware that there is any difference in regulation between the two. In a survey last September in Which? magazine, 51 per cent. of Londoners were found to have no idea that minicabs were not regulated.

Most people probably did not know that because London is the exception rather than the rule. It lags behind every other metropolitan district, city and town. Outside London, all minicabs are regulated. Why should London, our capital and a metropolitan area covering some 7 million people, fail to be covered by such obvious legislation? We should grasp the opportunity presented by the Bill to place regulation on the statute book. We cannot allow London's minicabs to slip through the regulatory net again.

When Londoners are questioned about the most important problems facing London, time and again they put transport at the top of their agenda. Minicabs are part of that transport infrastructure, and, with 60,000 to 80,000 operating in and around London, they contribute significantly. In fact, there are twice as many minicabs as black cabs. Outside central London—for example, in my constituency, where there are fewer black cabs—the minicab is often the only form of private hire car available. Another Consumers Association survey showed that more than half of Londoners questioned said that they would use a minicab, but only a third said that they would use a black cab.

Many people rely on minicabs. For those without a car, or when public transport is inadequate, they are the only way to get from A to B quickly. For women, they are essential to ensure that we can get home safely at night. Elderly people often use minicabs when they go shopping. As minicabs are often cheaper than black cabs, they can be for many the only viable option for a journey.

While all users hope that their cab is safe, there are no guarantees. It is a lottery. Minicab drivers have no safety checks. The roadworthiness of cars is not checked. Drivers may have a criminal record, and even, as other hon. Members have pointed out, be convicted rapists. They do not need identification. Each time a woman goes home late at night in a cab, she crosses her fingers and hopes that she will get home safely. Sadly, some do not.

Other hon. Members have mentioned the Suzy Lamplugh Trust and its work, and I join them in congratulating the trust on its campaign. I was shocked, as I am sure other hon. Members were, to find that the trust's survey of 1,000 people who used private hire firms found that a fifth had been subjected to dangerous driving or an assault in a minicab.

In the same survey, 14 per cent. knew someone who had been physically or sexually abused when travelling in a minicab. The Evening Standard reported recently that, in the past 12 months, there have been 68 sex attacks on women by minicab drivers, and the Metropolitan police have estimated that more than one rape a week occurred in London minicabs in 1997. Those are violent crimes, and very real dangers.

Many London Members attending the debate today may have had constituents come to them about attacks or assaults. The issue is close to my heart, and I wish to relate an incident that happened to a former member of my parliamentary staff. She was trying to get home at about 1 o'clock in the morning. She was outside a major railway station and tried to hail a black cab, but nobody stopped. Finally, a minicab pulled up. That was illegal—because minicabs are not allowed to ply for trade—but it was late and a cold night, so she got in the cab. She thought that she was safe, because the driver had a two-way radio system and a large aerial on the boot of his car. However, instead of taking her home, the driver started to assault her. Fortunately, my former member of staff is strong and level-headed and, after a struggle in which she was bruised, she managed to escape from the cab. She was then picked up by a black cab driver and taken home for free, but the experience, of course, left her shocked and distraught.

As a mother of three teenage and post-teenage daughters, I worry, like every other parent, about girls' safety when they go out in the evening. I do not let my girls come home except by minicab, and, because of my fear of minicabs, we rely on the one and only Lady Cabs. That is not good enough in a modern capital city. We need to guarantee the safety of everyone who uses minicabs—residents or tourists, men or women. We need to know that, when a minicab arrives, the vehicle is safe and the driver is vetted and medically fit. At present, it is illegal for an employer to carry out a full criminal check on potential drivers.

No professionally run minicab organisation should fear this legislation. They should welcome it, because it will remove from the business the unscrupulous, the illegal and the dangerous—those drivers who give the whole trade a bad name. It makes sense that drivers should face a criminal check and be proficient in driving. If minicabbing is somebody's job, he or she must be competent behind the wheel. It also makes sense that cars should be roadworthy for carrying passengers.

Drivers should also have some local knowledge of the area. Although the destination is agreed in advance, they should be able to read a map. Given that pollution and congestion are increasing, drivers should also be using the quickest and simplest route.

It makes sense for drivers to know where they are going when they pick up their passengers. We must all have been in minicabs whose drivers have not had a clue where they were going. My best example is this: when a minicab picked me up at 4 Millbank to take me to the BBC, the driver simply did not know the direct and frequently travelled route. Finally, it makes sense for drivers to have some form of identification, so that, when passengers step into their cabs, they are secure in the knowledge that the drivers have complied with the requirements of the Bill.

Black cabs need have no fear of the legislation. In the past, black cab organisations have raised objections, and in March 1993, Vivian Bendall—the former Member for Ilford, North—argued in an Adjournment debate that licensing minicabs would undermine the black cab trade. That debate, however, took place five years ago, and the need for legislation is ever more pressing.

As studies by the Consumers Association show, most people think that minicabs should be regulated. As other hon. Members have pointed out, a host of organisations support the Bill. I am particularly glad that the London Taxi Board—which represents 95 per cent. of drivers, owners and manufacturers of London taxis—also broadly supports it.

I believe that the Bill will allow black cabs and minicabs to co-exist, each serving different needs and each operating differently. The added costs that black cab drivers must currently meet will be offset by the fact that only they will be able to ply for trade: it will still only be possible to hire a minicab in advance by telephone. I am sure that the status quo will be maintained—that minicabs will continue to predominate in outer London, while black cabs will be a more frequent sight in inner and central London. There will be few losers, and many winners.

I fully support this much-needed legislation, which will ensure peace of mind and the operation of minimum standards. It will bring us into line with the rest of the country, and will ensure that—tourist or Londoner, young woman or elderly shopper—we can all get into a cab safely.

Mr. Edward Garnier (Harborough): I congratulate the hon. Member for Barking (Ms Hodge) on her concise speech, with which I broadly agreed. I also congratulate my right hon. Friend the Member for North-West Hampshire (Sir G. Young) on his Bill, and hope that it makes good progress. As many hon. Members will know, my right hon. Friend's e-mail address is "cyclebart", followed by "parliament" dot "uk" dot—or perhaps "dotty". I hope that, once the Bill becomes law, he will change his address to "taxitoff". He ought to be recognised in future as one who has done a good deal for the taxi trade in this great capital city.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Cities of London and Westminster (Mr. Brooke)—who is not in the Chamber now—made, yet again, a beautiful speech. He is gaining a reputation—if, indeed, he did not gain it in earlier Parliaments—for producing beautifully crafted speeches at short notice. I hope that in future all London taxis will contain the sign "This taxi diverts to the House of Commons when Mr. Brooke is speaking".

The issue is not whether minicabs should be regulated, but the means by which they should be regulated. I hope that the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Efford) will not mind if we try to enact the Bill as soon as possible, and allow the Public Carriage Office, or other non-parliamentary bodies, to tighten the regulations after consulting interested parties.

The debate allows us to pay tribute to London's licensed black cab trade. For obvious reasons, the hon. Member for Eltham uttered fulsome praise, both on the basis of his personal experience and, I believe, from the dispassionate viewpoint of a Member of Parliament. However, many of our constituents and relations who have visited London have been helped by black cab drivers, and the charitable acts performed by the trade as a whole are well known to us. The hon. Member for Barking gave an example of the kindness of individual London taxi drivers to people in trouble.

The debate also gives us an opportunity to make it clear that not all minicab firms should be deprecated for misconduct or for owning and controlling shabby vehicles. It may surprise some Labour Members to hear that I used to work for the Daily Mirror. Cabs were provided to take us home, as there was little public transport after midnight. In fact, the form of transport with which we were provided by Mr. Robert Maxwell and his predecessors was the minicab.

Those minicab drivers were excellent people, with clean, neat cars. They were very polite, obviously, but they were also safe to travel with. I do not believe that any of the women who were employed by the Daily Mirror at the time were ever in danger. Let us not smear all minicab drivers with the allegations that have been bandied about today.

Hon. Members may wonder why the Member of Parliament for Harborough is speaking in a debate about London taxis, but the Bill will be welcomed by my constituents—especially the taxi drivers who claim to labour under far stricter regulations than those currently applicable to the London minicab trade. Harborough district council is rightly strict in its application of standards of excellence and good conduct to local taxi drivers, a number of whom have lost their licences as a result of misconduct—not necessarily in the context of their work. One taxi driver lost his licence following an assault in a public house, which had nothing to do with his work. The district council rightly took him to court and invited the magistrates to relieve him of his licence, because they did not consider him a fit and proper person to drive a taxi and take members of the public about in it. I am pleased that the Bill will introduce similar checks and standards for London minicab drivers.

Clauses 1, 7, 10 and 14 deal with the standard of vehicles, and with licensing. I agree with the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox)—who is not here now—that every licensed minicab should display on its dashboard, or in another prominent position, not only the driver's licence but a photograph of him or her. Both should be large enough for a passenger in the back seat to see them properly. I urge minicab passengers to sit in the back of the vehicle. I appreciate the concerns about the safety of women using minicabs, and that simple step would make it more difficult for dangerous men to interfere with them. I agree with the hon. Member for Barking and other hon. Members that, until we properly regulate the minicab trade in London, women will be in danger. I am delighted to see in the House some women Members who may be able to speak about their experiences and those of other women. I am sure that the Minister will support her hon. Friends in doing that.

Another cohort of people who need protection are foreigners, who may be duped by some minicab operators. They can be taken on long journeys at great expense, although those of us who know London and black cab drivers would take a much more direct and cheaper route. I speak about not just protecting foreign users of taxis: we should be careful to ensure also that all taxi drivers, whether in black cabs or saloon cars, can speak and understand English. It is not unusual for users of private hire vehicles to find that the driver not only cannot read a map but is bad at English. I think that it was the master of Balliol college, Oxford at the beginning of this century who said:

"my name is Jowett. There's no knowledge but I know it. I am Master of this college: What I don't know isn't knowledge."

I hope that we can improve the knowledge of private hire drivers so that they can get up to the standard of drivers of licensed black cabs.

I do not accept the concern of the hon. Member for Eltham on his "may" or "will" point about the Secretary of State's ability to make regulations about the knowledge of London. The Bill as drafted is adequate to cope with the problem of lack of knowledge, and I invite the hon. Gentleman not to table amendments.

Clause 4 is valuable because it allows peer pressure. When I first read the Bill, I feared that it did not place an obligation on the operators or radio operators who control the self-employed private hire drivers to ensure that vehicles under their control met the stringent standards that I hope they will have to meet. Unless taxi fleet controllers are so obliged and are in jeopardy of being fined or punished in some other way, minicab drivers will be allowed by careless or reckless taxi firm owners to flout the regulations.

Many minicab drivers are not well off. Some of them may be on benefit and working illegally, and I should like to see that end of the market cleaned up. I congratulate my right hon. Friend the Member for North-West Hampshire on his Bill. I wish it well and hope that it makes speedy progress.

Ms Linda Perham (Ilford, North): I congratulate the right hon. Member for North-West Hampshire (Sir G. Young) on his good fortune in securing fourth place in the ballot. I congratulate him even more on his wisdom in introducing a Bill on this subject. He knows that he has my support for his initiative because, last week, I tabled an early-day motion welcoming proposals to regulate London's minicab trade and create higher standards of safety and service. The EDM also calls on the Government to ensure the introduction of appropriate checks on drivers in the context of criminal records, health and topographical knowledge, and asks them to put the maximum emphasis on enforcement.

All safety legislation and most philosophies of customer service are based on competence allied to sound procedures so that the right person does the right job at the right time and in the right way. The Bill's main strands concentrate on those objectives. I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak in the debate, as many of my constituents have a significant interest in those issues, either as users of minicabs or through their connections with the licensed taxi industry.

Ilford, North is famed for the number of licensed taxi drivers who live in the area. There has been no precise survey, but they certainly number thousands. Indeed, Geoffrey Riesel, the chairman of Radio Taxis and a member of the London Taxi Board, who will be well known to the right hon. Member for North-West Hampshire and to my hon. Friend the Minister, is one of my constituents and has been a fruitful source of information. He is here with his colleagues in the Gallery today.

As the House would expect, I also pay tribute to the role of the licensed taxi industry within London's transport services. Across the world, London's taxis are rightly renowned for providing the highest standards of service and safety. Compared to those who live in other international cities such as Paris or New York, the people of London and everyone who works in, or visits, our capital city are extremely fortunate to have such an excellent service. I am pleased to say that other hon. Members have already acknowledged that excellence—it is nice to hear other hon. Members praising my constituents so highly. However, as I have said, many of my constituents have an interest in the Bill because they are frequent users of minicabs. I believe that they have a right to expect minicab regulation to ensure their personal safety as well as a good-quality service.

As a woman who uses minicabs from time to time and as the mother of two teenage daughters who often have to depend on local minicabs for transport, particularly at night, I am well aware of the potential risks involved if adequate checks on cars and drivers are not carried out. I warmly welcome the Bill's intention to put that right.

Only two days ago, I received a letter from a constituent complaining that she had been involved in an accident with a minicab. She said that the driver was uninsured and refused to give any details; in addition, the minicab company for which he worked also refused assistance.

I am pleased to see that a demonstration of topographical competence for minicab licensing is mentioned in the Bill. That is important, as it should enable the legislation to be flexible in coping with changing demands over the years and to provide high levels of safety and service to passengers. I know that there is strong support among Londoners for some form of topographical training for London's minicab drivers. It is safety on which we have rightly focused here today.

To support that view, I refer to the considered views of Mr. David Rogers, the road safety adviser to the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents, who writes:

"I can see no good reason for NOT requiring anyone who is offering the service of a taxi (or private hire vehicle) to have a basic understanding of the local topography. There is little doubt in my mind that any form of 'distraction' which takes the attention of the driver from his/her main task—that of managing the vehicle safely—is potentially dangerous and to be avoided at all costs.

In purely safety terms, these controls and actions which are NOT essential to the safe management of the vehicle, should be kept strictly to a minimum. Thus, the driver who consults a map while attempting to drive is fundamentally reducing their ability to cope. It follows then, that the drive who is able, without reference to a map, to carry passengers to their destination is by far a safer driver".

That is perfect common sense.

Hon. Members who are drivers—not least those of us who have recently had to learn the new topography of our constituencies following boundary changes—will be well aware from their own driving experiences that, when we are lost and have to look for road signs or at maps, our driving safety is reduced as our concentration is focused elsewhere.

We can all provide horror stories about journeys with minicab drivers who had no idea where they were heading. My hon. Friends the Members for Tooting (Mr. Cox) and for Barking (Ms Hodge) gave graphic examples of that and the hon. and learned Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) also alluded to it. There are obvious difficulties for tourists in London as they may have the added disadvantage of language problems; they may be unable to communicate anything other than their hoped-for destination to the driver.

The knowledge of London examinations were instituted following severe criticism of the service provided by the hackney carriage trade at the Great Exhibition in Hyde park in 1851. Do we really want history to repeat itself at the millennium celebrations around London in the year 2000, when we expect even larger numbers of people, many of whom may choose to use minicabs, to visit the capital? Our capital city is our country's showpiece, attracting millions of visitors. If visitors suffer adverse experiences as they attempt to get around the sights, their negative impressions will be taken back to their home countries and Britain's reputation abroad may be affected.

It is not just transitory visitors who are inconvenienced by such incompetence; it is a problem for the many vulnerable London residents who, for reasons or age or disability, are not able to assist the driver with navigational directions. I am always extremely irritated when a minicab driver expects me to know the exact route to my destination, even though I may never have been there. It is quite simple—I expect a professional driver to be capable of delivering me safely to where I wish to go, without having to worry about carrying the "Master Atlas of Greater London" in my head.

The London Private Hire Car Association is to be congratulated on having fought for such a Bill for many years, but it argues that its drivers need little or no topographical training as they can pre-plan a journey using an "A to Z". That is not a convincing argument, and it goes against best practice already operating in the large metropolitan areas outside London, where private hire drivers and licensed taxi drivers have to pass similar or identical topographical tests. I am also fairly certain that little pre-planning of routes actually takes place, as many jobs are given to the drivers at the last minute or without much notice.

I am disappointed that the association's argument appears to have been made for commercial reasons rather than on the basis of safety or quality of service. While it should be rightly proud of having campaigned for such legislation, it should not seek it on the cheap. This is our chance to legislate for a service that is up to a standard and not down to a price. Without that, inevitably we shall find ourselves stuck in a cul de sac of unfulfilled good intentions or, even worse, going the wrong way down the one-way street of public expectation.

I also understand that the case for knowledge-based topographical training has been made by many professional bodies, including the Confederation of British Industry, London First, ROSPA, the British Incoming Tour Operators Association and, of course, the Consumers Association. I look forward to that issue and others being discussed in more detail with the appropriate regulators, the Minister and the right hon. Member for North–West Hampshire as the Bill progresses through the House.

In particular, I am concerned—as are other hon. Members—about the wording of clause 13(3), which relates to the issue of topographical knowledge. It states:

"The Secretary of State may require applicants to show to his satisfaction (whether by taking a test or otherwise) that they possess an appropriate level of knowledge of London and of general topographical skills."

The word "may" is also used elsewhere in the Bill with reference to other conditions for granting a licence—for example, criminal records and health checks. I presume that that means that the Secretary of State may not require those conditions to be met if he feels so minded. That has certainly caused some apprehension in the taxi industry.

The London Taxi Board also has reservations about other parts of the Bill, including the omission of a requirement on London's operators to display or record fares, given that there is no requirement for fares to be controlled by the Secretary of state; the obligations on owners of licensed vehicles where the Bill is not specific enough about a set period for vehicle checks—unlike other authorities outside London, where six-monthly checks are required; the identification of licensed vehicles where clarification is needed on when, why and how exemptions would be required; and taxi meters.

Although no private hire vehicle is required to be fitted with a meter, there is provision for the testing of taxi meters for vehicles that are fitted with them. The fear is that, without Government control of fares, an unscrupulous operator could set unreasonably high fares and justify them by saying, "It's on a Government-approved meter." The London Taxi Board is against private hire vehicles being fitted with meters.

The LTB also has concerns about the power to suspend or revoke licences. The Bill proposes that action if a driver is convicted of dishonesty, indecency or violence. However, I know from the many black cab drivers to whom I spoke before and after the general election that they would like touting to be added to that list. Taxi drivers feel strongly about touting and about the current non-enforcement of measures prohibiting it. As my hon. Friend the Member for Eltham (Mr. Efford) said, the London Taxi Board is also concerned about the prohibition of signs, notices and advertisements.

As hon. Members have already said today, another potential problem with the Bill is whether the intended regulatory body—the Public Carriage Office—will be able to cope with the licensing requirements that the legislation would delegate to it. Will the PCO really be able to take on a large increase in work load without extra resources and considerable enlargement and internal restructuring, both physically and in human resources?

One reason why we now have so many minicabs in London is that licensed taxi provision has not been able to grow to meet the demand for personal public transport. Such provision has been restricted in size and has therefore concentrated on working in central London, with consequential poor coverage in the suburbs. It is a vicious circle of passengers and drivers looking for each other in the same, relatively limited areas, so that other areas become almost completely neglected.

The Public Carriage Office has a proud history that can be traced back more than 300 years, to the hackney coach office of 1662. The genesis of the Metropolitan police's traffic responsibilities can be found in the London Hackney Carriages Act 1843. In the 10 years following 1903, the PCO was responsible for administering the virtually wholesale change of 11,000 horse-drawn cabs to motor cabs.

Unfortunately, there is little doubt that the main reason for slow growth in the number of licensed taxi drivers is the Public Carriage Office's outdated method of testing for the knowledge. As the right hon. Member for North-West Hampshire said, it can take up to three years to pass the knowledge test, and that is clearly unsatisfactory. The test is administered in a succession of oral examinations. However, only five examiners are based in the PCO, and it often takes six months for candidates to be given an appointment for their next test. Test procedures, not training, are the barrier to entry.

I welcome the remarks made by the right hon. Member for North–West Hampshire about the indications that he has received on staff increases and even about a dedicated minicab unit—although my hon. Friend the Member for Eltham has already expressed reservations about how many staff may be needed in such a unit.

In scrutinising the Bill and in examining the issues, I hope that we shall ensure that the process is reformed. I believe that drivers, as they learn the relevant information, could pass the knowledge test just as quickly using a modern testing system, and perhaps by using a computerised test. I foresee no reason why a strong candidate could not pass a knowledge of London test in six months to one year—which is the time that longer-qualified drivers told me that it took them to pass the knowledge with no changes in the knowledge syllabus.

Testing and the issues that it raises are fundamental to the Bill. The Public Carriage Office will have to introduce topographical knowledge tests for minicab drivers that are stringent enough to ensure that safety and quality standards are maintained but that do not create an unnecessary bureaucratic barrier to entry, as they do in the taxi industry. It would be most encouraging if the Minister would undertake to review the current functions and activities of the Public Carriage Office, so that we can be certain that it will be able to meet the new responsibilities placed upon it. If it cannot meet those responsibilities, what alternatives will be available?

I should be amazed to discover that—regardless of its bureaucracy's efficiency and flexibility—a Public Carriage Office established in 1850 to administer fewer than 11,000 horse-drawn vehicles, with a knowledge radius of four miles from Charing Cross, is really the most appropriate long-term organisation to administer the current 22,000 licensed taxi drivers and more than 50,000 minicab drivers across the 800 square miles of the Metropolitan police district.

I hope also that the Government will consider introducing legislation to enable the Public Carriage Office to charge taxi and minicab drivers for sitting tests. Doing so would ensure that an unfair burden does not fall on the licence fees of those who have already qualified. In addition, I plead for effective and properly funded enforcement to police the new regime. Without that, an illegal and, in many cases, uninsured and unsafe third tier will continue to ply and tout for business at the expense of those in the taxi and minicab industries who go through thorough vetting and testing procedures.

Any hon. Member who has had the opportunity, as the right hon. Member for Cities of London and Westminster (Mr. Brooke) clearly has—he is no longer in his place—to watch or perhaps record for later viewing, as I did, the early episodes of the new BBC sitcom "Roger Roger" about a minicab firm, may remember a particular scene in the second programme last week. A potential new driver was being interviewed by another new driver so that his suitability could be assessed. Not much progress was made beyond the question, "Have you got a clean licence?"

I am not saying that that sort of casual vetting is true to life, but if it has even a remote resonance, the Bill in its final form should go a long way towards putting in place long-overdue regulation of the private hire trade. My constituents and people all over our great capital city, which is the best place in the world to live and work, deserve no less. We are justifiably proud of our unique black cab service. Let us work together to secure a safe and efficient service for residents, workers and visitors who choose to travel by minicab.

Mr. Peter Atkinson (Hexham): I congratulate my right hon. Friend the Member for North-West Hampshire (Sir G. Young) on his luck in the ballot and on choosing such a sensible subject for his Bill. This is an ideal private Member's Bill. I also congratulate him on his bravery, because those who have tried to reform the London taxi trade over the years have always suffered as a result—I hope that he does not. The hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Efford) mentioned Charles I who subsequently lost his head; Oliver Cromwell tried to introduce reform of the trade and was deposed; and the former Member for Epping Forest, Mr. Steve Norris, considered a similar measure in the previous Parliament.

I am sure that all my hon. Friends will welcome the fact that one problem has finally been resolved. Whenever we used to get taxis outside the Palace of Westminster, the taxi driver would ask whether we were Members of Parliament; he would then ask whether we were Conservatives and whether we knew Steve Norris. When we said yes, we would have our ears bent for the rest of the journey about the iniquities of what Steve Norris was proposing. If the licensed taxi trade does not like what my right hon. Friend the Member for North–West Hampshire is proposing, he should be rather careful, when making his elegant way through London's squares, that he is not knocked off his bicycle by an angry taxi driver.

I am grateful to the London Taxi Board for supplying me with material and for supporting the Bill, which is long overdue. Let us make no mistake about it—the Bill will have a profound effect on the minicab business because it will remove an enormous number of people from it. That is a good thing, but it will mean that minicabs will be more expensive and it might reduce the size of the market.

Mention has been made of a special knowledge test for minicab drivers, but we do not know how many minicab drivers there are. There could be 60,000 or even as many as 80,000. In response to the hon. Member for Ilford, North (Ms Perham), let me say that imposing a duty on the Secretary of State to ensure that everyone who drives a minicab should pass a topographical test will mean that he will have the formidable job of testing 80,000 people simply to ensure that they can continue to do what they have been doing for years.

Mr. Efford: The Bill allows for the Secretary of State to accept grandfather rights for existing minicab drivers. If they could demonstrate that they had been plying their trade for a given period, it could be acceptable for them to continue to do so. I think that everyone would find that perfectly sensible. Of course, the Chancellor of the Exchequer might be interested to see whether they could produce their tax forms for the previous three years or so.

Mr. Atkinson: I understand exactly what the hon. Gentleman is saying and I agree that it will be a problem. I anticipate that there will be far fewer people driving minicabs when the Bill becomes law.

I do not use minicabs very often, but the other day I took one from west London to get back here for a 10 o'clock vote. I had to direct the driver as the only place that he knew was Hyde park corner. When we arrived at the Palace of Westminster, I asked him to drive into Members' Entrance and he refused point blank. I suspect that he was an illegal immigrant or an asylum seeker who should not have been working and he insisted on dropping me some distance away. Obviously, when the Bill becomes law, such people will quite rightly go out of business.

It is important that the black cab trade understands which way it wants to go. It appears that the black cab trade is trying to bring the minicab trade closer to it by insisting on a more formal knowledge test similar to that taken by black cab drivers and by regulating the vehicles. My advice to the black cab industry would be to maintain the distance between black cabs and minicabs. There should be a light touch in regulation in terms of knowledge. People who use minicabs should know that, although they may be cheaper, they are distinctly inferior to the black cabs that ply for hire on London's streets. We should not try to bring up the standards of minicab drivers too much, as that would challenge the existing black cab industry, which I greatly support.

The Bill gives me an opportunity to praise the black cab industry. I represent a Northumberland constituency that is rather remote from the affairs of London. Nevertheless, black cabs provide my constituents with an important service. Many of them have been helped by London taxi drivers when they have lost their wallets or got into trouble. One farmer in Northumberland, who had never been to London before, was persuaded to go to the Royal Smithfield show. When he arrived, he found the people and the crowds totally unacceptable, so he hailed a black cab outside Earls Court and said, "Alnwick, please." I am pleased to report that the driver took him there, although the bill was very large. That is the kind of service that black cab drivers give the public.

The hon. Member for Ilford, North mentioned an issue that was raised by the London Taxi Board—whether minicabs should have meters. I agree with the hon. Lady that minicabs should not have meters as that would give an official stamp to the fares being charged. If someone staying at a London hotel asked a minicab driver to take him to Heathrow airport, the meter could be set to produce an extortionate fare. If the customer complained that it was twice what he would be charged in a black cab, the driver could say that it was the official fare. I understand the problems involved and I await an explanation from my right hon. Friend the Member for North–West Hampshire or from the Minister as to why it is proposed to allow meters in minicabs.

A further point relates to the identification of the vehicle. In provincial cities, there has been a problem with people regarding private hire vehicles as taxis because of the advertisements on the sides of the vehicles. I know that the Bill includes restrictions on the use of the words "taxi" or "cab", but it is important that there should be nothing on a minicab other than the essential identity to show that it is a licensed minicab.

I welcome the Bill and wish it a safe passage through the House. I hope that some of the concerns of the London Taxi Board will be addressed in greater detail when the Bill is considered in another place. It is long overdue and will be welcomed by people who live in London and visitors to the city.

Mrs. Eileen Gordon (Romford): There is considerable interest in the Bill in my constituency and I thank the right hon. Member for North-West Hampshire (Sir G. Young) for introducing it. I hope that it will not be too long before this overdue legislation is on the statute book.

I represent a part of London with a large taxi driver population. As it is on the edge of London, many of my constituents are also regular users of minicabs. In Romford, we are lucky to have a flourishing taxi rank just by the market that enables the local community to use the services of what I consider to be one of the finest taxi fleets in the world. The distinctive purpose-built vehicles, with their extra space, distinctive shape, regulated fares, wheelchair accessibility and knowledge-trained drivers provide guaranteed safety for all who use them.

I support the main aims of the Bill, although I have some reservations about the detail. The regulation of minicabs in London is important and long overdue. It will improve standards of safety and service for all passengers, especially those who need protection, such as the elderly, women, tourists and the disabled.

Knowing that I would be seeking to speak in the debate, I have done some market testing this week, taking a black cab and a minicab. I took a black cab from the taxi rank opposite Romford station to my home. I could see how much the journey was costing me on the meter. The cab was comfortable, it had seat belts and safety catches on the doors and the taxi driver knew the route. It was a relaxing journey after a long day in this place.

I shall not identify the firm that I used for my minicab journey. When I was picked up, I could not get in on the pavement side because of a large container of—I presume—water on the floor in the back. I had to get into the car on the road side. The driver burped—perhaps I should repeat that; he burped—all the way to my destination. I was not sure whether it was a political comment. I was glad that it was a short journey. The driving may not have been dangerous, but it was fairly unpleasant. When we arrived, the driver said, "What do you think then—about two quid?"

That was not a huge sample for market testing, but it was consistent with my previous experiences. I used a black cab to get here this morning.

We must avoid introducing a watered-down registration scheme that would do little to protect customers and could harm the future of the licensed taxi trade by creating unfair competition. I am sure that all hon. Members want the licensed taxi trade to continue to play an important part in the everyday life of London. That is why it is important—I am glad that this is proposed—that there should be checks on minicab operators, as well as on a driver's criminal record, health, vehicle and topographical knowledge.

As the Government develop an integrated transport policy, taxis and minicabs will play an increasingly important role in our everyday lives. They can ensure that public transport provision is available in areas in which other transport providers cannot operate efficiently, as well as providing an effective alternative to the use of the private car. Taxis allow members of the travelling public to transfer between other transport termini and reach their destination having covered their entire journey by public transport.

Any legislation affecting personal transport services should be scrutinised carefully to determine its potential impact on the licensed taxi industry. The available market for the licensed taxi is relatively small. If demand decreased, manufacturers of the purpose-built, highly specialised vehicle would rapidly become unable to continue to produce it on a sound economic footing. That would soon lead to a terminal decline in the taxi industry.

The topographical training test must be introduced, based on local geographical knowledge. A map-reading test alone will not guarantee high enough levels of safety. The topographical training referred to in clause 13(3) should be a requirement, not at the discretion of the Secretary of State. The clause should say "will", not "may".

We have all been asked for directions by minicab drivers, or seen them flicking through their map book. That is not good enough. They must have a working knowledge of their local streets. That is already the situation in most of the large metropolitan areas outside London, where taxi and minicab drivers have to pass an identical topographical training test.

I also do not agree that, as minicabs are pre-booked, there is time for the driver to look up a pre-planned route. The commercial realities of minicab services dictate that that is not possible. When a minicab turns up, the driver usually asks, "Where to?" Drivers clearly do not have the time to plan journeys in advance—and what happens when passengers change their minds about where they want to go after making the booking? I often do not know exactly where I am going. If I have been invited to a meeting or a reception, I may have the address, but I often do not have a clue how to get there. I rely on the taxi driver to get me to my destination safely. As my family will testify, I have a very poor sense of direction and I do not believe that it is my job to plan a route for someone whom I am paying to get me to the right place at the right time.

I have travelled in minicabs when neither the driver nor I had a clue where we were. We would not accept that from a train driver: he could not say, "I think you turn left at Watford and then take the first right." We would be miffed if a black cab driver did not know the route. So why should we accept that standard from minicab drivers? The large licensed radio taxi circuits operate almost identically, dispatching the nearest cab a few minutes before the pick-up time. There can be no justification for not introducing similar standards for both groups.

Sambrook Research International conducted independent market research in 1994 into the operational behaviour of private hire companies. The survey revealed that 70 to 80 per cent. of booking calls to minicab companies requested a car as soon as possible. Almost all minicab companies stated that they allocated their drivers to a job within less than half an hour of the pick-up time. In fact, many claimed to allocate journeys within 10 to 15 minutes of pick-up, depending on which driver was in the area. That empirical evidence strongly suggests that a minicab driver must have local topographical knowledge and should not rely on his ability to read maps.

I wish to refer briefly to the operation of licensing and testing procedures for minicabs and taxis. On a recent visit to the operation centre of Computercab, London's biggest licensed radio taxi circuit, with more than 2,000 drivers—many of whom are my constituents—I was amazed to learn that taxi drivers are still tested for their knowledge on the basis of a one-to-one oral examination. That means that the process is very slow and drivers must wait a long time for appointments. As a result, growth in the licensed taxi industry has been impeded. It is one of the reasons why people cannot find enough taxis on the street and must resort to using minicabs.

During my visit to Computercab, I saw a demonstration of some computer software that could revolutionise the industry. It will allow geographical knowledge to be tested by using interactive computer screens. It is impressive technology and I am sure that it offers one solution to the problem of testing both taxi and minicab drivers in the future. Such tests would be efficient, rigorous and fair and would not compromise standards.

I urge the Minister and the right hon. Member for North-West Hampshire to look at the system and consider how it may be implemented by the Public Carriage Office. I join other hon. Members in making a personal plea for enforcement. Without the resources to tackle illegal minicabs and those who tout and ply for trade, the same problems will be with us even after the Bill is enacted. I hope that the resources from licence fees will be channelled into that area.

While much work clearly remains to be done, I give my support, on behalf of my constituents, to the intentions of the Bill as it passes through this and the other place. We hope to see the development of a much improved personal transport service that will assist the Government in meeting the aims of their integrated transport policy and will ensure a safer and better quality service for those who use minicabs.

Dr. Jenny Tonge (Richmond Park): I join other hon. Members in paying tribute to the right hon. Member for North-West Hampshire (Sir G. Young) and to the Suzy Lamplugh Trust. I am proud to inform the House that the trust is located in my constituency. Indeed, my hon. Friend the Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) is a trustee of that trust, as well as a sponsor of the Bill.

I would like to add to the comments that have already been made about Diana and Paul Lamplugh. They are a remarkably courageous couple and I am proud that they are my constituents. The tragic disappearance and loss of their daughter have led them to campaign tirelessly and relentlessly for the safety of my daughter and of all our daughters—and of our sons too. As Diana Lamplugh is always anxious to point out, the issue affects young men as well as young women. Young men can be attacked and abused, just as young women can. I hope that the House will join me in paying tribute to the Lamplughs and acknowledging the debt that we owe them.

Who uses minicabs? The House has dwelt on that subject this morning. We have heard about elderly people and young people. Hospital patients, too, use minicabs. A hospital patient in my constituency who had ordered a minicab to take her home was sent home in her nightie to an empty house. That was the fault of the hospital trust, but it shows how vulnerable minicab passengers can be.

The hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Efford) has said a lot about disabled people in wheelchairs, but most disabled people prefer minicabs because they find it easier to get in and out of them. Disabled people do not necessarily have a wheelchair and they need to be able to get in and out of the car easily, so they use minicabs.

Minicabs are used in the suburbs. My constituency is in the suburbs and people there rely a lot on minicabs. We must ask why that is so. One reason is that people do not feel safe on public transport late at night. There are no guards on the trains, no staff at the stations and no conductors on the buses, so people feel that they will be safer in a minicab.

The hon. Member for Eltham has now returned to the Chamber, and I must tell him that drivers of black cabs often refuse to go to the suburbs. The one time that I was verbally abused by such a driver was when I asked to be taken to that distant place, Kew Gardens. He said it would take him all night and he did not want to take me there. I ask the hon. Member for Eltham to put his own house in order and tell black cab drivers that they are their own worst enemies. If they want to defend their business against minicabs they must ensure that they give the best service to, and treat with the utmost courtesy, the people who want to use their taxis in the suburbs.

Mr. Efford: I take the point. I am sure that everyone has their own examples of such experiences with London taxi drivers. The six-mile limit was introduced to protect the horses, but there seems to be no limit to protect the working day of a licensed taxi driver. If at the end of a driver's working day he is asked to travel more than six miles in the opposite direction from the place in which he will finish work and go home, it causes him great stress by adding hours to his working day. We must consider the fatigue of the driver as well as the desire of the passenger.

Dr. Tonge: I thank the hon. Gentleman for making that point, because I had intended to talk about that in connection with one of my great worries about the minicab drivers I have come across. I am sure we all have the experience of finding out that many minicab drivers have other jobs during the day. There seem to be no regulations governing how long they can work. They may work hard during the day at one job and become minicab drivers at night. That is not safe either for the driver or for the public, and I thank the hon. Gentleman for raising the subject.

I speak as a parent with three children—now grown-up, thank goodness—who had many hilarious years when they were teenagers trying to get them home safely at night. I speak also as a doctor in women's services, who has counselled young women who have had terrible experiences. It is sad to say that, in my clinical experience, I have seen many such women who have had bad experiences in minicabs. This is the way I would describe the scenario: "It's very late, and mum and dad have threatened you with I don't know what if you don't get home; you phone a number which may be on one of those cards dropped through the door, or which a friend may have; you go and wait outside, because you don't want to disturb your friend's mum and dad; you wait outside on the pavement so the driver doesn't have to knock on the door, but you are then prey to anyone who claims to be a minicab driver."

I have had rambling tours of the countryside around Elstree studios when minicab drivers have not known the way. However, my best experience has been caused by the fact that the numbering of my road in Kew is very bad and drivers can never find our house. Usually, when a minicab comes to pick me up to take me to Broadcasting house, for example, I go and stand outside on the pavement, swinging my bag—much to the consternation of my neighbours, who wonder what my new job as a Member of Parliament entails.

It is a dangerous situation. Recently, on the borders of my constituency, a young girl came out of a club and was picked up by what she thought was a minicab. She was taken to a side road and raped. That happened within the past seven days.

Once the Bill is enacted, we must have a publicity drive to tell people that minicabs must be licensed and that people must check on that. The polling I have done of young, elderly and disabled people suggests that people already think that minicabs are licensed. They think that because cabs are licensed in other cities, they are somehow the same as black cabs and are quite safe. We know that that is not true. Once the Bill is enacted, we need sufficient publicity to alert people to the fact that they must check that proper licensing has taken place.

In conclusion, we know that the Bill has tremendous support. The National Council of Women, London First, the London Private Hire Car Association, organisations for the disabled and the aged, doctors, teachers, youth workers, Members of Parliament and—most of all—parents desperately want the Bill to become law. I hope that the Bill will have a safe passage with no dissent.

Mr. Barry Gardiner (Brent, North): Many points have been made during the debate, and one of the hazards of being called later in a debate is that one must scrap much of one's speech. I should like to pay particular tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Eltham (Mr. Efford). As a licensed cab driver, he not only contributed much valuable information, but proved one point—in a long speech of almost an hour—which no other hon. Member could have proved; that whenever one finds oneself in a confined space with a cabbie, it is the devil's own job to get him to stop talking.

This is the age of jet aircraft, when one airport looks very much like another and one city looks very much like another—they all have their McDonald's and their Benetton. Prior to 1997, I was engaged in a job that took me to many cities throughout the world. The one thing that always helped me to tell which city I was in was the cab or taxi that I took.

In one south Italian city, I took a cab from the docks and asked to be taken to the airport—a journey of some seven miles in a south-westerly direction. I sat in the back of the cab with the map on my lap, watched and traced the journey as we veered round 180 degrees and ended up three miles north-west of where we had started. As we passed that city's famous football stadium, where Maradona was playing at the time, I shouted to the driver to stop and, to cries of, "What's the problem?" I pointed out on the map our start point, our supposed destination at the airport and our present position. We returned to the dock, zeroed the clock and followed the more direct route to the airport.

I have been the scourge of cab drivers in St. Petersburg, New York, Athens, Naples and Barcelona. I have come to know most of the tricks that they exercise on punters: the broken meter; the "times two"; picking up an extra passenger on the way; the picture postcard carefully, if not tastefully, positioned in front of the meter; and, the road closure, that "wasn't there this morning, honestly". It has been a relief to me to return to London and to the black cab—to quality, reliability and safety.

The Bill would lessen the gaps between black cabs and private hire vehicles on those essential points of quality, reliability and safety. I shall focus on safety and reliability. It has been said that in London alone of all our cities a person can finish off a prison sentence for rape in the morning, sign on where there is a sign saying "Drivers wanted" in the afternoon and be driving a woman home unaccompanied late at night. That is a disgrace.

I welcome the fact that clause 13(2) will insist that private hire vehicle drivers must be licensed as "fit and proper" persons. The hon. and learned Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) said, "Let us not smear all minicab drivers." The Bill is about ensuring that the proper regulations that everyone would expect to be in place are in place. I also welcome clause 14(3), which insists that drivers must wear their badge in a prominent position so that they can be clearly identified by their passengers.

Reliability is not just about the cars themselves: it is about the extent to which passengers can rely on getting expeditiously from A to B. Clause 7(2) makes a licence dependent on a vehicle being suitable and safe. I urge the House to consider amending clause 13(3) so that it says that the Secretary of State "will"—rather than "may"—require applicants to show relevant topographical skills, so that a passenger can be sure that he or she will complete the journey in due time.

Most minicab companies and drivers in this city are hard-working professional business people, who serve thousands of Londoners every day. That is why reputable minicab firms welcome the Bill, as do I. I congratulate its promoter and I am sure that, with the Government's backing, it will become law.

Mr. Roger Casale (Wimbledon): I apologise for the fact that I was not here to hear earlier contributions. I wish that I could tell the House that that was because I could not find a licensed minicab, but it was not.

My constituency, in outer London, has several reputable minicab firms that provide employment and make a valuable contribution to meeting local transport needs. We are also fortunate in Wimbledon to be served by a fleet of black cabs operating from the new forecourt of Wimbledon station, but as we are an outer London district, those cabs can in practice service only one kind of journey, taking people from the town centre back to their nearby homes.

Despite the relatively good provision of public transport, including an important new bus route through Cannon hill and Morden, set up at the instigation of Merton's Labour council, and the Merton-Croydon tram link, now well under way, many of my constituents rely heavily on the local minicab service, from time to time, to get around town. That is especially the case for elderly people and those without a car, but it is also true of many who travel for business purposes, to other areas of London or to Gatwick or Heathrow, and prefer to leave their car at home.

This morning, I spoke to Merton council's head of environmental services, who reinforced my view that minicabs can provide a service over and above that of black cabs in our area, but had many concerns about safety and insurance. The council does not use minicabs at the moment, but it might if they were licensed. The head of environmental services made the point that minicabs are especially useful for elderly people, who may come into town to shop by bus but need a cab to get home.

The Merton voluntary services council, which is considering setting up a car pool and frequently needs minicabs, has many concerns about the safety of vehicles, which often lack wing mirrors and seat belts, and about the safety of women, who often feel vulnerable and harassed as a result of remarks made by unlicensed drivers.

Demand for and supply of minicab services locally are evidenced by the number of business cards from minicab firms that come through our letter boxes each week. Generally, the only information that can be gleaned from the card is the name of the firm and a contact number. The cards may get pinned up on the kitchen notice board in case of emergency, but as one dials the number, how often do the following thoughts spring to mind? Have the drivers been vetted? Will the driver be suitably qualified? What if the driver does not know the road that I want to go to? I am in a hurry, but will the driver know the best route? Will the car be safe and suitable for carrying members of the public? Will it have been regularly serviced and properly maintained? Who is coming to pick me up?

I understand from the local police that many unlicensed minicabs are used by burglars to get away with their loot from the scene of the crime. Is the driver trustworthy? Will the driver be reckless? Will I be harassed? Will I get to my destination in time? How much will the journey cost?

One word added to the business cards could answer those questions and allay many of the fears and anxieties that frequently prevent people who would prefer to use a private hire vehicle from picking up the phone. The word is "licensed". That is the change that the Bill will make, and that is why I support it.

A further reason for using minicabs is that they are sometimes more cost-effective than black cabs. Why should we accept that those who cannot afford a black cab and who use a minicab instead should have less assurance and safety?

The safety aspect is central to this debate. As the Automobile Association found in a recent survey, taxis are most frequently used in London for leisure trips, especially at evenings and weekends to go to and return from social events. While local minicab firms known to the user are seen as a safe option to get to a destination, returning in a black cab is often seen as a safer alternative, especially by women.

One respondent to the AA survey commented that, in the case of a problem with a black cab, all one had to do was take the driver's number and go to Penton street, and the driver could lose his living. With a four-year waiting list for green badges, few drivers will take a chance. The minicab driver or operator is not in the same position. The risks are all on the side of the person making the journey, and many cannot afford to take that chance.

Sometimes one cannot procure a black cab. I found myself in that predicament—as, I am sure, have many other hon. Members—one night before Christmas, when, with my wife and our baby daughter, I waited from 11 pm to 1 am for a black cab outside the House. Eventually, I called a minicab company in Wimbledon, one of those drivers agreed to come and pick us up from Westminster, but only after I had used all my powers of persuasion to convince them that I really was the Member of Parliament for Wimbledon and needed a reliable rescue operation to get my family home.

London as a whole, and my constituents in particular, need a safe licensed minicab service on which they can rely to supplement the black cab service; to discourage them from using their cars in town; and to provide security and convenience when they go about their daily business. Minicabs are clearly needed to supplement black cabs, whose drivers will continue to have the sole right to ply for trade on the streets or the ranks.

The case for minicabs to be regulated is compelling. Licensing will make travel in and around London safer, and will make enforcement and the outlawing of rogue traders easier to police. Incidentally, the London borough of Merton has told me that it would prefer the licensing to be carried out by the Public Carriage Office and not imposed as an additional duty on local authorities. The regulation of the minicab trade will encourage many to use minicabs in combination with public transport, so it will contribute to the Government's plans to deliver an integrated transport strategy to our capital city, as part of our wider plans for a Greater London authority. I commend the Bill to the House.

1.2 pm

The Minister for Transport in London (Ms Glenda Jackson): I may say with some justification that this debate has shown the House at its best, because we have heard cross-party support for the Bill introduced by the right hon. Member for North-West Hampshire (Sir G. Young) from right hon. and hon. Members, and that support is also shown by the sponsors of his Bill. I am delighted to have the opportunity to support the Bill on behalf of the Government.

The right hon. Member for North-West Hampshire was justifiably generous about the support that his Bill has received from many respected organisations.

He mentioned Age Concern, RADAR, the police and the Suzy Lamplugh Trust. I also wish to pay tribute to all the organisations that the right hon. Gentleman mentioned for the way in which they have for many years campaigned to right this wrong and remove an anomaly that affects London and Londoners.

As many right hon. and hon. Members have pointed out, Londoners exclusively, of residents in our cities, are vulnerable to people who claim to be minicab drivers, but who might have different motives for picking us up in their cars. Many hon. Members have related today examples of the genuine dangers that face us all unless the Bill reaches the statute book.

The right hon. Member for North-West Hampshire mentioned the conference under the auspices of the Suzy Lamplugh Trust at Stringfellows. He disclaimed any previous knowledge of the interior of that establishment, and I entirely believe him, although there was a ribald response from some hon. Members. The right hon. Gentleman told us how the victim of a particularly horrific incident, a woman called Sally, courageously described the dreadful experience that she had undergone in a minicab. Other speakers have described similar incidents.

Three strands have run through today's debate. It is clear that all hon. Members regard topographical knowledge, enforcement and the vetting of drivers, operators and vehicles as the bedrock of the legislation that is needed. The people of London, and, as many hon. Members pointed out, visitors as well—tourists who come to our great capital city—must be assured that the vehicles that carry them are safe, and that they will not be the victims of brutal physical attack.

Those points were made by my hon. Friend the Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) and by the right hon. Member for Cities of London and Westminster (Mr. Brooke), in their own individual styles. The right hon. Gentleman drew attention to a problem that could make people particularly vulnerable if the Bill is not passed. He referred to contracts—he admitted that this was based on allegation—for the carriage of children in one instance, and of newly recovered hospital patients in another. In the first instance, the driver had allegedly served a sentence for paedophilia; in the second, the driver was known to have served time in prison for the criminal offences of burglary and brutal assault.

The hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Brake) referred to the requirement for some topographical knowledge. My hon. Friend the Member for Streatham (Mr. Hill), speaking with all the weight and gravitas of one who was a member of the Transport Select Committee when it examined the issue, pointed out—as did other hon. Members—that the minicab trade itself wants the legislation. It is prominent in wanting the cowboys, as my hon. Friend the Member for Streatham called them, to be expelled. My hon. Friend also made the point about topographical knowledge.

I do not think that any hon. Member has suggested that every minicab driver is at heart a criminal, and it would be quite wrong to suggest that. Most drivers are safe, reliable and honest. The Bill is intended to ensure that they are not victims of such allegations; otherwise, the reputation of the whole cab trade—minicabs and black cabs—could be diminished as a result of elements that are clearly criminal.

The hon. Member for Croydon, South (Mr. Ottaway) made the point that I have just made, although probably more succinctly. He said that most minicabs were safe, but he also drew attention to the potential dangers, and gave a graphic example of a young doctor who was threatened. He, too, paid tribute to the black cab trade—not just the London Taxi Board, which supports the Bill. Like other speakers, he drew attention to the enormous benefit that the black cab provides not only for those who travel in it, but for the whole image of London as a capital city. That tribute was echoed by my hon. Friend the Member for Barking (Ms Hodge), who related a particularly dangerous incident stemming from personal knowledge and involving a person who had worked for her. My hon. Friend again underlined the fact that the Bill poses no threat whatever to the black cab trade.

There were tributes by the hon. and learned Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier), and in support of the Bill hon. Members suggested how to assure passengers that, should the Bill become law, they can be confident of being in a licensed vehicle with a licensed driver. The hon. and learned Member suggested visible identification in cabs, so that passengers could be assured that the driver was duly licensed and checked.

My hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, North (Ms Perham) spoke about the requirement for some topographical knowledge, and about the resources that the Public Carriage Office would require if it is the licensing authority. She also mentioned enforcement and the issue of meters in minicabs, and underlined the fact that all hon. Members who have participated in the debate have examined the issue in some detail. All those who spoke had direct knowledge of the matter, and had thought about the licensing of minicabs. We are debating public safety, and people must be sure when they use the vehicles that they, the drivers and the operators are safe and reliable.

The hon. Member for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson) praised black cab drivers. I think that his contribution was the only one by a non-London Member. He related a story about one of his constituents. That constituent must be wealthy if he can afford to take a black cab from London to Alnwick. My hon. Friend the Member for Romford (Mrs. Gordon) made a salient point when she emphasised that taxis and minicabs are perceived by the Government as part of the public transport system. It is important for them to play a proper role in our integrated transport policy.

The hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) paid tribute to the Suzy Lamplugh Trust and to Diana Lamplugh, and her speech encapsulated the concerns not just of mothers but of all parents, grandparents and families about the potential dangers that are faced by loved ones out late at night. We must be absolutely reassured about how they will get home if they do not have private vehicles, and public transport is not available. The Government intend to change that. We know that there are inherent dangers in using minicabs in some circumstances.

It seems from his speech that my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North (Mr. Gardiner) has wide international experience of cabs. He spoke about the need for security and about the reliability of minicabs. My hon. Friend the Member for Wimbledon (Mr. Casale) also spoke about safety not only in the context of the driver but in terms of the vehicle.

[Ms Glenda Jackson]

It is a pleasure to congratulate the right hon. Member for North–West Hampshire not on the happy accident of winning fourth place in the ballot, but on taking the opportunity to present a Bill which the debate has shown to be worthy of support. I should also like to congratulate him on the hard work that he has put into bringing his Bill before the House today. I know how much trouble he has taken in preparing the way for it.

I am delighted that the Government were able to agree that parliamentary counsel should do the detailed drafting, although that by no means lifted the burden of excessive work from the right hon. Gentleman's shoulders. I know that he has been both dedicated and energetic in applying himself to the task. He was generous in paying tribute to my Department; I thank him for that, and I should also like to express my gratitude.

I was tempted to make—indeed, I toyed with the possibility of making—some minor party political pleasantries, but I have decided in the spirit of this morning's debate, with the clear cross-party co-operation that we have heard, not to do so. On mature reflection, I decided that they were rather feeble jokes, anyway. I have no doubt that the entire House is relieved—[Interruption.] I hear gratitude pounding in my ears from both sides of the House.

The Government support the Bill. We hope that it succeeds; if by mischance it should not, we shall seek to introduce legislation along the same lines ourselves as soon as parliamentary time permits. We support both the principle of the Bill and its provisions, on which the right hon. Gentleman has been in touch with us and on which he has taken full account of the responses to the consultation that the Government carried out in line with our manifesto commitment. If there should be those who hope that the Bill will fall—I do not believe that anyone of good would take such a view—I cannot, in all honesty, encourage them to think that it will have gone away; it will not.

As more than one hon. Member has said today, it is high time that the disgraceful—I believe that my hon. Friend the Member for Streatham used the word "scandalous"—anomaly of London minicab regulation, or lack of it, was remedied. The right hon. Member for North–West Hampshire described clearly and well how, in almost all the rest of the country, private hire vehicles are regulated, as are taxis. It is only in London, of all our cities, that the minicab trade is unregulated and unlicensed; as all hon. Members have made clear this morning, that must be put right, as a simple matter of public safety. We have, over the years, seen too many attacks upon vulnerable people, particularly women, to allow the present position to continue.

The right hon. Member's Bill seeks to put right the anomaly. In one way, I think that it is right not to overplay the significance of the measure; all the Bill seeks to do is to apply to London the basic system of regulation that already applies throughout the United Kingdom. That is important and necessary, but I do not believe that it will have the dramatic impact on the London taxi trade that has occasionally been suggested.

In saying that, however, I must go on to echo the praise that the right hon. Gentleman and many other hon. Members have this morning given to the London taxi trade for the responsible and sensible attitude that it has taken to the Bill. I am second to none in congratulating the trade on that.

Naturally, those interested in the Bill—I believe that that includes every hon. Member who has been present this morning—have asked for information on a number of points, including who will be the regulatory authority. I can confirm that, as and when the Bill becomes law, the Secretary of State intends to use the power in clause 24 to delegate his functions to the Metropolitan police and, in particular, to the Public Carriage Office. That will be widely recognised as sensible.

The PCO already regulates the London taxi trade, and is generally seen to do so carefully and fairly. It has experience and expertise in the subject, and it also has the right geographical coverage, being responsible for the whole of London. Any smaller unit within London might raise problems of cross-border discrepancies. I am glad to tell the House that the Metropolitan police have agreed to take on that task, and I am grateful to them, as I am sure are right hon. and hon. Members, for that agreement.

Looking to the slightly longer term, I think that it will probably be right for the regulatory function for both taxis and minicabs to pass to the proposed Greater London authority, perhaps by a transfer of the PCO itself. We shall be considering the legislation to establish the GLA with that in mind.

Enforcement has also been mentioned by more than one hon. Member. It was touched on by the right hon. Member for North–West Hampshire, and we all recognise its importance for any system of regulation. I am glad to confirm that the Metropolitan police envisage the establishment of a special unit to enforce the provisions of this Bill, should it become law—checking on licensed minicab operators and drivers, and their vehicles, to ensure that all the requirements of their licences are being fulfilled.

That unit may number about 20, although the precise figure needs to be worked out. It will have the various powers provided in this Bill. Minicab operators will know not only that they stand to be charged with the offences also provided for in the Bill, but that, if convicted, they will face not just a fine, but the loss of their licence, and thus their chance to work in the minicab trade. That is a sanction that has been lacking for far too long in London. The minicab enforcement unit would be financed from minicab licence fees, with no cross-subsidy from the taxi trade.

In addition, of course, it will remain the duty of all London police officers to enforce the law on taxis and minicabs. I know that the PCO will take steps to ensure that all officers are properly informed of the provisions of this Bill, should it become law.

I understand that the Metropolitan police are also considering the possibility of increasing the number of police officers specialising in minicab and taxi enforcement, drawing on licence fee income. Effective enforcement is in the interest of all reputable licence holders in the taxi or minicab trades, who cannot welcome unfair competition from those who try to practise outside the law.

We have also heard about topographical knowledge testing for minicab drivers. Again, it is an issue that hon. Members on both sides of the House highlighted as of great importance. I know that it is an important topic not only within but outside the House.

I would stress the significance of the express provision in clause 13(3) for knowledge testing. There is no such provision in any of the legislation dealing with London taxis, or with taxis or minicabs outside London. My hon. Friend the Member for Eltham (Mr. Efford) was correct to say that local authorities outside London may impose a knowledge test, but clause 13(3) is the first statutory requirement for topographical knowledge. It is a first, and it should be acknowledged as such.

Certainly the provision is in general terms. It provides that the Secretary of State "may" rather than "must" require applicants to show that they posses an appropriate knowledge of London,

"whether by taking a test or otherwise".

Those words were, I should stress, included after careful consideration. I believe that we must have the flexibility to deal with changed circumstances. Experience shows that it is not often that parliamentary time can be found to legislate for taxis and minicabs, and we are sadly aware of taxi and private hire vehicle provisions on the statute book that have not stood the test of time.

I believe that no apology is required for a flexible approach to the drafting of this Bill, but I can confirm that the Secretary of State will be applying the provisions of clause 13(3). New applicants for a minicab driver's licence will be required to show, by passing a test,

"that they possess an appropriate level of knowledge of London and of general topographical skills."

It would not be sensible for me to go into the detail of the precise nature of the test, as that must be for the Public Carriage Office not only to consider but to consult upon. There may well also be transitional arrangements—grandfather rights, in the jargon—for minicab drivers who can show that they have worked consistently in the trade for some appropriate period before the legislation comes into force. I stress that no driver will be exempt from a criminal record check. Nevertheless, the principle of application of clause 13(3) is clear.

I am also aware that there are anomalies or weaknesses in current law on taxis and private hire vehicles, not only for London but for elsewhere, and realise that legislative overhaul is long overdue. The House will realise that I can make no promises on when parliamentary time will be available. I assure the House, however, that the need for change is understood by the Government.

Many hon. Members have expressed concerns about whether the Public Carriage Office will have the necessary resources should the Bill be enacted. It is well recognised that the PCO will require more resources to perform minicab regulation effectively. The PCO will be ensuring that those resources are provided, and it has already started to review its requirement for extra staff and equipment. As the House will be aware, the PCO is the responsibility of the Metropolitan police. As I have already told the House, although I take a very close interest in the work of the PCO, the Metropolitan police are happy that responsibility for it should rest with them should the Bill become statute.

The principle is that licensing costs will be met by the minicab trade from licence fees. I reiterate that there is no suggestion that the taxi trade should pay for minicab licensing. Like many Labour Members, the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) mentioned the problem for taxi drivers of delays in taking the famous knowledge test. The issue was also mentioned by the right hon. Member for North–West Hampshire.

I agree with the right hon. Gentleman that that issue, concerning taxis, is separate from the issue of minicab regulation, which is a public safety issue. I confirm, however, that the Public Carriage Office is taking action to speed up knowledge testing, and I will ensure that its attention is drawn to today's debate.

The Public Carriage Office has recruited extra knowledge examiners, and the interval between tests has already been reduced. The PCO envisages recruiting more knowledge examining staff over and above the latest increase. It has also made changes in the system of knowledge testing, with initial written tests rather than a personal appearance. We hope that that change—with the new point system reflecting how well candidates perform at personal appearances—will reduce the load on knowledge examiners.

Hon. Members have mentioned the possibility of legislation enabling the Public Carriage Office to charge taxi and minicab applicants for sitting tests rather than to charge a fee only when the licence is issued. The effect of the current system is to place the cost of dealing with applications when a licence is not granted on those to whom a licence is granted. The Bill contains such a provision, in clause 20.

My hon. Friend the Member for Eltham particularly made the point that legislative overhaul of the law on taxis and private hire vehicles—not only in London but elsewhere—is long overdue. I repeat that I can make no promises of when parliamentary time will be available, but the need for change is well understood by the Government.

I trust that I have been able to assure hon. Members on their concerns. Like hon. Members who have spoken in this debate, I believe that the Bill is long overdue.

It would be entirely improper of me not to mention perhaps one of this debate's most important speeches, which was made by my hon. Friend the Member for Eltham. He brought not only direct personal experience of being a black cab driver but a family history of driving black cabs. It was a genuine privilege to be the beneficiaries—as hon. Members were—of his wealth of detailed knowledge. His argument for the Bill's reaching the statute book was probably as cogent and convincing as any that could be made. His knowledge of what is necessary to ensure the safety of passengers is consummate, and I am grateful to him. I am sure that the right hon. Member for North–West Hampshire is also grateful that someone with such experience should so warmly endorse the Bill.

The arguments offered today by hon. Members of all parties underlined time and again the fact that the Bill is important for public safety, that it has been overlong in arriving, and that we are grateful to the right hon. Member for North–West Hampshire for introducing it. Should it find its way on to the statute book, not only the people of London but those who visit our great capital city will have cause to be grateful to him. I strongly hope that the House will ensure that it receives a Second Reading.

1.30 pm

Sir George Young: With the leave of the House, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The Minister has wound up the debate, so I shall not seek to do so, but I wish to make three brief points. First, I thank all hon. Members who have participated in the debate for supporting the Bill.

[Sir George Young]

The proposition before the House is that the Bill should have a Second Reading. There has been no serious dissent from that principle, so I hope that it may have an unopposed Second Reading.

Secondly, several hon. Members pointed out where they thought the Bill might be improved. There was particular focus on the word "shall" rather than "may", but points were also made about taxi meters and advertisements. I will reflect on those points, hold discussions with appropriate parties, and see whether the Bill might be improved, probably in another place rather than here.

Thirdly, I must mention the speech by the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Efford). It was an interesting speech, in which he brought to bear on the Bill his extensive knowledge of the taxi industry. He has a vision of a unified industry with common standards for minicabs and taxis.

If that is where we end up, my Bill is an important first step. It will bring minicabs within the legislative framework; it will provide that the PCO shall deal with minicabs and taxis; and it will provide for a knowledge test. Indirectly, it will reduce the difference between black cab and minicab drivers' tariffs, for the reasons outlined by my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson), in that we will knock out the irresponsible minority who can under-price because they are not playing the game.

Wherever we are going, the Bill is a first step on that path. Against that background, I hope that it may now proceed on its way.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill read a Second time.

Motion made, and Question put forthwith, pursuant to Standing Order No. 63 (Committal of Bills),

That the Bill be committed to a Committee of the whole House.—[Sir George Young.]

Question agreed to.

Committee on Friday 6 February.

Cold Weather Payments (Wind Chill Factor) Bill

Order for Second Reading read.

1.32 pm

Mr. Nigel Evans (Ribble Valley): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

I have great pleasure in introducing the Bill. I congratulate my right hon. Friend the Member for North-West Hampshire (Sir G. Young) on successfully leading the Private Hire Vehicles (London) Bill to its Committee stage. I wish it a speedy passage on to the statute book.

I was successful last year and came eighth in the ballot for private Members' Bills. My Bill, which dealt with the DNA testing of prisoners already convicted and in prison, passed all its stages in the House in one day. I hope that I am going to be as successful now, and that this Bill does the same. I see no problem with that. I shall be shocked if the Minister allows that but, in view of some of the things that were said 12 months ago, I ought not to be.

I am grateful to pensioners and pensioner organisations for their supporting the Bill and writing to hon. Members. I understand that some of them are lobbying hon. Members today. I also pay tribute to Age Concern for its tireless support of legislation now and in previous years, particularly when the hon. Member for Preston (Audrey Wise) introduced her Bill 12 months ago.

We have all heard about the woman found dead from hypothermia in her home, about elderly people being too scared of getting into debt and not turning their heating up, or not turning it on, and about people having to choose between heating their homes and eating. Every winter, the tabloid newspapers carry such stories. In Scotland, The Press and Journal reported that there was no cold comfort for the old and the poor and that blizzards failed to trigger payments. We read such stories year in, year out.

Among elderly people, there is a massive number of excess winter deaths. In 1996-97, 45,600 more elderly people died during the winter than during other seasons. In 1996, 356 elderly people died of hypothermia in England and Wales. I asked the Library of the House of Commons to find out the temperatures around the country at noon today. I picked places at random and included Ribble Valley for good measure, as it is my constituency. To my amazement, Ribble Valley is the coldest of the areas that I chose, at 1 deg Celsius. The temperature in Llanelli is 2 deg, in Glasgow, amazingly, it is 8 deg; it is 4 deg in the Orkneys, and in Poole, where one would expect it to be warmer, the temperature is 4 deg. There is a clear disparity between temperatures in the north of Britain. In London, the temperature is 3 deg, and we know how cold it is outside today.

I have visited the homes of elderly people, as I am sure that all hon. Members have done, and experienced how cold they are. Some senior citizens live in just one room, which they heat. They do not heat other rooms in order to save money. Many belong to a generation that is very careful with money. They do not want to get into debt, so they do not heat their homes unless they can afford to do so and they do not switch on the heating unless they find it absolutely necessary. Pensioners need our support. They need cold weather payments to be based on a more realistic measure of the temperature.

The Labour party recognised that need before the election, but not now. Now is the crunch time for the Government either to back the Bill and honour the commitments that they made 12 months ago or to destroy my Bill and betray the pensioners.

The Home Secretary is touring the country trying to restore people's faith in the Government and politicians. It is a bit rich for the Home Secretary to try to restore faith in politicians if his party, having said one thing to the pensioners 12 months ago, does not support the measure in the House today. If they stop the Bill making progress, the Home Secretary will have a very tough battle to restore credibility and the faith of pensioners especially.

Mr. Nick St. Aubyn (Guildford): Does my hon. Friend agree that, having betrayed pensioners at other income levels with taxes on private health insurance and pensions in general, it would be the biggest and most cynical betrayal of all for the Government to deny and turn their back on the promises that they made to those least well off?

Mr. Evans: I agree. There is no sector of the population that the Government have not attacked, including students. Before the election, they said that they were the friends of students, but as soon as they got into government, they introduced fees. It is the same with pensioners at all income levels.

The Bill is intended to help the poorest sector of the population living in the coldest parts of the country.

Mr. Peter Atkinson (Hexham): Does my hon. Friend accept that, if the Bill does not proceed, the news will be greeted with considerable anger by people in the north-east of England, where the wind chill factor makes the temperature much colder? There has been a strong campaign in the local media in favour of the proposal.

Mr. Evans: Yes, of course I agree. We cannot be ignorant of the concept of wind chill any longer because it is mentioned in weather forecasts time and again. We hear stories of the freezing temperatures in the United States and Canada. People are familiar with the use of wind chill in calculating temperatures. Not just people in the north-east, but people in Scotland, Wales and all parts of the United Kingdom are affected when it gets very cold. We are trying to help the poorest pensioners in those areas.

Mr. David Ruffley (Bury St. Edmunds): Does my hon. Friend accept that the problem of wind chill is also well understood in East Anglia? That is why so many of my constituents have backed the Bill in the local press. He should be aware of the Siberian winds that blow across the North sea, affecting many of my constituents in Bury St. Edmunds.

Mr. Evans: I welcome the support that my hon. Friend gave the Bill as soon as he heard about it. Siberian winds will blow not just through his constituency, but through the House if the Government decide not to give proper attention to the measure, which, as the Opposition, they thought so important when the hon. Member for Preston introduced it just 12 months ago.

Mr. Edward Garnier (Harborough): Will my hon. Friend absolve from criticism the four Labour Members who have put their names to the Bill?

Mr. Evans: I shall refer to the all-party support for the Bill. It had all-party support in the House last time as well. I pay particular tribute to Sir Andrew Bowden, who no longer sits in the House. I was in the Chamber when the Bill was debated 12 months ago. Sir Andrew suggested a constructive initiative with Labour Members to take the measure forward. We wanted to draw up a letter to the leaders of the main political parties so that they could make a commitment before the election that whoever was elected would introduce a measure to take the wind chill factor into account for cold weather payments. He is sadly missed in the House.

The Bill is designed to do a specific job. It is a simple and effective measure that will put an end to the current sad state of affairs. The present system of cold weather payments works well up to a point. It is designed to give extra help to those who qualify when the temperature is at or drops below 0 deg Celsius for seven days. When that happens, those eligible receive £8.50. In 1996–97, payments under the scheme amounted to just over £42 million. The payments are made automatically to those who qualify. The Benefits Agency is obliged to announce it through the local media. The system is easy and the money quickly reaches those to whom it is targeted—the poorest pensioners.

Because payments are made quickly, fuel bills can be paid on time. The Government's one-off payments do not allow for that. That is important to many elderly people, who are being disadvantaged by the lateness of the proposed payments. I urge the Government to ensure that the payments are hurried through the system, because otherwise it will be spring before the money arrives for some. That will be far too late for many pensioners who rely on it.

Although the system works well in general, it has failings. For example, despite drifting snow and gales in Scotland over the past few weeks, the Benefits Agency has confirmed that not a single region has qualified for cold weather payments. That shows that the system needs finer tuning to ensure that all pensioners and others who qualify have enough heat to keep warm without having to take any food off their table.

This Bill is very similar to legislation that the hon. Member for Preston introduced last year. Supporters of the measure include the hon. Lady—she is at least consistent in her support for it—my hon. Friends the Members for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson), and for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Ruffley)—both of whom are in their places—my hon. Friends the Members for Surrey Heath (Mr. Hawkins), and for Cheadle (Mr. Day), and my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier), who is also in his place. Other supporters include the hon. Members for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore), for Ipswich (Mr. Cann), for Swansea, East (Mr. Anderson), and for Moray (Mrs. Ewing), and the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell). [Interruption.] I thank my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson) for correcting me. My Scottish pronunciation is not as it should be. I am travelling to Edinburgh tonight, Mr. Deputy Speaker, so I shall be able to tell you what the temperatures are there—even if I cannot pronounce the Scottish place names.

I thank those hon. Members for the all-party support that they have given to the Bill. It is important to recognise that support for the legislation has come from all parts of the country, with temperatures that may differ greatly.

There is no technical reason why the system should not be implemented. It is a simple measure that would put little extra strain on the public purse. Age Concern has examined the statistics for the past three years and has estimated that the proposal would add about an extra £8 million a year—or 0.008 per cent.—to the total social security budget of about £100 billion. However, it appears that the Government will not support the legislation.

Where are those Labour Members—many of whom are now members of the Government—who foretold doom and destruction if the measure were not introduced by the previous Conservative Government? In a press release of 26 December, the Secretary of State for Social Security declared—just as she did about bovine spongiform encephalopathy—in melodramatic terms:

"the stark truth is that Britain's poorest pensioners may have to choose between heating and eating."

As late as 13 January this year, the Under-Secretary of State for Social Security, the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham)—who is in his place—wrote:

"we are not prepared to allow another winter to go by, when pensioners are fearful of turning up their heating because they do not know whether they will get the help they need with their fuel bills."

At least the hon. Gentleman did not sign the early-day motion of 21 November 1996, which enjoyed all-party support. Many Labour Members, who are now Ministers, supported that early-day motion, including the hon. Members for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley), for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths), for Lewisham, East (Ms Prentice) and for Wallasey (Angela Eagle). I repeat: where are they today? Some 176 hon. Members signed that early-day motion on 21 November 1996, yet many of them are not present today. It is important to recall the text of that motion. It stated:

"That this House expresses concern at the ineffectiveness of the cold weather payments system in helping older people to meet fuel bills in winter; notes that the Government has increased the number of weather stations used to calculate cold weather payments from 55 to 70; considers that this, whilst welcome, is an inadequate response; and calls upon the Government to agree to the amendment of the cold weather payments system, as proposed in the Cold Weather Payments (Windchill Factor) Bill, so that the windchill can be taken into account, and also to review how to improve the system for the benefit of Britain's oldest, poorest and coldest pensioners."

I quote the text of that motion because I know the sorts of responses that I shall hear from the Government Benches today regarding the support that the Government have announced already for pensioners. I shall leave it to the Minister to outline that support, which we have discussed in the past. Such assistance is welcome.

However, the early-day motion makes the point that the current system of cold weather payments is not as effective as it could be. In announcing support over two years, the Government have not said that they will suspend cold weather payments. As I understand it, that system will remain in place. If the trigger mechanism is activated, those who are eligible will receive a payment of £8.50. We accept that cold weather payments are necessary in order to assist the poorest pensioners in the coldest areas. However, I contend that this legislation would allow cold weather payments to kick in earlier for the poorest pensioners living in the coldest parts of the country. That is all that we are asking for.

I am sure that the Minister will soon be talking about the support that the Government have given to pensioners. However, I understand that that will be for a fixed two-year period. After the two years, there is no security or long-term planning, and pensioners do not know whether they will still get the support.

What "equality" means for the poorest pensioners living on income support is that the support that the Government have already announced will go to all pensioners, irrespective of where they live. It will be paid equally to pensioners throughout the country. That does not recognise the needs of the poorest pensioners living in the coldest parts of the United Kingdom.

My measure would simply ensure that, irrespective of the extra support, when the cold weather payments come in, they will do so a little more quickly. That is why I believe that my measure is so essential.

I shall finish now because I know that others want to contribute, and I welcome that. I can see the hon. Member for Preston in her place, and I congratulate her on the work that she did 12 months ago in raising the issue. I am delighted to see her here today.

We do not need the Minister to say either that there is no way in which he will even touch the Bill, or that it will go through as it is. He may say that improvements could be made. What we seek today from the Minister is a commitment that will keep faith with what was said by Members belonging to his own party before the general election, because they felt that the subject was so important.

The subject was raised by the hon. Member for Preston and debated fully in the House by a number of Labour Members in opposition. The early-day motion was tabled, too, and many pensioners were persuaded to support Labour at the general election, thinking that, when the Labour party became the Government, such a measure would be introduced.

Six or seven months on, I should have thought that the Government would have taken up such a measure as a matter of urgency, so that pensioners this winter could be assured that, if the temperature dropped below a certain level, the cold weather payments would be triggered earlier. I plead with the Minister on behalf of all the pensioners on income support throughout the country, who will listen carefully to what he says today. Please give them the support that they were promised 12 months ago.

Dr. Brian Iddon (Bolton, South-East): It is a sad sign of the times when a Government have to consider such a measure to help our less well-off citizens keep warm in their own homes. I am all in favour of any measure that would get people out of the terrible fuel poverty that exists in this country. However, I believe that there are far more common-sense measures than the complicated scheme that the Bill would introduce.

Surely the real way to help pensioners and others to keep warm, as we should in a civilised society, is to ensure that their houses are warm, dry and well insulated and that they are financially well provided for, and can meet their fuel bills.

In that respect, I remind the hon. Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) that the Government have set up a major inquiry into the value of current pensions. I remind him also that the previous Administration, run by his party, decoupled pensions from wages and coupled them instead with prices.

For a single pensioner, that has reduced the real value of the pension by an average of £22 a week

Mr. Oliver Heald (North-East Hertfordshire) rose—

Mr. St. Aubyn rose—

Mr. Ruffley: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Dr. Iddon: In a moment.

There lies the crux of the problem. If the previous Government had not got us into that situation, the hon. Member for Ribble Valley would not have had to introduce his complicated measure.

Mr. Heald: Aside from his weasel words—Labour is not proposing to reintroduce the earnings link—will the hon. Gentleman answer this question? If the heating of a home is to be paid for, so that it becomes the kind of warm home about which he talks, must not more money be spent on a home exposed to cold winds and where there is a high wind chill factor than on other homes? That is the purpose of the Bill—why will he not support it?

Dr. Iddon: More common-sense measures could be taken to get people out of fuel poverty across the country, including in the areas to which the hon. Gentleman referred.

When I was the chair of housing at a local authority—I held that post for 10 years, taking over in 1986—I recognised the problem, and it was not as bad then as it is now. I recognised that many people did not have decent heating systems, so we decided to introduce an affordable—modular—heating scheme for all 26,000 council tenants in my borough. That was done extremely quickly so that every house in the public sector was given warmth.

We recognised also that the exterior fabric of the houses was in a poor condition, and our second major programme was to abandon internal refurbishment for a while to concentrate on externally refurbishing every council house, with priority given to double glazing. Indeed, we even set up our own UPVC double glazing plant. That programme is almost finished and fuel bills have gone down greatly for the people who have benefited from those two major schemes.

By reducing housing expenditure across the public and private sectors, the previous Government severely damaged attempts by people to keep warm because the fabric of houses deteriorated dreadfully. In my borough, the amount of money available to spend on housing was cut by the previous Administration by almost 70 per cent. That was one of the problems that they caused. It is remarkable that a member of the previous Administration is proposing to tinker with an existing Act in such a minor way, when they created the major problems in the first place.

Mr. St. Aubyn: Is not it a fact that targeted benefits can help those most in need, and that the Bill proposes a targeted benefit? Is it not a fact also that, in areas such as the hon. Gentleman's, council housing expenditure may have been reduced, but expenditure by the Housing Corporation and local housing associations grew substantially under the previous Government?

Dr. Iddon: It did not grow to the extent that it replaced the devastating cuts in expenditure in the public sector in particular, and in other sectors. Overall, the previous Administration devastated housing in this country. The sole reason why I came to Westminster was that, when I was the chair of housing in a local authority under the previous Administration, I clearly saw that I could do nothing else for the borough of Bolton—Westminster was the only place to get action by arguing for housing to be moved up the agenda.

This Government have done something that previous chairs of housing like me asked the previous Administration to do over many, many years—10 years in my case, but the 18 years of the previous Administration for others. The previous Government refused to release capital receipts from the sale of council houses—purely because of political dogma—and local authorities could not take measures to prevent the fuel poverty about which we are talking. I am pleased that, over the next two years, the Government will allow £800 million of capital receipts to be put into the market to allow for the introduction of common-sense measures to reduce fuel poverty by making homes warm and well insulated.

Mr. Evans: It is absolutely right to insulate homes to conserve energy, and to keep pensioners warm. However, how many pensioners is the hon. Gentleman prepared to see die over the next several years—[HON. MEMBERS: "Shame."] That is what Labour Members were saying when they were in opposition. How many more pensioners will die in the next five years before something is done? The Bill is a short-term measure and will target support on the poorest pensioners in the coldest parts of the country. The measure about which the hon. Gentleman talks is long term and will take 20 or 30 years.

Dr. Iddon: That is a shameful question and I shall turn it on its head and ask the hon. Gentleman how many pensioners died under the previous Administration because of their policies.

The Government have also reduced value added tax on fuel, a fact which is well known and has been well publicised. It is a shame that we were not able to reduce it to zero. We could take it only to 5 per cent. because of European regulations. Who put the VAT on fuel in the first place and who would have increased it to 17.5 per cent. if they had now been in government instead of Labour?

Mr. St. Aubyn rose—

Dr. Iddon: I shall not give way, as I want to finish my remarks and time is short.

[Dr. Iddon]

I must also mention the home energy efficiency scheme which, admittedly, was introduced by the previous Administration. However, soon after its introduction that Administration severely cut the money available for the scheme. This Government are increasing it again and have substantially reduced the VAT on energy-saving materials for that scheme, which will allow a large number of homes to be insulated. Indeed, 40,000 homes will benefit from the VAT reductions.

I have tabled a parliamentary question, which I hope will be taken seriously. I have asked the relevant Minister if the Government will consider extending the reduction on VAT for energy-saving materials beyond the existing Government schemes, so that all senior citizens can benefit.

This Government have also delivered extra money, far in excess of the amount that the Bill would deliver, by sending £50 to pensioners on income support, which they are receiving this January. Other pensioners will benefit to a lesser extent by the end of March. That is paying out more to pensioners than this small tinkering with an existing measure would ever do. The money is being paid automatically and without the need for pensioners to make claims.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): Although I agree with my hon. Friend on home insulation and the money that has been paid to enable people to keep warm during the winter, does he accept that the wind chill factor must still be taken seriously? Every home, whether insulated or not, is obviously adversely affected in a cold area with a high wind blowing. Therefore, the residents of such homes ought to get a higher benefit to pay for the extra heating costs.

Dr. Iddon: I accept that argument. The Government are not abandoning the original cold weather payments Act. I look forward to the day when even that Act will be redundant because pensioners do not need that money.

Standing charges on fuel bills are a substantial part of a pensioner's bill. They hit the poorest far harder than richer people. I urge the Government to consider the current level of standing charges. I also hope that they will urge local authorities to encourage pensioners and other members of society who are not taking up all their benefit entitlements to do so. Many thousands of pensioners who are entitled to benefits do not claim them out of pride or ignorance, or for some other reason.

I repeat that the best way to help those people who have difficulties in paying their fuel bills is to ensure that they are adequately provided for financially and that they live in warm, dry homes. If we raised pensioners' economic level, we would not need measures such as the Bill.

2.4 pm

Mr. Simon Burns (West Chelmsford): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) on promoting the Bill, which is designed to give pensioners genuine help over the long term.

I am pleased to see my colleague from East Anglia, my hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Ruffley), and my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) here. They are both sponsors of this important Bill.

Audrey Wise (Preston) rose—

Mr. Burns: I am also delighted to see the hon. Lady, to whom I now give way.

Audrey Wise: I thank the hon. Gentleman. But what did he think, let alone say, about the Bill that I promoted last year? I agreed without hesitation to be one of the Bill's sponsors when the hon. Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) asked me, but he gave me no support whatever on my Bill last year. He said that that was because he was a parliamentary private secretary. His priorities were clear. The then Government gave no satisfaction and did nothing at all to facilitate my Bill; in fact, they talked it out without taking any other measures to help pensioners.

Mr. Burns: I am grateful to the hon. Lady for that history lesson about what happened last year. The straightforward answer is that my hon. Friend the Member for Ribble Valley was a PPS at the time, and I was a junior Minister in another Department. I thought that the principle behind last year's Bill had merit, and I was pleased that the Government set up a review late last year to consider how the existing system could be improved.

Given that the Government intend to talk out the Bill today, I might point out to the hon. Lady that last year there was an early-day motion on her Bill, signed by 16 members of the current Government, including the Under-Secretary of State for Social Security, the hon. Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley), yet today his colleague will do all he can, with the help of the Government Whip, to ensure that the Bill makes no further progress.

I support the Bill because it is simple and would make a small change to existing arrangements to take into account the wind chill factor, which is extremely important in the more exposed parts of the country, such as Scotland, parts of Wales and the coastline, where temperatures are colder for longer. The Bill would give pensioners automatic help with their fuel bills. It would become the bedrock of the scheme, enshrining it in legislation.

In his pre-Budget statement, the Chancellor announced payments for pensioners for the next two years. No doubt, the Minister will make a great deal of that, to cover his embarrassment over refusing to support the Bill. Frankly, from a party political point of view, I do not blame him. I am not sure why the Government have to spend so much money on a national advertising campaign for a universal benefit that is to be paid automatically, but that is another issue.

The scheme announced by the Chancellor is for two years only, to be paid for from the £400 million in savings on our contribution to Europe. There is no guarantee that it will operate every year thereafter. Pensioners may be getting extra help this year and next year, but the Government have given no commitment to operating the scheme in perpetuity. The Bill would ensure that when that Government help ended, the cold weather payments scheme would take the wind chill factor into account and help with fuel bills for pensioners would be enshrined in legislation. The Government should think again, reverse their opposition to the Bill and allow it to be considered in Committee.

It is ironic that the Secretary of State for Social Security is becoming known as the soundbite sister. All that she seems to be interested in is an instant soundbite for tomorrow morning's newspapers. I well remember the obscenity—given the Government's attitude towards the Bill—of the right hon. Lady going round the studios on her soundbite journey and condemning the review set up by the previous Government. She claimed that winter need could kill more than 25,000 pensioners and that pensioners might have to decide between heating or eating. We do not hear such crass remarks from the Secretary of State now that she has conned all those people into voting Labour. However, when she got into government, she abandoned them. We saw student politics from the right hon. Lady before the election: now, she is reaping the whirlwind of the Government's hypocrisy. The Government found that out to their cost only a few weeks ago when they treated lone parents as they have treated pensioners over the wind chill factor. That behaviour is despicable, but it is ironic and, sadly, typical of this Government that they will now refuse a Second Reading to legislation for which, only some 12 months ago, they were clamouring. However, we have come to expect that from this Government.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Ribble Valley on his Bill, but I am disappointed by all those Labour Members who last year supported what this Bill is trying to do, including 16 members of the Government and, indeed, one junior Social Security Minister. They will follow the Government's line today and seek to kill the Bill.

2.12 pm

Mr. Adrian Sanders (Torbay): The Liberal Democrats support the Bill and have consistently supported previous attempts to introduce such a measure. Cold weather payments are triggered by the temperature remaining at a target low for a set period of time. However, temperature is not the only factor: wind chill can cause freezing conditions. Senior members of the Labour party said, before the general election, that the then Government should

"agree to the amendment of the cold weather payments system, as proposed in the Cold Weather Payments (Windchill Factor) Bill, so that the windchill can be taken into account, and also to review how to improve the system for the benefit of Britain's oldest, poorest and coldest pensioners."

Those were the words of an early-day motion whose signatories included a Social Security Minister, a Home Office Minister and two Ministers from the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

The Government may argue that they have a budget ceiling and that incorporating the wind chill factor would force down the level of the payment or lead to a reduction in the temperature level at which payments kicked in. However, it would be a nonsense to oppose the Bill on the ground of budget limitations, because no money is set aside for cold weather payments. The conditions, and therefore the payments, are entirely unpredictable.

The Government may also argue that they are sticking to the Conservative spending plans. That is odd. When Mrs. Thatcher came to power, she did not say that she would stick to Labour's spending plans for the first two years: she got on and did things her way.

It is a false economy to scrimp and save in regard to keeping pensioners warm in winter. Conservative Members mentioned a number of regions where there is a particular problem. I come from the south-west, an area which—particularly the far south-west—traditionally has a milder, more moderate climate than other areas in the winter months. When the south-westerlies are blowing, however, we have freezing wind chill all along our coastline, right into the middle of Devon and Cornwall. We may be experiencing such a wind chill, but there may be no snow on the ground, while people in other parts of the country are snowed in but not suffering from the windchill factor. Pensioners in those areas will receive payments, while those in my part of the world will not.

Countries that are much colder than Britain—most notably the Scandinavian countries—have less of a problem with hypothermia than we do. As well as passing the Bill, the Government should take a number of steps to make Britain's homes warmer. They should, for instance, lower the rate of VAT on home insulation products from 17.5 per cent. to 5 per cent. as part of a longer-term strategy. The most important aspect of the Bill is the fact that it would provide help immediately; most pensioners would not be able to have their homes insulated in a 12-month period.

We call on the Government to allow this Bill to become law. It has our full support.

2.16 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security (Mr. John Denham): I congratulate the hon. Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) on his success in the ballot, and on raising a subject that is of great concern to all hon. Members. I also pay tribute to Age Concern, the Bill's main sponsor, for its many tireless efforts on behalf of older citizens.

I do not think there can be any doubt about the Government's commitment to helping to ensure that vulnerable people—especially pensioners—can be warm in their homes in winter. This morning, as on other mornings this week and next week, thousands of pensioners throughout the country who are on income support will have received giro cheques for £50 as part of the winter fuel payments scheme.

Mr. Burns: Of course the Minister is right, but will he explain why all the other pensioners who are not on income support will not receive that badly needed money until March at the earliest? That will be particularly onerous for pensioners who are just above the income support level, who may have to pay hefty fuel bills in the eight weeks before they receive the money. Why could the Government not get their act together and pay all the money at once, instead of discriminating?

Mr. Denham: The hon. Gentleman says that the money is badly needed. For 18 years, it never occurred to his party's Government that it was badly needed; they did nothing at all to help Britain's pensioners.

Mr. Burns: Answer the question.

Mr. Denham: The answer to the question is that, in the first year of operation of an unprecedented exercise, this is the time that it takes. Would the hon. Gentleman have preferred the Government not to give support to all pensioners, as his party's Government did not, year after year?

Mr. Burns: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Denham: No. I have given way to the hon. Gentleman once, and it was not worth it.

The winter fuel payments scheme will help all pensioners, but will give the most help to the poorest. It is an unprecedented initiative, which dwarfs any action by any other Government to tackle winter cold. We recognise that the problem is real. Every winter when it is cold, the number of pensioner deaths increases greatly. The issues, and medical opinion, are complex. Outdoor exposure may be a more important problem than cold indoors, but that does not mean that we can be complacent about older people living in cold houses and flats. As my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, South-East (Dr. Iddon) pointed out, too many houses are not energy-efficient: many are damp, cold and expensive to heat. That is why the Government have launched new initiatives across Departments to tackle the problems experienced by vulnerable people. The new Labour Government have already taken action to cut fuel costs, which are 5 per cent. lower overall than they were a year ago. The annual fuel bill for people who are eligible for cold weather payments is estimated to be £60 million lower than a year ago, and that fall in itself is equivalent to almost three cold weather payments.

I should like to set out the measures that we have already implemented to cut fuel costs and make homes easier to heat. As I have said, we have launched the winter fuel payments scheme. Every pensioner household will receive a payment of £20 and the poorest pensioners, those on income support, will receive £50 for this winter and next. The Government were not prepared to allow another winter to pass in which pensioners were fearful of turning up their heating because they did not know whether they would get the help that they needed with their fuel bills. That is why we have launched an advertising campaign. It is critical that pensioners can be confident about turning up their heating in the knowledge that help is on the way. That is why we have taken the step of making sure that pensioners know that. No doubt the hon. Member for West Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) would have preferred us to keep that information secret. He is wrong: the issue is about enabling pensioners to know that they can turn up their heating.

Mr. Burns: The Minister does not seem to understand that a universal payment to all pensioners does not need to be publicised in a party political way for the aggrandisement of the Government. That is the purpose of the spending of taxpayers' money.

Mr. Denham: There is no question of party political aggrandisement. There is no point in allowing pensioners to go through the winter not knowing that they will receive the payment and being afraid to turn up their heating.

I shall put the winter fuel payments in context. The payment of £50 which is not triggered by cold weather to all pensioner households on income support is equivalent to almost six cold weather payments. Over the past three winters, the average paid out in cold weather payments was £35 million. The total in winter fuel payments alone this winter will be about £200 million. As I have said, this is the first time that any Government have made a payment to all pensioners towards their heating costs.

The hon. Member for Ribble Valley was wrong to accuse us of breaking promises. The Government have kept the promises that they made to pensioners at the general election. In our manifesto we promised to cut VAT on fuel and in his first Budget my right hon. Friend the Chancellor kept that promise by cutting VAT on fuel from 8 to 5 per cent.

Audrey Wise: I fully acknowledge that the Government's action on fuel payments for pensioners is worth far more than the provisions of the Bill that I presented last year. The Bill that we are debating and of which I am a sponsor has the same title as mine. There is not an advertising campaign to promote the Government. The campaign informs people of their entitlement and tells them what to do to put matters right if they do not get it. I say gently to my hon. Friend the Minister that cold weather payments affect people on income support with children under five and those on disability premiums and special steps have not been taken for either group. They would benefit if the wind chill factor were taken into account. Can my hon. Friend please look at that?

Mr. Denham: The Government have defined their priority for pensioners and for the poorest pensioners in particular. There are other vulnerable people and that is why it is important to take a series of measures so that all vulnerable people are assisted in heating their homes.

I spoke about the cut of VAT on fuel, which was the first of our promises to be kept. That is in stark contrast to the actions of the previous Government. The hon. Member for Ribble Valley, who presented the Bill, and the hon. Member for West Chelmsford will remember that they voted to increase VAT on fuel to 17.5 per cent. and voted against attempts to cut it. Neither hon. Gentleman can talk about hypocrisy when their record is so clear.

Mr. Evans: Does the Minister accept that when the provision was introduced, VAT never went to 17.5 per cent., but the support to pensioners on income support did kick in at 17.5 per cent. and was never clawed back?

Mr. Denham: If it did not go to 17.5 per cent. that had nothing to do with the hon. Gentleman, who did his damnedest to ensure that it did.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor also cut VAT on energy-saving insulation schemes, which will enable another 40,000 homes to be insulated each year. The gas levy has been reduced to zero and we have kept the five promises that we made when the wind chill issue was debated last year. We cut VAT on fuel. We have said that we will help pensioners to insulate their homes through the environmental task force, and the announcement of that task force has now been made; we expect it to include a programme of energy efficiency improvements. In addition, nearly £800 million-worth of capital receipts has gone to local authorities, many of which will be using the money for energy conservation measures. There are similar provisions in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

We said that we would help the poorest pensioners who are entitled to cold weather payments but do not get them. Some of them will get the £20 this year, but 1 million pensioners do not receive the income support to which they are entitled—an issue that was neglected year after year by the previous Administration: they did nothing about it; they did not care about it. We have already set under way research into why those people do not claim the income support to which they are entitled.

In the pre-Budget statement last November, we announced that from April there will be a number of pilot schemes to find the most effective ways of enabling and encouraging pensioners to claim their income support. The hon. Member for North-East Hertfordshire (Mr. Heald) did not do a single thing to help pensioners take up their income support when he was doing my job under the previous Administration.

We said that we would improve the notification of cold weather payments by better targeting of information, and we have put that in hand this winter so that if a payment is triggered—the first one was triggered in one part of Scotland yesterday—pensioners know that it is being triggered as soon as possible so that they can turn up their heating. We said that we would review the operation of cold weather payments, and we have introduced two more weather stations in Scotland for making decisions about cold weather payments to make the system fairer.

We have kept the promises that we have made, and not just within the Department of Social Security. There are a number of Government-wide reviews and initiatives currently under way. We have a review of utility regulation that will consider the social implications of increased competition in the utilities market. An interdepartmental working group has been set up by the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend the Member for Wallasey (Angela Eagle).

Mr. John McDonnell (Hayes and Harlington): Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Denham: No, I should like to make progress.

Our pensions review will be of great importance. The hon. Member for Ribble Valley knows that primary legislation is not needed to implement the proposal that he has put forward. For that reason alone, the Government would see no need to support the Bill. We have been able to concentrate on the issues today, although the debate has been curtailed.

The best way forward is to take stock over the coming year or so of the outcome of the measures that we have already put in place, such as the winter fuel payments system and the other initiatives across Government, to identify the most appropriate ways of helping pensioners and the vulnerable to keep warm in winter. That is how we intend to proceed and I believe that that reflects the approach advocated by my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, South-East.

The cold weather payments scheme should be accompanied by four basic principles. It should deliver extra help to those who need it; it should be easily understood so that it provides a degree of certainty that a payment will be made; it should be seen to be fair; it should be felt to be fair. That approach was reflected in the review of the cold weather payments scheme that the Government undertook prior to this winter. One of the positive aspects of the cold weather payments scheme is the ability to make payments more quickly by using a Meteorological Office forecast. That enables entitlement to a payment to be announced at an earlier date, and the payment process to begin at the beginning of a cold spell rather than after seven days.

One of the real problems with the Bill—and there is not time to debate the detail of wind chill at great length—is that it could put at risk that ability to have a forecasting system. It would increase the uncertainty of the scheme, as I would have demonstrated had I been able to speak at greater length. It would not achieve the fairness that we have been seeking in the development of the cold weather payments scheme, between people in different parts of the country and between people in different sorts of housing.

The hon. Member for Ribble Valley must know that nine out of 10 pensioners would not benefit from his proposals. It is important not to give the impression that the Bill could bring any benefit to the vast majority of pensioners, because the Bill would not work in that way.

The wind speed and its effect on temperature is commonly referred to as wind chill. That term has attracted—

It being half-past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed upon Friday 30 January.

Mr. Evans: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The Minister gave the House the impression that he has been so constrained by all the other measures introduced to help pensioners that my Bill could not also be introduced. However, at the same time—as has been shown in answer to a parliamentary question—Downing street is spending millions of pounds on entertaining pop stars—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Lord): Order. The way that Ministers respond to debates is entirely a matter for them and is not a matter for the Chair.

Kingston-upon-Thames (Local Government Settlement)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Dowd.]

2.33 pm

Mr. Edward Davey (Kingston and Surbiton): I want to begin by thanking you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for allowing me to raise the matter of the local government settlement for the royal borough of Kingston on the Floor of the House. Despite many years of successive cuts for Kingston council, this is the first time that the issue has been properly raised in the House.

When my constituents voted for a change on 1 May last year, they did not expect the cuts imposed by the previous Government to continue. They certainly did not expect the cuts in essential services which the council is now having to consider.

The underlying difficulty in Kingston may have been caused by years of Conservative cuts, but this year's settlement is all the more difficult because of that history. Kingston has already made its major efficiency savings, and grant settlements that do not meet Kingston's increasing real needs will hurt. They are already hurting badly.

I am intensely keen to help the Government to find ways in which they can alleviate Kingston's problems not only this year but in the future. I applied for this debate in a constructive spirit, which is why I have given Ministers advance notice of many of my questions and concerns, so that we can together work out the problems. It is vital, however, that I disabuse Ministers of the perception of Kingston as some leafy borough, without its share of genuine deprivation and areas of relatively modest means. People who live in Norbiton, Tolworth, Chessington and New Malden are rightly proud of their communities, but in no way do they consider their areas as affluent as the Government seem to believe.

I shall first outline the problem that the council will face if the current settlement remains unchanged. Since 1993–94, Kingston has had to make real budget reductions of almost £21 million, and the coming year will be one of the worst. The proposed capping limit would require real budget reductions of £3 million, out of a total budget of only £106 million. As the council has taken the welcome action of passing in full to schools the Government's woefully inadequate education standard spending assessment increase of 4.3 per cent., as the Government requested, spending in all other spheres will have to be cut by well over £3 million.

In social services, there will be staff reductions in the family support service, thereby limiting day care services for very young children at risk of abuse. There will be a cut in services to children with special needs. According to council papers, other staff cuts will cause "more work being dealt with on a crisis basis, with priorities geared only to high-risk interventions."

In other words, some very vulnerable children in Kingston will go without the care they need.

The elderly, too—whether they live in Surbiton, Chessington, Tolworth or New Malden—will suffer because of the Government's low grant to Kingston council. Various charges for pensioners will have to be increased way above inflation, with charges for mobile meals set to rise to £2.50—one of the highest in London—representing an increase of over 15 per cent. Home care charges could rise by 10 per cent. Together, the charges will affect about 800 people, many of whom receive both home care and mobile meals. New charges at centres for the elderly, and cuts in respite care, also form part of the grim picture.

The cuts come at a time of huge increases in the number of referrals to community care services. Last year, for example, there was a 37 per cent. increase in learning disability referrals, and community mental health had an increase of more than 26 per cent. Nevertheless, Kingston's SSA has completely failed to take account of that magnitude of change. Kingston's personal social services SSA is well below the average for outer London boroughs, although its expenditure is on a par with those boroughs.

In only four years, cuts of almost £9 million have had to be made because of the combination of demand growth and a reduced real-terms social services SSA. I therefore ask for the Minister's assurance that she will ask her officials to re-examine Kingston's social services SSA, so that it more accurately reflects reality.

In the vital matter of schools, parents and teachers were bitterly disappointed when—despite our large class sizes—Kingston received one of the lowest education SSA increases, at only 4.3 per cent., compared with the national average of 5.7 per cent. I shall let head teachers' letters speak for themselves. The head teacher of St. John's Church of England primary school, Mr. van Schalkwyk, writes:

"I am so tired of the constant barrage from this and the last government that as a head described as inspirational in a recent Ofsted report I have decided to resign. My salary because of budget restrictions has only been increased once in 11 years. I no longer feel at 48 that the job is worth all the pressure and aggravation we are forced to endure in our schools. As secretary of the joint secondary, primary and special schools group in Kingston I realised that so much of our time has been spent fighting budget cuts and dealing with an onslaught of documentation that little time is left to raise standards."

In the secondary sector, the head teacher of Surbiton's Hollyfield school, Mr. Stephen Chamberlain, told me that successive cuts have led to increased class sizes, a reduction in pupils' choice of subjects, teacher stress, illness and retirement, the slowing down of IT development and the deterioration of existing buildings. Hollyfield and schools like it in Surbiton, Chessington and Tolworth are striving hard to improve, but it is difficult when the Government tie one arm behind their back.

All services in Kingston are affected by cuts. The borough's successful decentralised neighbourhood committees are being asked to bear a disproportionately high share of the budget reductions in order to limit as much as possible the damage to schools and social services. However, the services that neighbourhoods run are still important, whether they are the mobile library service, which is under threat, the public toilets, nearly all of which face closure, or the youth services, the funding for which is being cut.

I pledged to the Minister that I would be as constructive as possible, so I now offer a variety of possible solutions, some of which, incidentally, would not only help Kingston but could provide small but invaluable help to other outer London boroughs such as Hounslow and many northern metropolitan authorities such as Manchester, Oldham and Newcastle.

[Mr. Edward Davey]

First, I ask that Kingston's cap be increased from 3 to 4 per cent. The majority of outer London boroughs, including all in Kingston's Audit Commission family group, have been allowed to increase their own cap in excess of 4 per cent. Why cannot Kingston do the same? Ministers would be right to argue that they cannot make special settlements for individual councils, but today I am not asking them to.

As Ministers and civil servants recently told councillors and council officers from Kingston, any increase in the cap for the royal borough would also have to be awarded to other outer London boroughs and metropolitan authorities—most of which are Labour controlled—which have caps set at less than 4 per cent. I urge Ministers to do just that.

The implications to the Exchequer would be minimal, even if a 4 per cent. cap were provided for all those authorities—only a possible £21.7 million additional spending out of a total increase of £1,776 million in the total standard spending. Even that would occur only if all 19 authorities utilised the whole increase. For Kingston, the extra £1.25 million that it could produce would go a long way towards saving some of the most essential services.

I believe that most people in Kingston would be prepared to pay the small addition to the council tax implied by a higher cap in order to see services saved. Indeed, a survey was sent to every household in Kingston, and nearly 60 per cent. of people who responded said that they would want to protect services by paying a council tax increase beyond that which would be permitted by a 4 per cent. cap.

There is a second way in which Ministers could assist Kingston, and it relates to the way Kingston proposes to operate nursery funding after the abolition of vouchers. The abolition is welcome but Kingston is badly disadvantaged by the way it is being implemented, specifically by the use of full-time equivalent calculation of pupil numbers for grant purposes rather than a head count calculation. Therefore, I ask the Minister to review the distribution of this part of the education SSA.

A third way in which the Government could help Kingston ameliorate its immediate budget problems would be by giving an early indication that the estimated total cost of asylum seekers to Kingston of some £735,000 next year will be met in total by the Government.

There are many dimensions to Kingston's budgetary problems, but I want to note Kingston's particular interest in relation to the new review of area cost adjustment. I hope that past distinguished work, especially the Elliott report, will not be overlooked by the new review.

There are many reasonable ways in which the Government could help Kingston this year and in the future. That brings me to my final point of substance—the future of funding of Kingston. What most disturbed many local people about this year's settlement was not just the actual figures but the statement by the Deputy Prime Minister that Kingston was a "leafy borough" and the implication that our social and educational needs were few. If that is really what Ministers believe, people fear that the years of Tory cuts are set to be followed by successive years of more Labour cuts. Today the Minister has an opportunity to allay these fears. I wish to help her obtain a more accurate picture of the social realities in Kingston.

Like me, the Minister may have enjoyed the old television series, "The Good Life", which was set in Surbiton, in the heart of the borough. The series suggested that the area was thoroughly upper middle class and homogeneously affluent. Nothing could be further from the truth. Jerry and Margo are the exception rather than the rule.

Let us consider the key issue of pockets of deprivation within the borough. Using nationally accepted indicators of poverty, there are pockets of deprivation in Kingston that are on a par with some of the most needy areas of inner London. People who live in Norbiton on the Cambridge estate would not recognise their area as leafy. Using the composite indicators of poverty—the so-called "z" scores—Norbiton has a higher level of poverty than any ward in Richmond, Sutton, Bexley, Bromley or Harrow. The people of Norbiton are being short-changed by new Labour if they are to be bluntly classified as living in an affluent area.

Kingston does not justify being labelled as uniquely leafy compared with other parts of outer London. Do Ministers consider that Kingston is more leafy than Bromley or Bexley? The figures would suggest not, yet Bromley received a 5.7 per cent. increase in its permitted budget, and Bexley received a 6 per cent. increase. Why has Kingston done so badly, with an increase of just 3 per cent.? Why has Hounslow received an increase of only 3 per cent.? Why has west London fared so badly?

Kingston's economic structure has changed markedly in recent years. Although unemployment is relatively low, that is due partly to a buoyant retail sector. Consequently, unemployment is far more cyclical, and there were large increases back in the recent recession. Wages are actually quite low, despite relatively high levels of employment now. In 1997, the new earnings survey showed that average earnings in Kingston were below the London average. Such facts suggest that a perception of Kingston as uniformly affluent and leafy is misplaced.

Statistics can prove anything, especially—as with poverty statistics—when they change so often; but some changes can mask reality. An example is the removal of the homeless persons indicator from the socio-economic index. Kingston currently provides temporary accommodation to more than 500 homeless households, so that change affects us. There are currently about 2,500 households on the waiting list, with around 1,300 people applying to be housed as homeless each year. So leafy Kingston has a housing problem and quite substantial numbers of homeless people.

Kingston is in a dilemma. It seems always to be cut off from resources, be they from the Government, Europe, the National Lottery Charities Board or other grant-making bodies, because of the false perception that it has no social problems, and ample local resources. Yet the problems exist, and the resources often cannot be tapped for local use. Indeed, the Government's capping rules are preventing them from being tapped, even when local people are prepared to pay. If the Government now take a role in perpetuating a false perception, the future is not bright.

I end by urging the Minister to do all she can this year to help us. Raising the cap to 4 per cent. would be particularly welcome. I beg her to go away from the debate with an enhanced and more accurate perception of the borough to share with her colleagues, as well as a standing invitation from me to all or any of her departmental colleagues to come and visit us in Kingston.

2.47 pm

The Minister for Transport in London (Ms Glenda Jackson): I congratulate the hon. Member for Kingston and Surbiton (Mr. Davey) on securing the debate, and on presenting his arguments so clearly and cogently and in a spirit of positive co-operation with the Government.

The hon. Gentleman has raised several important issues relating specifically to the 1998–99 local government finance settlement for the royal borough. Before I refer specifically to the effects of the settlement on Kingston upon Thames, I shall first underline the Government's approach to local government finance and highlight some of the main points of the 1998–99 provisional settlement which my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister announced in the House on 2 December.

The Government's overriding aim in our approach to the finance settlement has been to introduce greater fairness in the distribution of grant among authorities. The hon. Gentleman asked whether those who voted for the Government on 1 May were aware that we would be working within the previous Government's spending plans. They were. In opposition and during the election campaign, we made no secret of the fact that we were going to inherit tight spending plans. We made it equally clear that we had to work within them. To ensure a fairer settlement, we had to make some hard decisions. In recent years, local government finance settlements—

Dr. Jenny Tonge (Richmond Park): I accept that you gave that undertaking in the run-up to the election—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Lord): Order. I did not give any undertaking. Will the hon. Lady try to use the correct parliamentary language?

Dr. Tonge: I am sorry, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

We understand that the Government gave an undertaking to keep within the previous Government's spending plans, but they said over and over that they would release the cap on local government. That is what we find difficult to understand. If only we could have a higher cap in Kingston and Richmond Park, we could manage and make things better. We do not know why the Government went back on their promise to allow local government more freedom.

Ms Jackson: I hope that the hon. Lady will bear with me. I intend to touch on that later. I hope to make the Government's thinking on the issue clear to her.

To ensure a fairer settlement, some hard decisions had to be made. In recent years, local government finance settlements have failed to meet that objective or to satisfy the spending needs of the majority of local authorities.

Some authorities will be disappointed by our proposals, but I hope to be able to show that Kingston, along with other authorities, has benefited from the changes to a fairer grant distribution that we have made for 1998–99. We intend to continue with that more just approach. The provisional settlement for the next financial year is a start in achieving that goal. It is fairer in its distribution, it reinforces local accountability by giving local authorities more discretion over local spending decisions, and it is better, in cash terms, than many authorities must have expected based on last year's plans.

Our grant distribution proposals are put into figures for individual authorities through the standard spending assessments. They form the bedrock of the present system of distributing the revenue support grant. We calculate standard spending assessments for individual authorities following general principles that are applied to all authorities, while taking account of local needs. Any differences in standard spending assessments between authorities with the same service responsibilities are usually due to underlying characteristics, which may relate to demographic, economic or social factors.

We recognise that authorities believe that further change could make the formula fairer still. Our aim is to ensure that authorities receive central Government grant fairly. We have made a start in the 1998–99 provisional settlement on overcoming previous injustices. During 1998, we shall continue to review the way in which grant is distributed. We shall also consider whatever new evidence emerges from our regular meetings with local authority representatives or from research. In addition, standard spending assessments and the way in which they are determined or could be improved form an important part of our current review of local government finance.

The Government's main priority is education. We have been able to increase provision for spending on education in 1998–99 by 5.7 per cent.—an extra £1.06 billion. That includes the extra £835 million for schools announced by the Chancellor in his July Budget. We think it only right to impress on local authorities our hope that they will pass on this increase in spending to education in order to begin to reverse years of neglect and enable a start to be made on raising educational standards.

We are also providing £662 million for the education of four-year-olds, both through standard spending assessments and a transitional specific grant from the Department for Education and Employment following the abolition of the nursery vouchers scheme. We have based the distribution of funding for under-five education mainly on the number of full-time equivalent four-year-old pupils, although a substantial element of funding is still distributed using the under-five population. I shall say more about that later.

We have also reviewed the indices of deprivation, applying statistical ground rules discussed with the Local Government Association. Those ground rules now make more explicit how measures of need are calculated. In a similar vein, we have confronted the flaw in the present system whereby visitors and commuters in a particular authority were attributed the same economic and social characteristics as residents. There was clearly something wrong with a system that treated all visitors and commuters to an area as being as deprived as the average resident.

Another important change is to the personal social services standard spending assessment. Following research commissioned by the Department of Health, the elderly residential social services element of the formula has been given a thorough re-examination. It now fully takes into account the introduction, more than five years ago, of community care. We have also been able to find a further £70 million for children's social services—the first substantial increase for three years.

On capital financing, we have proposed a change to the way in which we will deal with the costs of borrowing. In particular, we have changed how we treat debt incurred by local authorities before the present system was introduced in 1990. The previous Government treated all authorities as if they had chosen to use their capital receipts in the 1980s to repay debt, whether or not they had done so. Our proposal is to use actual debt as at 1 April 1990 or notional debt, whichever is the greater, so that we may treat all authorities even-handedly.

Looking ahead to the future of local government finance, we announced last July a local government finance review. A series of consultation papers—which will include, for example, the issue of capping—will be published over the next few months and a White Paper will follow. The Local Government Association has been fully involved in those discussions.

Turning to capping—as I told the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) I would—hon. Members will be aware that we remain committed to ending crude and universal capping as soon as possible. However, in the light of our public expenditure plans, capping will remain in place for 1998–99.

The Deputy Prime Minister has announced to the House the provisional capping principles for the forthcoming financial year. For all classes of authority, other than police, those class-permitted increases are substantially greater than last year. Those changes will give local authorities greater scope to exercise the local discretion to which the Government are committed. It will also help them to direct the additional provision for education to the schools.

We recognise that there is potential for council tax increases. However, we expect local authorities to make careful judgments about the need to make budget increases, whether increases in council tax would be fair, and whether taxpayers can afford them. We recognise that many authorities have budgeted below their capping limit in the past. We have now given them more room within which to exercise their discretion, and we expect them to use that greater flexibility responsibly.

On the specific capping point that was raised, I point out that Kingston's provisional permitted capping increase of 3 per cent. for 1998–99 allows it a £3.101 million increase in its budget. That is an improvement on the 2 per cent. increase permitted last year. The position for local authorities has been eased somewhat by the extension of passporting—although perhaps not as much as Kingston might wish.

The Government are constrained by the impact on public expenditure, and any changes will have to be balanced by consequential changes elsewhere. If, as Kingston has suggested, and the hon. Member for Richmond Park has advocated again today, we increase the class-permitted increase to 4 per cent. for outer London, that would increase caps by £5.6 million. However, if we increased the default cap increase for outer London, we would come under pressure to extend the benefit to other classes of authority.

Metropolitan authorities, for example, might reasonably argue that they were in a similar position. That would increase caps by over £20 million. Increasing the class-permitted increase for all local education authorities would increase caps by £130 million. The implications for public expenditure are considerable.

However, those principles are, for the time being, provisional. Firm capping decisions cannot be made until authorities have set their 1998–99 budgets. When firm capping decisions are made, we shall, of course, take all relevant considerations into account, including the points made about the royal borough of Kingston by the hon. Members for Kingston and Surbiton and for Richmond Park.

The hon. Member for Kingston and Surbiton also referred to the effect on Kingston of the changes we have made following the abolition of nursery vouchers. We intend to give local education authorities a duty to provide a place in education for all four-year-olds whose parents want them to have one. In the light of that intention, we have amended the distribution of standard spending assessment for under-five education.

The distribution will be made mainly on the basis of the number of full-time equivalent four-year-old pupils. We think that it is fairer to distribute funding on the basis of provision. It is in line with the use of pupil numbers in other parts of education standard spending assessments. For authorities with low provision for four-year-olds, transitional specific grant is available from the Department for Education and Employment.

The hon. Gentleman was concerned about our use of full-time equivalent pupil numbers, rather than a head count. It is for local authorities to decide the appropriate mix of full-time and part-time education for four-year-olds. The use of full-time equivalent figures should mean that, where full-time provision is appropriate, it will be reflected in the distribution of funds. If local authorities such as Kingston feel that the way in which the data are counted does not fully reflect their circumstances, we will be happy to consider the evidence that they provide.

The hon. Gentleman also raised the area cost adjustment—ACA. I know—indeed, he made the point again today—that Kingston would have liked us to implement Professor Elliott's proposals for 1998–99. However, we are concerned that the specific cost method of calculating the ACA has not been fully investigated.

We want to ensure that evidence on all major options is available before we decide the way forward. We have therefore commissioned research to examine the specific cost approach. When the report is submitted later in the year, we will assess it alongside the other proposals for the ACA, including those put forward by Professor Elliott's review, in consultation with representatives of local government.

The hon. Gentleman has asked for clarification about the work of our researchers examining the specific cost approach to the ACA. We are asking the researchers to examine how a specific cost approach would work, and whether it can be implemented. Once we have had the report on the research, we will consider the proposals.

The hon. Gentleman also referred to homelessness in the royal borough. I believe that he asked me whether we realised—

The motion having been made after half-past Two o'clock, and the debate having continued for half an hour, MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER adjourned the House without Question put, pursuant to the Standing Order.

Adjourned at three minutes past Three o'clock.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Planning Guidance

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will amend existing planning guidance to planning authorities to ensure that the design and layout of new residential areas is more acceptable to existing communities; and if he will make a statement on the representations he has received on this subject. [22204]

Mr. Raynsford: Revised Planning Policy Guidance note 1 encourages careful and early consideration to design issues which can help make proposals for development acceptable to local communities. Local authorities are encouraged to promote good design and reject bad design. The Government intend to build on this guidance by publishing two good practice guides next year—one a general guide to design in the planning system; the other a companion guide to Design Bulletin 32 (Residential Roads and Footpaths) which has a major influence on the layout of residential areas. I also continue to emphasise the importance of good design in speeches at suitable opportunities, most recently at the Royal Fine Arts Commission Seminar.

EU Structural Funds

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 24 November 1997, Official Report, column 372, what percentage of European Funds under objective 5B was spent in the less-favoured areas of the North of England in (a) 1993, (b) 1994, (c) 1995 and (d) 1996; and what is the date when this funding will finish. [22605]

Angela Eagle: The objective 5B funding allocated to the Northern Uplands programme, which should operate from 1994 to the end of 1999, is £84 million. However, since the European Commission did not approve the programme until December 1994, no funds were spent during that year. The amount spent under the Northern Uplands programme in 1995 and 1996 is as follows:

Year	Structural funds spent (£ million)	Percentage of total allocation
Total		12.53

Advisory Committee on Releases into the Environment

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of the proposals in the White Paper on Freedom of Information on the modus operandi of the Advisory Committee on Releases into the Environment. [22632]

Angela Eagle: No formal assessment has yet been made on the impact of the proposals in the White Paper on Freedom of Information. However, under the Genetically Modified Organisms (Deliberate Release) Regulations 1992, the Secretary of State already has a statutory duty to place a summary of the details of applications for consent to release genetically modified organisms (GMOs) on a public register, which is kept by my Department and in the regional offices of the Environment Agency. Summaries are also placed on the Internet.

Further, the regulations require applicants to advertise their proposed releases in newspapers circulating in the area where the release is proposed. Concerned residents may contact either the companies or the Department for further information and have an opportunity to write to the Secretary of State commenting on the application. My Department will make the full application available on request, except any information which is agreed to be commercially confidential. The advice of the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE) is also placed on the public register after they have reviewed applications for consent. My Department publishes newsletters twice a year, an ACRE annual report, technical guidance notes and research reports.

My Department and ACRE are currently considering ways of increasing the transparency of how decisions on the granting of consents are made. We will take into account the White Paper on Freedom of Information and the conclusions of the National Biotechnology Conference held in March 1997.

Primates Imports

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many primates were imported from Indonesia in (a) 1996 and (b) 1997 to date. [22396]

Angela Eagle: Fifty captive bred Crab-eating Macaques (Macaca fascilularis) were imported in 1996, and a further eight specimens of this species were imported in 1997.

Housing Developments (West Sussex)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many representations he has received (a) in favour of and (b) against his decision to reject the independent inspector's conclusion concerning the limits to housing development in West Sussex. [22579]

Mr. Raynsford: The hon. Member for Chichester (Mr. Tyrie) has written to express his concern about the effect of the Direction. I am not aware that any other representations have been received either for or against my right hon. Friend's decision.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions in how many cases of inspectors reporting on the limits to housing development he has (a) upheld the conclusion, (b) reduced the limits and (c) increased the limits. [22578]

Mr. Raynsford: Land is allocated for housing development through the development plan system. Both the panel, which reports following an Examination in Public into Structure Plans, and the Inspector, who reports following a Public Local Inquiry into a Unitary Development or Local Plan, report directly to the local authority concerned.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will meet local authority and parliamentary representatives of West Sussex to discuss his declaration that the method or conclusion of the independent inspector into the limits to housing developments in the county was flawed. [22576]

Mr. Raynsford: My right hon. Friend is considering the hon. Member's request and I will advise the hon. Member of his decision in due course.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much time he spent considering the inspector's report into the limits to housing development in West Sussex.[22577]

Mr. Raynsford: The report was published on 25 June 1997 and has also been thoroughly considered within the Department.

Millennium Experience

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of the site which will be used for the Millennium Experience has been decontaminated; what contaminants were found on the site; and what checks have been carried out on (a) the decontaminated areas and (b) the areas which were not decontaminated since decontamination was completed. [22723]

Angela Eagle: The site to be used for the Millennium Experience forms part of the Greenwich peninsula site. It has been used for a variety of industrial purposes, including gas production, over a long period. Soil contamination has resulted from these industrial uses. Reclamation work has therefore been carried out on the whole of the land owned by English Partnerships on the Peninsula, including the site to be used for the Millennium Experience. The nature of this work varies according to the mix of contaminants in any one area.

Following very extensive site investigation and risk analysis, British Gas, as the original polluter, has completed the statutory remediation works. English Partnerships and the New Millennium Experience Co., Ltd. are carrying out further remediation works to a standard suitable for the site's intended use.

All aspects of the remediation works have been carried out to statutory health and safety standards and the works have been monitored by both the Environment Agency and the Environmental Health Department of the London Borough of Greenwich. Following remediation, the site is subject to regular monitoring of groundwater samples on a continuing basis.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the total area which will be used for the Millennium Experience. [22722]

Angela Eagle: The total area of the Greenwich Peninsula is 119 hectares, of which 66 per cent. (81 hectares) is allocated to the Millennium Experience.

Speed Limits (Residential Areas)

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to create zones with 10 mph speed limits in residential areas. [22721]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Speed limits in residential areas are a matter primarily for local highway authorities, but we are considering the principles involved. We would need to be sure that there were adequate means of enforcing limits, whether by physical measures or otherwise and that, on the whole, any expenditure would be effective by comparison with other measures which enhance safety and encourage environmentally friendly transport.

European Air Safety Authority

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom Government's involvement in the establishment of a single European Air Safety Authority. [22670]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government have participated fully in the work in the European Community on proposals to set up a European Aviation Safety Authority. EU Transport Ministers have already agreed that the Community should be part of a new European Aviation Safety Authority, which will help to ensure proper safety standards in air transport in the whole of Europe, not just the European Union. During the United Kingdom Presidency we shall seek to ensure that the plans for the new body, and the Community's role in it, are taken forward.

Cycle Spaces

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many secure cycle spaces there are in his Department. [22685]

Angela Eagle: My Department has 1,105 secure cycle spaces.

Nursery Education

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those local authorities with responsibility for education where the increase in revenue support grant adjusted for changes in nursery vouchers funding and increased NNDR is less than the amount that has been passported through the capping regime to raise standards in schools. [22284]

Ms Armstrong: The Deputy Prime Minister, in his statement to the House outlining the Government's proposals for the 1998–99 RSG Settlement, set out the proposed levels of Total Standard Spending and Aggregate External Support. In his statement he made it clear that the proposals reflected the previous Government's plans to increase the level of Council Tax by 7 per cent. This effect on council tax was inherent in the public expenditure totals set by the last Government and implied a reduction in the level of central Government support for local authority expenditure. Although the Government have sought to limit the pressures on local council tax payers by a number of means, including the full funding of the extra £835 million for education, the shift from central Government support to the council tax means that for most authorities increases in Standard Spending Assessments will exceed the increase in central Government support.

Consequently, for most education authorities the difference between the provisional 1998–99 SSA element for education and the adjusted equivalent amount for 1997–98 (ie the amount taken into account in determining whether the permitted increase in budget should be above the standard percentage for the class) exceeds the difference between the sum of the provisional 1998–99 RSG and NNDR entitlements and the sum of the 1997–98 entitlements, adjusted for changes in responsibility and function.

The authorities with an increase in education SSA higher than the increase in external support are:

Packaging Waste

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which companies have (a) been registered and (b) been refused registration as accredited reprocessors for the purpose of issuing packaging waste recovery notes under the Producer Responsibility (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997. [22281]

Angela Eagle: The Environment Agency and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency are responsible for the accreditation of reprocessors under the Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997. The Agencies register each site individually rather than registering companies, and the statistics following reflect this.

The most recent figures available from the Environment Agency, accurate for 24 December 1997, show that 48 sites have received accreditation, 64 have been refused and 2 are pending awaiting the modification of reprocessing and/or administration systems. The remainder, some 90, are still being processed.

The list of applications which includes their company names and the status of the site (agreed, refused or pending) runs to some thirty five pages. I have therefore placed a copy in the House of Commons Library.

Under the Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997, there are three kinds of operation which are classified as reprocessing (definitions are taken from Directive 94/62/EC on packaging and packaging waste):

recycling, ie "the reprocessing in a production process of the waste materials for the original purpose or for other purposes including organic recycling but excluding energy recovery"; organic recycling, ie "the aerobic (composting) or anaerobic (biomethanisation) treatment, under controlled conditions and using micro-organisms, of the biodegradable parts of packaging waste, which produces stabilized organic residues of methane"; energy recovery, ie "the use of combustible packaging waste as a means to generate energy through direct incineration with or without waste but with the recovery of the heat".

The rejection of an application is usually the result of one of the following situations:

(i) the process concerned does not count as reprocessing as defined above;

(ii) the site does not reprocess packaging waste;

(iii) the site is not yet capable of reprocessing packaging waste.

Nuclear Materials (Transport)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 9 December 1997, Official Report, column 493, if he will place in the Library copies of the contingency plans to respond to accidents during the air and sea carriage of MOX nuclear fuel. [22299]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department does not hold copies of the contingency plans referred to in my previous answer, which are normally prepared and held by transporters of radioactive material, and I am therefore not able to place a copy of the plans in the Library.

The plans prepared by BNFL in the case of sea and air transport of MOX nuclear fuel are subject to a security classification and I am informed that they are not prepared to release copies of such plans. My hon. Friend may wish to approach BNFL directly in order to have sight of the contingency plans that he wishes to see.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 9 December 1997, Official Report, column 492, if he will place in the Library the Fourth Report of the Standing Working Group on the Safe Transport of Radioactive Material of DGXVII, once it becomes available to his Department. [22289]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Fourth Report from the Standing Working Group to the Commission on the Safe Transport of Radioactive Materials in the European Union has recently been submitted to the Commission and will be submitted to the Council of Ministers, the European Parliament, the Economic and Social committee and the Committee of the regions. When the report becomes available a copy will be placed in the Library.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set up an inquiry into the cost of providing the same standard of services in rural and in urban authorities for the services covered by the Other County Services element of SSAs. [21941]

Mr. Raynsford: Possible changes to SSA formulae are discussed with local government in the SSA Sub-Group of the Settlement Working Group. Whether any work on the costs incurred by rural and urban authorities in providing services covered by the county level "All Other Services" SSA formula is carried out this year depends upon the priorities of local and central government when the Sub-Group's 1998 work programme is agreed later in the spring.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will commission research into the factors which influence the need for and the cost of social services for the 16 to 64 years age group and incorporate the results of this research into the way SSAs are calculated. [21942]

Mr. Raynsford: The need for revenue expenditure on social services for people aged 18 to 64 is covered by the "Other Social Services" SSA. Changes to this formula have been proposed for 1998–99, following a review of the "Other Social Services Index". Whether any further work on this particular SSA formula is carried out this year depends upon the priorities of local and central government when the work programme of the SSA Sub-Group of the Settlement Working Group is agreed later in the spring.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will commission research into factors which determine a child's special educational needs and incorporate the results of such research into the construction of SSAs. [21943]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department of Education and Employment is currently conducting a review of the indicator of additional educational needs used in Standard Spending Assessments. The review is intended to report in time for consideration before decisions are made about 1999–2000 SSAs.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list in rank order the SSA provision for 1997–98 and 1998–99 per head of population for each county council in England and Wales and give the average county figure for each year. [21944]

Mr. Raynsford: The figures for shire counties are shown in the following tables. The provisional 1998–99 and settlement 1997–98 Standard Spending Assessment figures are not comparable owing to changes in local government responsibility and in local government reorganisation affecting Berkshire, Cambridgeshire, Cheshire, Devon, Essex, Hereford and Worcester, Kent, Lancashire, Nottinghamshire and Shropshire in 1998. There are no equivalent Welsh county councils for funding purposes following local government reorganisation in 1996.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library the research undertaken to demonstrate that the sparsity adjustment used in the calculation of SSAs adequately reflects the additional cost of providing education in rural areas. [21945]

Mr. Raynsford: I have placed in the Library a copy of a report, "Sparsity and Local Authority Costs" by Salford University Business Services. It suggests that the current allowance for sparsity in standard spending assessments is broadly correct.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will re-examine the way in which SSAs are calculated for county councils with regard to (a) education, (b) personal social services and (c) other county services. [21946]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department for Education and Employment is currently conducting a review of the indicator of additional education needs as used in the Education SSA. In addition, research into the area cost adjustment is likely to cover issues relating to the Education, Personal Social Services and county level 'All Other Services' SSAs. Whether any further work on these three elements will be done this year depends on the priorities of local central government when the work programme of the SSA Sub-Group is agreed later in the spring.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will re-examine the case for incorporating a sparsity factor into the calculation of the SSA provisions for (a) the under-fives and (b) other education. [21947]

Mr. Raynsford: Our proposals for 1998–99 SSAs include a revised SSA for under-5 education which includes a sparsity factor. If local authorities feel that there is a strong case for sparsity to be taken into account in the other education SSA then they should raise the issue, through the Local Government Association, in the SSA Sub-group.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will include social class as an indicator of educational attainment rates in the construction of the additional educational needs provision of SSAs. [21948]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department for Education and Employment is currently conducting a review of the indicator of additional education needs used in Standard Spending Assessments. It will examine a range of possible indicators of additional educational needs including indicators of social class. The review is intended to report in time for consideration before decisions are made about 1999–2000 SSAs.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will ensure that the additional educational needs component of SSAs reflects the number of children with statements in each local authority. [21949]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department for Education and Employment is currently conducting a review of the indicator of additional education needs used in Standard Spending Assessments. It will consider a range of possible indicators. It will also consider how the formula could take account of the number of children with statements. The review is intended to report in time for consideration before decisions are made about 1999–2000 SSAs.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to introduce a new formula for the children's personal social service SSA; and if it will take into account the effects of population sparsity on the cost of providing social services for children in rural areas. [21950]

Mr. Raynsford: Whether any further work on the Children's Social Services SSA formula will be done this year depends upon the priorities of central and local government when the work of the SSA Sub-Group of the Settlement Working Group is agreed later in the spring.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if his Department will adjust the unit cost factor used in the SSA calculations to take account of the higher cost of providing domiciliary home care for elderly people in sparsely populated areas. [21951]

Mr. Raynsford: Whether any work will be done to consider the inclusion of a sparsity indicator within the Elderly Domiciliary SSA formula depends upon the priorities of central and local government when the work programme of the SSA Sub-Group of the Settlement Working Group is agreed later in the spring.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Standard Spending Assessment Sub Group will report on the use of the Social Index in the calculation of the other personal social services element of SSAs. [21952]

Mr. Raynsford: The SSA Sub-Group reviewed the Other Social Services Index in its 1997 round and details were given in the Sub-Group Report for 1998–99. As a result, we have proposed the replacement of the Other Social Services Index and the morbidity indicator by two new indices in the Other Social Services SSA formula for 1998–89.

Driving Test

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment of the difficulties faced by persons living more than one hour's drive away from a motorway the Driving Standards Agency has made in its consideration of the inclusion of motorway driving in the driving test. [22666]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No detailed assessment has been made as we have no current plans to introduce motorway driving into the car test. The issue of adequate exposure to fast multi-carriageway driving in the practical test is one of those that will be addressed in the research into the practical car driving test that is currently being undertaken. Results are expected in two to three years' time.

Health and Safety Laboratory

Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Health and Safety Laboratory intends to publish its Annual Report and Accounts for 1996–97. [22568]

Angela Eagle: The Health and Safety Laboratory has today published the 1996–97 Annual Report and Accounts, and copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

A590 Bypass

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the current status of his review of the proposed A590 bypass at High and Low Newton; and if he will make a statement. [21959]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are currently undertaking a strategic review of the Trunk Roads Programme. The A590 bypass at High and Low Newton is being considered within the context of that review, the results of which we hope to announce later this year.

Council Tax

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library a table showing the band D council tax increase for each notifiable authority in England (a) in cash terms and (b) in percentage terms based on the assumption that all councils spend at the provisional capping limit. [22277]

Mr. Raynsford: I have today placed in the Library of the House a table showing the information requested.

Selby Bypass

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many representations have been made to his Department regarding the Selby bypass in response to the roads review consultation exercise. [22698]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Over 4,600 representations have been received on the proposed Selby bypass. Nearly all were completed pro-forma postcards supporting its construction.

Housing Developments (Hertfordshire)

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many cards conveying opposition to Hertfordshire County Council's plans to build 10,000 houses in the Green Belt he has received. [22589]

Mr. Caborn: We have so far received approximately six and a half thousand identical postcards requesting that the Secretary of State call in the proposals in Hertfordshire County Council's Structure Plan Review for major development in the Green Belt west of Stevenage.

Rail Crash (Wrexham)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 435, when he expects the Health and Safety Executive to complete their investigation of the rail crash at Wrexham General Station. [22746]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I am advised by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) that follow-up work relating to the accident at Wrexham General Station on 24 April 1997 will soon be complete. I understand that HSE has concluded that the derailment of a single wagon was caused by defects in the track, though further investigations are continuing into the underlying causes.

Local Authority Planning Services

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the average national performance indicator values for local authority planning services; and how these relate to the indicators for Peterborough District Council in each of the last three years. [22211]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department publishes a six-monthly Planning Performance Checklist showing the performance of English local planning authorities against the Government's target that they should decide 80 per cent. of applications within eight weeks of receipt. The performance of Peterborough District Council against the national average over the past three financial years is given in the table.

Percentage decided in eight weeks

	National average performance	Peterborough District Council
Year to 31 March 1995	65	57.3
Year to 30 September 1995	65	55.8
Year to 31 March 1996	65	58.7
Year to 30 September 1996	65	63.4
Year to 31 March 1997	64	66.4

Lake Windermere (Speed Limit)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement regarding his Department's plans for a speed limit on Windermere. [22524]

Angela Eagle: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is considering whether or not to confirm byelaws made by the Lake District Special Planning Board (now the Lake District National Park Authority) which would impose a speed limit of 10mph on power-driven vessels on Windermere. In November the High Court quashed the decision by the last Secretary of State not to confirm the byelaws. In reaching a decision, we shall take account of all the representations so far made in relation to the proposed byelaws and any fresh representations made to us by 6 February.

Structure Plan (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has received a copy of Gloucestershire County Council's revised structure plan; if he will be accepting the reduced number of new houses proposed for the period covered; and if he will make a statement. [22525]

Mr. Caborn: The Secretary of State has received a copy of the Deposit version of the Gloucestershire Structure Plan which, I understand, was placed on deposit today. Any representations or objections he wishes to make will be sent to the County Council before the end of the statutory six weeks consultation period.

It would not be appropriate for me to comment further on the content of the plan because of the Secretary of State's formal role on planning matters.

Celtic Seas Area

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to publish a quality status report for the Celtic Seas area including the Irish Sea. [22534]

Angela Eagle: The United Kingdom is working with the other Contracting Parties to the OSPAR Convention to prepare an overall quality status report on the North East Atlantic. As part of this, a regional report on the Celtic Seas, including the Irish Sea, will be prepared alongside other regional reports on the Arctic, the North Sea, the Bay of Biscay/Gulf of Gascony and the deep Atlantic. Publication is planned for 2000.

Road Schemes

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the road schemes, by local authority, for which the Government has suspended funding during 1998–99, indicating for each if this was on the grounds of (a) changes in policy and (b) increases in financial costs. [22450]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The following table shows the local authority road schemes which were funded in 1997–98 but for which no financial support has been provided for 1998–99. Schemes for which no bids were received have not been included. In each case, the decision not to continue funding was in accordance with established procedures which take account of progress made on the scheme and the extent of previous financial support. In no case was increased cost the sole factor. None were suspended because of changes in policy.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the Government's policy in respect of reviewing local authority road schemes previously funded through the TPP system against the criteria of (a) integration, (b) accessibility, (c) safety, (d) economy and (e) environmental impact. [22452]

Ms Glenda Jackson: All current local authority road schemes were accepted for funding with a commitment to continue financial support provided that reasonable progress was made towards their completion. It would therefore be unreasonable to assess existing schemes against different criteria from those used when the schemes were first accepted for funding.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what was the total number of new packages submitted by local authorities in their TPP bids for 1998–99; [22453]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 6 November 1997, Official Report, column 277, how many new rural packages were awarded funding in the local transport settlement for 1998–99. [22454]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Bids for 69 new packages were received. Among 10 new packages to receive full approval in the settlement, one was for a predominantly rural area. It was Cumbria County Council's Lake District package.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number of major new road schemes for which each local authority bid for funding under the TPP system for 1998–99. [22451]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The schemes are as listed:

[22449]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information is given in the table.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the (a) date of appointment, (b) terms of reference and (c) membership of the focus groups established by his Department to discuss genetically modified organisms. [22606]

Angela Eagle: Although no formal focus groups have been established by my Department to discuss genetically modified organisms a National Biotechnology Conference was held last year which brought together representatives from industry, environmental and consumer groups, the scientific community and Government. The aim of the conference was to discuss developments in biotechnology, their benefits and broad implications for human health and environmental safety and how these will influence the principles on which biotechnology regulation is based.

Driving Licence

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reasons the Union flag that appeared on the original published design of the new plastic United Kingdom driving licence does not appear on the final design. [22460]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The original published design of the proposed photocard driving licence which appeared on the consultation document issued in August 1994 did not contain the Union Flag. Inclusion of a national flag arose when proposals were put forward in August 1996 for a joint identity card/driving licence. Those proposals are not being pursued.

Lady Porter

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the collecting of the full surcharge from Lady Porter following the recent court decision; and if he will make a statement. [22495]

Mr. Raynsford: Collection of the surcharge amount confirmed by the Divisional Court is a matter for the auditor and the City of Westminster. I understand that there remains a possibility of appeals against the judgment of the Court.

Packaging Waste

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what mechanisms exist for appealing against refusal by the Environment Agency to register companies as accredited reprocessors for the purpose of issuing packaging waste recovery notes under the Producer Responsibility (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997. [22282]

Angela Eagle: The Agencies reserve the right to refuse accreditation and to remove accreditation from any reprocessor. There is no statutory right of appeal against such decisions, but reprocessors will be given the relevant Agency's reasons in writing and will be notified of the complaints procedure if they wish to pursue any grievances. This complaints procedure does not affect any other legal remedies open to the reprocessor.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sri Lanka

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent visits have been made by High Commission officials to the northern area of Sri Lanka; and what reports have been received following such visits. [21897]

Mr. Fatchett: High Commission officials travel extensively around Sri Lanka, although not all areas are accessible because of fighting between Government forces and the LTTE. Since Jaffna was brought under Government control in December 1995, High Commission officials have made five separate visits to the areas, most recently in November 1997. They report that the situation there is gradually improving, but remain concerned about allegations of human rights abuses on the peninsula.

Christmas Island

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the note by the head of the EU delegation in Suva to the British High Commissioner dated 24 January 1996, concerning a list of points of action by the Kiribati Government on environmental restoration on Christmas Island. [22029]

Mr. Fatchett: I have placed in the Library today a copy of the note of 24 January 1996 from the head of the EU delegation in Suva to the British High Commissioner, which is about the environmental project on South Tarawa.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received since May from the Republic of Kiribati concerning the need for environmental restoration on Christmas Island arising from United Kingdom nuclear tests. [22030]

Mr. Fatchett: We have received no representations from the Republic of Kiribati concerning the environmental restoration of Christmas Island in the period since May.

European Union

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 25 November 1997, Official Report, column 479, for what reason Command Paper 3780 omits the text of the 15 protocols of the Treaty on European Union; and if he will publish a command paper to include current articles and protocols contained in the Command Papers 455 of 1988 and 2485 of 1994. [22197]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There is no need for a consolidated version of Command Papers 455 of 1988 and 2485 of 1994. A consolidated version of the Treaty of Rome and the Treaty on European Union, as amended by all subsequent treaties, including the Treaty of Amsterdam (not yet in force) has already been published as part of Command Paper 3780 (1997). This does not reproduce the texts of protocols annexed to the Treaty of Rome or the protocol annexed to the Treaty on European Union, as they are not substantively amended (although some are repealed) by the Treaty of Amsterdam. The texts of these protocols can be found in Command Papers 455 of 1988 and 2485 of 1994.

Israel

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what undertakings were given by Israel at the meeting with EU officials on 28 November in respect of doubts concerning the validity of preferential certificates on imports labelled "Made" in Israel; how these undertakings related to the suspension of inquiries concerning some manufactured goods; and how these undertakings differed from past assurances relating to goods now known to have been falsely described. [22196]

Mr. Doug Henderson: At the meeting on 28 November 1997 with the European Commission, Israel undertook to provide copies of current internal legislation relevant to ensure the implementation of the origin and mutual assistance protocols annexed to the EC/Israel Interim Agreement and in particular the obligation on Israeli customs to ensure the correct application of the rules of origin. Israel has acknowledged that prior to 1 January 1996, national legislation had prevented the implementation of control mechanisms envisaged in the agreement, and has agreed to verify the originating status of all orange juice exported to the EC since 6 June 1995.

The Commission had previously expressed concern that Israeli national legislation was so structured that the proper checking of certificates of origin was not taking place in respect of goods exported to the European Community under the Preferential Trade Agreement. This led the Commission to publish a warning to importers in the Official Journal on 8 November 1997, and to preparations being made by HM Customs and Excise for inquiries into a range of Israeli manufactured products. In the light of the undertakings now given by Israel, Customs felt it appropriate to suspend those inquiries.

Luxembourg Summit

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the figures for GDP per capita used by the Council of Ministers in its Luxembourg summit in respect of (a) Cyprus, (b) Hungary, (c) Poland, (d) Estonia, (e) the Czech Republic, (f) Slovenia, (g) Romania, (h) Slovakia, (i) Latvia, (j) Lithuania, (k) Bulgaria, (l) Turkey, (m) the Greek sector of Cyprus and (n) the Turkish sector of Cyprus. [22178]

Mr. Doug Henderson: GDP per capita is not one of the criteria for EU membership. No GDP figures were submitted to the European Council in Luxembourg.

However, the Commission's Opinions of July 1997 on the Central European candidates contained details of GDP per capita based on 1995 figures. These were as follows (in ecu):

	Number
Hungary	3,340
Poland	2,360
Romania	1,200
Slovak Republic	2,470
Latvia	1,370
Estonia	1,850
Lithuania	930
Bulgaria	1,180
Czech Republic	3,490
Slovenia	7,240

The Commission's Opinion on Cyprus dates from 1993. But in the Agenda 2000 Communication of July 1997 the Commission quotes a more recent figure of 3,600 ecu for the north of the island, which is estimated to be a third of the figure for the south (i.e. 10,800 ecu).

The Commission's Opinion on Turkey dates from 1989, but a recent OECD report estimated 1995 GDP per capita as 2,075 ecu.

Heathrow (VIP Facilities)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list by month since May (a) the number of times VIP facilities at Heathrow Airport have been hired by Her Majesty's Government and (b) the total expenditure on VIP facilities at Heathrow Airport. [22200]

Mr. Fatchett: The information is as follows:

	Number of times VIP facilities hired	£
May	883	169,116.58
June	1,189	227,723.23
July	1,332	255,111.31
August	1,297	248,407.93
September	1,391	266,411.28
October	1,315	251,855.38
November	993	190,184.33

The figures include use of VIP facilities by the British Council and the Bank of England as well as HMG. They also include VAT. The figures include use by foreign and Commonwealth VIP visitors as well as HMG Ministers.

European Council

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the treaty articles governing the operation of the European Council. [22198]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Article D of the Treaty on European Union sets out the purpose, composition and frequency of European Councils. Although the European Council works within the framework of the Treaties, there are no procedural rules for its operation.

Land Mines

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will bring forward legislation to incorporate the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on their destruction into domestic law. [22492]

Mr. Fatchett: We intend to introduce legislation as soon as the Parliamentary timetable allows.

General Pinochet

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings members of his Department have held with General Pinochet over the last three years. [17825]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [pursuant to his reply, 27 November 1997, c. 615]: Additional information has reached me, since my answer of 27 November. The correct answer is as follows.

There have been two meetings involving members of my Department, in March 1995 and March 1996. These involved the then Ambassador to Santiago accompanying visiting MOD staff on the two occasions during this period when courtesy calls were made on General Pinochet as Commander-in-Chief of the Chilean Army. Discussions were of a general nature and did not cover defence sales. Apart from these calls British Embassy staff in Santiago have attended several official state and military functions at which General Pinochet, again in his capacity as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, was also present. No discussions took place between these staff and General Pinochet at these events.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Official Publications

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if a complete bibliographic record of official publications can be accessed via the Internet. [22626]

Dr. David Clark: The Stationery Office Ltd. and Chadwyck-Healey Ltd. now provide an Internet version of the United Kingdom Official Publications (UKOP) database. UKOP Online currently provides the most comprehensive and up-to-date bibliographic record of official publications. It combines the complete catalogue of Official Publications published by The Stationery Office (and previously HMSO) and Chadwyck-Healey's Catalogue of Official Publications not published by The Stationery Office which is produced from information provided by Government Departments and Agencies. The Universal Resource Locator is http://www.ukop.co.uk.

Public Appointments

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many of those appointed to health or other public bodies since 1 May were Labour party agents in 1997 parliamentary elections, listing the constituencies. [22572]

Dr. David Clark: Information on whether those appointed to public bodies acted as party agents is not held centrally. The Commissioner for Public Appointments does require that all candidates appointed make a declaration about any public political activity they have undertaken in the last five years, and, for monitoring purposes, identify the political party concerned. The Commissioner's third report, due to be published in July 1998, will contain the declared political activity information at aggregate level.

Cycle Spaces

Mr. Brake: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many secure cycle spaces there are in his Department. [22684]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Cabinet Office (Office of Public Service) and its Agencies have a total of 198 cycling spaces in their buildings, of which 172 are secure.

CABINET OFFICE

Millennium Experience (Cycling)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio (1) what arrangements will be made at the Millennium experience for access by cycle and to protect storage of cycles; and what arrangements he has made for the design of the cycle shed; [22192]

(2) what proposals he has for cycle ways to enable the public to cycle to the Millennium Experience from central London (a) via the North Bank and (b) via the South Bank of the Thames. [22193]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company will be promoting cycling as a means of travel to the Experience as part of its access strategy. Cycle facilities, including secure storage, will be provided at the Millennium Experience site. Appropriate expert advice will be sought when designing these facilities.

The New Millennium Experience Company is contributing up to £500,000 to the costs of improving cycle and pedestrian routes in the vicinity of the Experience site. In particular there will be riverside cycle way linking to the site to "historic Greenwich", which will form part of the proposed Thames Cycle Route from Central London.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what recent assessment he has made of his answering practices in respect of his duties other than in connection with the Millennium Dome, and the guidance to Ministers provided in the Ministerial Code of Conduct. [22657]

Mr. Mandelson: I strive at all times to answer questions from hon. Members in accordance with the obligations set out in the Ministerial Code.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Lottery Grants

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the value to date of National Lottery funding of new and refurbished buildings in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland, broken down into (i) grants and (ii) matching funding. [21709]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 22 December 1997]: The National Lottery distributors estimate that some 5,805 awards worth approximately £2.78 billion have been made to help support new buildings and refurbish existing ones across the United Kingdom. A further £2.75 billion has been promised in partnership funding. A breakdown by country follows:

Country	Number of awards	Total value of awards £	Total partnership funding £
England	4,556	2,228,674,486	2,148,929,092
Wales	441	150,334,974	264,029,884
Scotland	597	238,163,783	237,297,772
Northern Ireland	211	102,002,060	103,397,786
Total	5,805	2,779,175,303	2,753,654,534

Information on National Lottery awards is now available on the Department's website www.lottery.culture.gov.uk. The information is updated on a regular basis.

Television Broadcasting and Technology

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proposals he has received from the Commission of the European Communities concerning harmonisation of legislation concerning television broadcasting and technology; what consultation took place prior to its publication; and what arrangements he has made for consultation on it in the United Kingdom. [21691]

Mr. Fisher: The European Commission published a Green paper on the regulatory implications of convergence between the telecommunications, media and information technology sectors on 3 December 1997. The Green Paper is subject to the usual consultation procedures within the Commission. The Government are consulting widely in preparing their response to the Green Paper and have specifically invited comments from interested parties involved in each of the sectors concerned.

Lottery Funding (Wales)

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proposals he has to set up a distributing body in Wales for the New Opportunities Fund; and what proposals he has to ensure that childcare proposals from Wales are adjudged for funding by criteria appropriate to Welsh circumstances. [22409]

Mr. Chris Smith: The National Lottery Bill currently before Parliament provides for the establishment of the New Opportunities Fund to distribute Lottery funds under the new good cause for health, education and the environment. Subject to Parliament's approval of the Bill, the Fund will be a UK-wide body, but the Bill provides that four of its members should make the interests of the four home countries respectively their special care. The Fund will be able to establish whatever committees it believes appropriate for the effective exercise of its functions, depending on the nature of the initiatives it is to pursue. These could include committees that would exercise the functions of the Fund in each of the home countries.

The Fund's operations will be guided by directions issued by me after consultation with colleagues, including my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, which will take into account the special circumstances and needs of all parts of the United Kingdom. Such arrangements will ensure that all funding proposals, including those for childcare, are judged against criteria appropriate to the circumstances of the country concerned.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Plutonium

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what evidence has been obtained by her or her Department of quantities of plutonium being unaccounted for at (a) Sellafield and (b) Dounreay. [22070]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 22 December 1997]: Figures for nuclear "material unaccounted for" (MUF), covering plutonium and uranium in civil nuclear plants, including Sellafield and Dounreay, have been published annually by the industry since 1977. The latest figures, for the year 1996–97, were published on 19 December 1997 (a copy of which will be placed in the Library of the House). The figures are subject to careful review by specialists in my Department, who remain satisfied that they are consistent with what would normally be expected for these types of facility and that there is no evidence to suggest that there has been any actual loss of material. Civil nuclear material in the UK is also subject to the independent oversight of international nuclear safeguards inspectorates and to rigorous physical protection measures by the nuclear operators.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 2 December, Official Report, columns 163–64, if she will list (a) the United Kingdom participants in the informal group on the management of civil plutonium, and their qualifications for participation and (b) the number and dates of meetings of the informal group; when the Government received a copy of the new guidelines to which reference is made; and when she intends to publish the details of the new national strategy for nuclear power and the nuclear fuel cycle. [22298]

Mr. Battle: The United Kingdom officials who participated in the informal group were: Department of Trade and Industry—Mr. Peter Agrell, formerly Director, Non-Proliferation, who chaired all but one meeting of the group; Mr. John Neve, Director, Non-Proliferation, who chaired the last meeting of the group on 29 September 1997; Mr. Carl Warren, Assistant Director, Nuclear Industries Directorate; and Foreign and Commonwealth Office—Mrs. Joanne Caley, Non-Proliferation Department. These officials are together responsible for the provision of policy advice to Ministers relating to the management of civil plutonium and associated non-proliferation issues.

The group met eleven times over a period of four years. The final text of the new guidelines was eventually agreed by correspondence in November 1997. I am arranging for a copy of the UK's national strategy for nuclear power and the nuclear fuel cycle to be placed in the Library of the House.

Single Market

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 25 November 1997, Official Report, column 510, what representations have been made by trade and business associations (a) within the United Kingdom and (b) within the EU requesting further community legislation on (i) road and rail passenger transport, (ii) measuring instruments, (iii) gas liberalisation and (iv) electronic commerce; and what representations have been published by (1) Her Majesty's Government and (2) the EU Commission. [22174]

Mrs. Beckett: While businesses involved in road and rail transport make representations from time to time about ongoing Community legislative proposals they have not in the main made representations requesting further legislation. In addition the CBI has recently announced that priority should be given to promoting liberalisation of EU railways.

The UK Weighting Federation (UKWF) and the Petrol Pump Manufacturers Association (PPMA) have made representations to the Department about the need for market-opening Community legislation in the field of measuring instruments. I understand that both the European Trade Associations representing the UKWF and PPMA have met the relevant Commissioner on a number of occasions to press for further Community legislation. The Government have not published any of these representations. The Government are not aware that any such representations have been published by the Commission.

Various representations were received from UK trade and business in connection with the proposed directive to liberalise the European gas market. The House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities, as part of the normal process of scrutiny of EU legislation, held an inquiry and received oral and written evidence from business. Its report, published on 18 November (7th Report, Session 1997–98, HL Paper 35) recommended a debate in the House of Lords which took place on 2 December 1997 (at columns 1313–36).

The Government have received several representations from business organisations about legislation on electronic commerce, notably on the need to avoid barriers to intra-Community trade in electronic commerce. The Government are not aware that any such representations have been published by the Commission.

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 9 December 1997, Official Report, column 528, if she will set out the material balance areas and particular safeguard provisions covering MOX nuclear fuel which are covered by the Euratom safeguards. [22346]

Mrs. Roche: At present, mixed oxide fuel (MOX) is manufactured in the United Kingdom at the MOX Demonstration Facility (MDF) at Sellafield. Particular safeguards provisions in which detailed nuclear material reporting requirements for MDF are specified have been agreed with the Euratom Safeguards Directorate. Work to finalise and implement the agreed safeguards approach for the larger Sellafield Mox Plant (SMP) is also well advanced and this work will include preparation by the Euratom Safeguards Directorate of particular safeguards provisions for SMP. An overview of nuclear materials accountancy and safeguards arrangements for SMP was presented at the Annual Meeting of the Institute of Nuclear Materials Management in July 1996 (a copy of the paper will be placed in the Library of the House). Details of specific material balance areas and the associated particular safeguards provisions are however classified and controlled for security and commercial reasons.

Departmental Payment Performance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she will publish the table of Government Departments' payment performance. [22243]

Mrs. Roche: Government departments and their agencies are required to monitor their payment performance and publish the results in their annual or departmental reports.

My hon. Friend, The Paymaster General, published the league table of Departments' payment performance for the period 1 June 1996 to 31 March 1997 on 27 November (cm 662).

Additionally, my Department will produce the league table for Departments and their agencies for the period 1 April 1997 to 31 March 1998. This will be available before the summer recess.

Satellite Navigation

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the role she envisages for UK industry in investigating the future of satellite navigation within Europe. [22241]

Mr. Battle: The UK is an important player in the European Geostationary Navigation Overlay Service (EGNOS) being developed by the European Space Agency, Leading UK space industry companies are currently negotiating for work in key technology areas such as the Central Processing Facility (CPF) and the Central Control Facility (CCF). The contract for implementation of the programme is due to start in summer 1998 with completion scheduled for 2001.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions (a) she and (b) the European Commission has had with the (i) Japanese, (ii) US and (iii) Russian authorities on the scope for co-operation in planning future satellite navigation systems. [22242]

Mr. Battle: Such discussions are carried out by the European Tripartite Group, a body consisting of members of the European Commission, the European Space Agency and EUROCONTROL. The European Tripartite Group had discussions with authorities in Russia in May 1997, the US in September 1997 and Japan in September 1997, November 1997 and December 1997. I and my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade have not considered additional discussions to be either appropriate or necessary at this stage.

Investment

Mr. David Heath: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the conduct of the pre-signatory environmental review of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment in terms of transparency and range of investment and subject matter. [22205]

Mrs. Roche: The OECD's review of foreign direct investment and the enviornment is in the form of an overview by the OECD Secretariat of recent literature on this topic. It provides a thorough analysis which will help all parties interested in the MAI better understand how international investment interacts with the enviornment. It is available on the Internet.

A further note by the OECD Secretariat on the relationship between the MAI and selected multilateral environmental agreements has just been completed and will be discussed by the MAI negotiators next week.

Both reports will contribute to further discussions between negotiating parties on the implications of the MAI for the environment.

Mink

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many mink skins have been (a) imported to and (b) exported from the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years. [22523]

Mrs. Roche: Data on UK trade in mink furskins are given in the table.

UK trade in mink furskins[1] 1987–96

Concessionary Fuel

Mr. Denis Murphy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many (a) former mineworkers and (b) mineworkers' widows are in receipt of cash-in-lieu of fuel payments in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) the North-East region. [22634]

Mr. Battle: The table gives details of beneficiaries who were in receipt of cash-in-lieu of concessionary fuel at 1 December 1997.

	Total in UK	Widows/dependants in UK[1]	Total in North-East region	Widows/dependants[1] in North-East region

Mr. Denis Murphy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many (a) former mineworkers and (b) minworkers' widows are in receipt of concessionary fuel (i) in the United Kingdom and (ii) the North-East region. [22630]

Mr. Battle: The table gives details of beneficiaries who were in receipt of concessionary fuel at 1 December 1997.

Employment Contracts

Mr. Öpik: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement regarding the right of employees to a contract of employment. [22465]

Mr. Ian McCartney: All employees have a contract of employment, which is brought into existence by an employee's acceptance of the terms and conditions of employment offered by an employer. The terms of the contract may be written, oral, implied, or a mixture of all three. In addition, most employees who are employed for one month or more have a statutory right to receive a written statement setting out the main particulars of their employment. Although the written statement is not itself a contract of employment, it can provide evidence of the terms and conditions of employment in the event of dispute.

Admiralty House

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the hourly pay rates of the cleaners employed at Admiralty house. [22652]

Mrs. Beckett: The hourly rate is £6.25.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for what reasons a washing machine and hoover were provided at her Admiralty apartment. [22649]

Mrs. Beckett: To replace those already provided which were deceased.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if her flat in Admiralty buildings is classified as secure accommodation for a Minister. [22644]

Mrs. Beckett: Yes.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the floor area of the President's apartment in the Admiralty. [22647]

Mrs. Beckett: The floor space of the one bedroom apartment is unchanged since it was occupied by Conservative or Labour Ministers, including a former holder of my post, at, I understand 318.2 sq m.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many people were invited on each occasion when she has used her apartment for official business. [22648]

Mrs. Beckett: I have, to date, hosted three official receptions at my Admiralty House apartment. The number of invitations issued on each occasion were 126, 189 and 207.

Ministerial Expenses

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 520, if she will provide a breakdown of the sum spent on the President's apartment. [22653]

Mrs. Beckett: The figures are as follows:

Description of works/purchase	Cost including VAT £
Internal decorations and installation of kitchen units	52,875
Purchase of new kitchen units, table and chairs	9,208
Domestic items	1,818
Total including VAT	64,314

Since 22 December the Department has received a bill for related project management fees of £12,314.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if her apartment in Admiralty buildings is a taxable benefit. [22645]

Mrs. Beckett: The tax treatment of my Admiralty flat is in accordance with the provisions of the Taxes Act 1988 as it applies to accommodation provided to a person by reason of their employment or the office they hold.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her Answer of 19 December 1997, Official Report, column 343, if she will provide a breakdown of the £90,000 travel budget. [22638]

Mrs. Beckett: The travel budget is not broken down further. However, a summary of main items of expenditure as at 18 November 1997 was provided in my answer to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 18 November 1997, Official Report, columns 104–05.

Genetic Engineering

Mr. Tyler: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the (a) date of appointment, (b) terms of reference and (c) membership of the focus groups established by her Department to discuss genetic engineering. [22603]

Mr. Battle: No specific focus groups have been established by my Department to discuss genetic engineering. However, I have already announced, on 24 November, the intention to hold a public consultation exercise about advances in biosciences and their implications.

The goal is to engage members of the public in debate. An important pre-cursor to this is to involve interested parties already active in the debate. I shall be hosting a meeting early this year to discuss with groups active in both biosciences and science communication how we can best develop the public activity.

Minister of State

Mr. Fallon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the businesses visited since 1 May by the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCartney), and the dates. [21138]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 16 December 1997]: Since 1 May 1997 I have visited the following companies.

	Company name
28 August	Midas, Swinton and Trafford Park
	Shimadzu/Kratos, Trafford Park
	PPG Industries, Wigan
1 September	Yuasa Automotive Batteries, Birmingham
13 October	Shell, London
22 October	Barclays Bank plc, Lombard Street, London
24 October	Photronics, Trafford Park, Manchester
30 October	Motorola, Easter Inch (near Edinburgh)
7 November	Broker Direct, Bolton
11 November	Centre for Productivity and Efficiency, Burton upon Trent
21 November	Nissho Iwai Europe plc, London

In addition, I have met with numerous companies and employer organisations both in my office and at other venues.

Inward Investment

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she plans to complete her discussion on the co-ordination of inward investment bids. [22650]

Mrs. Beckett: New arrangements on the co-ordination of proposed inward investment projects will be announced when my colleagues and I are satisfied that they represent the best way forward for all parts of the United Kingdom.

WALES

Welsh Assembly

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what will be the impact on the Welsh Assembly of the proposals in the White Paper on Open Government; and if he will make a statement. [22097]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The principles of open government will apply equally to the National Assembly for Wales. The Government of Wales Bill make specific provision for proceedings of the Assembly to be open to the public and for access to and public inspection of documents—clauses 69 and 112. These requirements will be supplemented by the Assembly's standing orders.

The Advisory Group which my right hon. Friend has appointed will be taking full account of the White paper in the advice it provides on how the standing orders should be developed.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future of town and community councils with particular reference to his proposals for the Welsh Assembly. [22096]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The Government attach particular importance to the role of town and community councils given their role as the tier of government with the closest democratic links to local people. Under the provision of the Government of Wales Bill, the National Assembly for Wales will establish a Partnership Council with local government. Membership of the Council will be determined by the Assembly in the light of consultation with, and nominations received from, associations of local authorities in Wales. This would include associations representing town and community councils.

Open Government

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in what ways he proposes to make his Department more open. [22098]

Mr. Win Griffiths: We are making the Department more open in a number of ways. We propose to make the economic powerhouse subject to the Public Bodies (Admission to Meetings) Act 1960 as a means of demonstrating our commitment to greater openness and transparency. My right hon. Friend has already opened to consultation a number of important areas, including seeking views on Welsh Office expenditure before taking decisions on budget allocations. New policies, such as the childcare strategy for Wales, are being developed with the help of independent and representative groups and through wide consultation, rather than within the confines of the Welsh Office. Openness is also a matter of culture and we have made a point of ensuring that answers to Parliamentary Questions and correspondence are as informative as possible. We will ensure that there will be further steps in the spirit of the current White Paper on Freedom of Information.

EU Assistance (Alyn and Deeside)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he will take to press for the restoration of Objective 2 Status to Alyn and Deeside; and if he will make a statement. [22100]

Mr. Hain: My right hon. Friend met Commissioner Wulf Mathies on 12 December and underlined the importance we attach in Wales to the continued receipt of Structural Funds support after 1999. The eligibility of areas such as Alyn and Deeside will, of course, be dependent on criteria that will emerge as part of the revised Structural Funds Regulations which are expected to be published in the next few months. We are already seeking to influence these and as part of this process my right hon. Friend specifically asked the Commissioner to consider the inclusion of GDP as a more appropriate measure of relative prosperity.

Medical and Dental Students

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the special support which will be made available to students who choose medicine or dentistry as a second degree. [22141]

Mr. Hain: The current rules concerning previous study will apply to all students in 1998–99. As now, a student will not be eligible for a second mandatory award if they have already been on a course for which they have had help from public funds. The awards system is intended to underwrite one opportunity to undertake a full-time course of higher education.

It is still open to local education authorities, however, to offer discretionary awards to students who fall into this category. Similarly, it is also open to these students to contact the higher education institution concerned about Access Funds.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the income derived from tuition fees from medical students will be devoted to medical school education. [22142]

Mr. Hain: All tuition fees from medical students will be available to the medical school at which they are enrolled.

Unitary Authorities (Political Affiliation)

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide a breakdown of the unitary authorities of Wales according to political affiliation. [22031]

Mr. Win Griffiths: This information is published in the "Municipal Yearbook" 1998, a copy of which will be available in the Library of the House shortly.

Schools Expenditure

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide a breakdown of the amount of money spent per pupil in each of the key stages in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Wales. [22028]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Information on expenditure per pupil is not available for key stages. The latest available data show that in Wales in 1994–95 the net revenue expenditure per pupil in LEA maintained nursery and primary schools was £1,637 and in LEA maintained secondary schools £2,264.

Farm Support

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what factors led to the delay in payment of premiums by his Department to farmers; and what measures he proposes to ensure that similar delays do not occur. [22462]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Processing of EC funded scheme payments has been delayed by the need to comply with additional EC data requirements. Any UK payments made without this supporting information would have been disallowed. The necessary computer reprogramming work is now largely complete but has unfortunately led to delays. Work is underway to implement improved information systems for the Welsh Office Agriculture Department.

Teaching Posts

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the change in the number of teaching posts in each of the local education authorities in Wales in the current financial year. [22600]

Mr. Hain: Information on the number of teaching posts in the current financial year is not yet available centrally. Figures should be available in the spring.

Schools (Spending)

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the percentage of total revenue spending dedicated to schools in each of the local education authorities in Wales during the current financial year. [22602]

Mr. Hain: The information requested is given in the table:

Schools budget as a percentage of local authority education budget and total revenue budget—1997–98[1]

	Schools as a percentage of education budget	Schools as a percentage of total budget

[1] Schools budget includes pre-primary education, other than that funded by nursery voucher provision, primary, secondary and special education, and payments to government in respect of grant maintained schools. Education budget includes schools, other continuing education, education service strategy and regulation and gross expenditure on mandatory student awards. All budgets are gross of government grants but net of income from sales, fees and charges.

Pupil Numbers

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes in pupil numbers have been recorded in each of the local education authorities in Wales over the past three years. [22601]

Mr. Hain: The information requested is shown in the table.

Full and part time pupils by local education authority: numbers and changes, 1995 to 1997

Chiropody Patients

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the age profile of NHS chiropody patients for (a) 1996–97, (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1994–95 in Wales. [22543]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The recipients of community chiropody services in Wales are predominantly people aged 65 and over, as can be seen from the table. Further breakdown by age profile is not available.

Persons treated	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Elderly persons[1]	140,470	136,438	137,264
Other[2]	34,390	23,056	34,636
Total	174,860	159,494	171,900

[1] Aged 65 and over.
[2] Includes physically handicapped/disabled, school children, and others, for example with diabetic conditions.

Research Groups

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the research assessment exercise ratings for each of the individual research groups included in the University of Aberystwyth Institute of Earth Studies RAE submission. [22212]

Mr. Hain: The research groups of the University of Wales, Aberystwyth Institute of Earth Studies were not given individual ratings.

National Referendum

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the counting procedures used in the National Referendum. [22862]

Mr. Ron Davies: Allegations have appeared in the press suggesting that the procedures for counting the votes in the referendum were defective. These allegations are false.

The counting arrangements were under the general supervision of the Chief Counting Officer, Professor Eric Sunderland, on whose appointment I consulted opposition parties. Professor Sunderland appointed Counting Officers for each of the 22 local authority areas in Wales; each Counting Officer was responsible, subject to any directions issued by the Chief Counting Officer, to make appropriate arrangements for the various counts.

Parliament provided that the referendum should be conducted in accordance with the Parliamentary Elections Rules. Counting Officers were therefore responsible, having regard to any advice issued by the Chief Counting Officer, for applying to the particular circumstances of individual ballot papers rules 47(1) and (2). These provide, inter alia, for any ballot paper which is unmarked or void for uncertainty to be rejected; but that a paper marked other than in the proper place, or otherwise by means of a cross, or by more than one mark, could be accepted as a valid vote if the voter's intention clearly emerged.

In the course of the counting on the night of 18 September, the Chief Counting Officer had occasion to issue supplementary advice on the treatment of ballot papers marked "No" opposite the "I do not agree" box. I am writing to the hon. Member separately setting out in details the circumstances as to how and why this occurred, and am placing a copy of my letter in the Library. I understand that 20 out of 22 Counting Officers followed that advice, but that the advice did not reach the Counting Officers in Pembrokeshire and Powys. The total of votes rejected in those two areas as being unmarked or void for uncertainty was 323; had the Chief Counting Officer's advice reached those Counting Officers, some of those votes might well have been added to the total of valid "No" votes. The likely consequence of 20 out of 22 Counting Officers following that advice is that the total valid "No" vote across Wales was increased by several thousands.

Counting Officers made decisions on the validity of individual ballot papers in the light of comments made by observers representing all political parties and both Yes and No campaigns. Following completion of each count, all Counting Officers were asked whether there were any special or unusual features of the count which should be drawn to the Chief Counting Officer's attention, and whether any of the observers were dissatisfied with the conduct of the count. There were no such features, and in no case were observers reported as dissatisfied with the conduct of the count. It is clear therefore that in the opinion of the independent observers scrutinising the counts, decisions made on the admissibility of doubtful votes were made fairly and properly.

Subsequently, in one authority (Caerphilly County Borough Council) complaints were made about aspects of the count. Having become aware of these in my constituency capacity, I referred them to the Counting Officer. He subsequently wrote to me confirming that the matters raised had been resolved. I understand that further queries were raised, and that the Counting Officer answered these points to the satisfaction of the inquirers in a letter dated 28 October.

Following completion of the referendum, one letter was received in my Department addressed to Professor Sunderland, complaining about delays in announcing the results from each area and also referring to spoilt ballots. Professor Sunderland's responsibilities having come to an end, the correspondent received a reply from my officials—copies are in the Libraries. The correspondent has recently written again, and will receive a full reply as soon as possible. The Welsh Office has also received one letter in the last few days addressed to Professor Sunderland referring to the recent allegations; it will be replied to by my officials. Otherwise, my Department has received no other correspondence on this matter. I am advised that no other complaints have been made to Counting Officers in any authority in Wales by any member of the public (including those who had served as observers during the various counts).

Finally, I should make clear that I have received no representations calling for an inquiry, and I have no intention of calling for an inquiry on this matter.

PRIME MINISTER

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister what guidance he has issued to government departments concerning the recruitment and retention of Black and Asian staff. [21870]

The Prime Minister: Recruitment to the Civil Service is based on the fundamental principle that appointments must be made on merit on the basis of fair and open competition.

The programme for Action to achieve equality of opportunity in the Civil Service for ethnic minority people includes guidance for Departments and Agencies about recruitment and retention. The guidance is intended to ensure that selection criteria and procedures are applied fairly and consistently to all applicants.

Social Exclusion Unit

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister what are the objectives, budget and staffing levels of the Social Exclusion Unit. [21679]

The Prime Minister: I refer to my answer of 8 December 1997, Official Report, columns 408–10, to my hon. Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Colman).

The Unit's running costs are met by contributions from the seconding Government departments or seconding or sponsoring organisations.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Prime Minister how many meetings of the EU Council of Ministers the Secretary of State for Scotland will chair during the United Kingdom presidency. [22043]

The Prime Minister: As in 1992, when the United Kingdom last held the Presidency of the EU Council of Ministers, there are no definite plans for the Secretary of State for Scotland to chair any EU Council of Ministers meetings in Brussels or Luxembourg. Scottish Office Ministers can and do attend Council Meetings on behalf of the United Kingdom and that will continue to be the case during the UK Presidency.

Cabinet Committees (Legislation)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister if it is the policy of Her Majesty's Government to refer all proposals for and the detail of primary legislation to (a) Cabinet, (b) Ministerial Cabinet committees and (c) other Cabinet committees and sub-committees. [21895]

The Prime Minister: I set out the guidance that is used to determine the means by which collective decisions are made in my answer to my hon. Friend the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 20 November 1997, Official Report, column 269. These procedures apply equally to proposals for primary legislation.

Political Modernisation

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 8 December 1997, Official Report, column 408, if he will define the modernisation of the political system. [20399]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 December 1997]: Our plans for modernising the political system were set out clearly in our General Election manifesto. Our aim is the democratic renewal of our country through decentralisation, the elimination of excessive government secrecy, and cleaning up politics. We have already begun the decentralisation of power to Scotland and Wales, endorsed by referendums. We have put forward proposals for giving Londoners a real voice through a strategic authority and directly elected mayor. We have established an independent Commission on voting systems to consider and recommend an alternative to the present for Parliamentary Elections to be put before the people in a referendum. We have brought forward a Bill to introduce proportional representation for the European Elections. We have published our proposals for a Freedom of Information Act, to transform the culture of government and make it more open and accountable. Together this amounts to significant progress in the modernisation of our political system.

Expos

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Minister, pursuant to his answer of 12 December 1997, Official Report, column 695, if he will make it his policy to assign lead responsibility for the promotion and co-ordination of bids by towns or cities in the United Kingdom to host an expo to the Department for Culture, Media and Sport. [21920]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 December 1997]: Further to my answer of 12 December 1997, Official Report, column 695, the Government would need to decide in the light of any bid which Whitehall Department was the most appropriate focal point for co-ordination.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 3 December 1997, Official Report, column 354, what assessment he has made of the limits of suffering by Iraqi children, consequent upon the imposition of a regime of sanctions, which are consistent with foreign policy based on ethical considerations. [20982]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 December 1997]: The children of Iraq have suffered greatly, as have all Iraqis, at the hands of a ruthless dictator who cares nothing for their welfare.

Unlike Saddam Hussein, we are concerned at their plight: our co-sponsorship of oil-for-food resolutions has ensured that food and medical supplies reach the people of Iraq; we have also provided £94 million in humanitarian aid since 1991, much of which is specifically dedicated to projects for children.

Christmas Tree, Downing Street

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the advantages of using photovoltaic solar energy to power the lights on the Christmas tree at Downing Street; and what representations he has received on this subject. [22060]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 December 1997]: I have not made an assessment, nor am I aware of having received any representations on this subject. However, as my hon. Friend may be aware, photovoltaics are at their least effective during the short winter days and power is needed at night when the panels would not work.

President Clinton

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Prime Minister if, when he next visits President Clinton, he will invite him to visit Scotland. [22157]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 December 1997]: It is too early to say where we will invite President Clinton to visit when he next comes to the United Kingdom.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Church Buildings (Access)

40. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what is the policy of the Church Commissioners on charging for access to church buildings. [20235]

Mr. Stuart Bell: This is not a matter for the Church Commissioners. Policy on admission charges to a church rests with the individual Parochial Church Councillor, in the case of a cathedral, with the Chapter Office. I would, however, be happy to convey any representations that the hon. Gentleman might wish to make to the appropriate authority.

Redundant Churches

41. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the hon. member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, how many redundant churches in 1990 have been sold and converted for use by other faiths. [20237]

Mr. Stuart Bell: No Church of England redundant church has been disposed of to a non-Christian denomination for worship since 1990.

Poverty

42. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Commission to ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, if he will make a statement on the expenditure on the Church Commission on Poverty. [20238]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The primary responsibility of the Church Commissioners is to provide support for the ministry of the Church of England, particularly in areas of need and opportunity. Over £14 million per annum is targeted on the needier dioceses to assist with the cost of stipends and clergy housing, on a selective basis which takes account of social and economic deprivation. The Commissioners also assist with the staffing and administrative costs of the Church Urban Fund which assists community based projects in some of the poorest areas of England's inner cities and outer estates.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Motability (Appeal)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she expects the appeal to be heard in relation to the motability claim of J. C. Markinson, at his home, because of his inability to gain access to the Appeals Tribunal building in Torbay. [22526]

Mr. Denham: Appeals in respect of claims for Disability Living Allowance are matters for the Independent Tribunal Service.

Fuel Supplement

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when pensioner households will receive the £20 fuel supplement; and if she will make a statement. [22731]

Mr. Denham: Following the announcement by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 25 November 1997, Official Report, columns 773-98, that extra help was being given to pensioners towards their winter fuel bills for this winter and next, a further announcement was made on 5 January. Regulations were laid before the House on 8 January and will come into effect on 16 January. The announcement will be quickly followed by a publicity campaign involving media advertising, posters and leaflets, in conjunction with Help The Aged, Age Concern and the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux. The publicity will ensure that pensioners are aware of what payments they will be receiving, as well as how and when it will be paid. This will enable those entitled to a payment to plan with confidence and turn up their heating knowing that a payment will be made.

The additional help of £400 million over this winter and next demonstrates the Government's commitment to help the elderly keep warm in their homes. Payments will be made automatically without the need to claim.

Priority is being given to making payments to the poorest pensioners; those who receive Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance. They will be entitled to a payment of £50 which should be made by the end of January.

Other eligible pensioners will receive a payment of £20 or £10. Where there is only one eligible person in a household, or the eligible person is of no fixed abode, they will receive £20; otherwise, each person will receive £10. If someone receives a £10 payment but there is no other eligible pensioner in the household, they will be able to contact the Department for the additional £10. It is estimated that over three million eligible pensioners will receive a payment for £20 and almost five million will receive £10.

Overall, almost 10 million payments will be made to over seven million pensioner households. This programme means that the great majority of payments will be sent by the end of March.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals are outstanding in respect of disallowment of invalidity benefit; and what is the average length of time for an appeal to be determined in the Seaham and Peterlee Benefits Agency area. [21588]

Mr. Denham: The number of appeals outstanding in Great Britain in respect of disallowance of Incapacity Benefit (which replaced Invalidity Benefit in April 1995) for the quarter ending September 1997 is around 33,000.

The Independent Tribunal Service (ITS) is unable to provide waiting time details by Benefits Agency area as such information is not routinely kept in this format.

ITS has recently installed a new computer system in all offices and across all jurisdictions. Average clearance time information cannot be produced presently owing to difficulties with the system's statistical reporting package. The President is hopeful that these difficulties will soon be fully resolved. However, the average clearance time for Great Britain remains at least six months.

We are determined to reduce the current delays and complexity in the appeals system. The Social Security Bill which paves the way for modernising the delivery of Social Security, including the handling of appeals, had its third reading in the House on 10 December and is now continuing its passage through the other place. The Secretary of State will assume responsibility for the administration of the appeals system. She will set and publish demanding targets for the administration of appeals and report on the results.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what assessment she has made of the Code of Practice on data matching published by the Audit Commission; [22131]

(2) what progress has been made by her Department with respect to the production of a Code of Practice governing the relationship between data matching and data protection; [22130]

(3) if the data matching authorised by the Social Security Administration (Fraud) Act 1997 has commenced. [22132]

Mr. Denham: The DSS Code of Practice is still being drafted. A draft revision will be offered to the Data Protection Register and others for consideration. Data matching under the terms of the Fraud Act will commence after the Code of Practice is published.

The Audit Commission publication was taken into account during the drafting of the DSS data matching Code of Practice, and cross references made where appropriate.

Young People (Income Support)

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in Sunderland aged 16 and 17 years are in receipt of income support. [22052]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Cycle Spaces

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many secure cycle spaces there are in her Department. [22680]

Mr. Field: A full breakdown of secure cycle spaces in the Department is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Such information as is available indicates that cycles could be accommodated at most locations occupied by the Department. The security of these would in the main be the responsibility of the individuals concerned.

The approximate number of designated cycle spaces available to the Department is 4,125. Of these, it is estimated that 2,750 are in areas of limited access and 1,375 are secured by the use of padlock and chain, if fitted by the cyclist.

Pensioners (VAT on Fuel)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her estimate of the average weekly post-tax income gain for a pensioner couple on the basic state pension, in 1998–99, resulting from (a) the reduction in value added tax on domestic fuel from 8 per cent. to 5 per cent. and (b) the effective downward adjustment to the pension uprating for 1998–99 resulting from the reduction in the rate of value added tax on domestic fuel from 8 per cent. to 5 per cent.; and if she will make a statement. [15956]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 18 November 1997]: We believe that all pensioners should share fairly in the increasing prosperity of the nation. Everyone will see the benefit of the reduction of VAT on fuel in their winter fuel bills. In addition, this winter and next, pensioner households in receipt of Income Support will receive an additional payment of £50 to help with fuel costs and other pensioner households will receive £20.

On average, a couple receiving the basic State Pension will be 35p a week better off at present, and 20p a week better off in real terms after the uprating, taking into account the reduction in the rate of VAT on fuel.

TREASURY

Monetary Union

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a copy of Sir Donald MacDougall's report on monetary union. [12339]

Mrs. Liddell: The "Report of the Study Group on the Role of Public Finance in the European Integration" was published in April 1977 by the Commission of the European Communities. The Study Group was chaired by Sir Donald MacDougall and the report is frequently known as the MacDougall Report. Treasury officials have been endeavouring to obtain a copy of this report from the European Commission so that it can be placed in the Library. As soon as copies become available they will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which authority and what method will determine (a) the European Central Bank's initial share capital, (b) the percentage of shares to be subscribed by each initially participating national bank, (c) the currency in which such shares will be subscribed and (d) subsequent decisions relating to any further state joining the single currency. [21255]

Mrs. Liddell: These arrangements are set out in Protocol No. 3 to the EC Treaty (on the Statute of the European System of Central Banks and of the European Central Bank), notably articles 28, 29, 48, 49 and, were the UK to decide to participate in stage 3 of EMU, paragraph 10(b) of Protocol No. 11 to the EC Treaty.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Government of France on his decision not to enter EMU in 1999. [21177]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 22 December 1997]: No formal statement has been issued by the French Government. However, French Ministers have made very positive public comments about the Chancellor's statement to Parliament of 27 October 1997, Official Report, columns 583–606.

Euro

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the euro will be legal tender in the United Kingdom. [15967]

Mrs. Liddell: The euro would become legal tender in the United Kingdom if we were to join the single currency. It will not be legal tender in the United Kingdom if it is introduced in other EU member states on 1 January 1999 as the United Kingdom will not join the single currency then. However, as with other major foreign currencies, it will be possible to use the euro in a wide range of transactions in the United Kingdom from that date.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 27 November 1997, Official Report, column 658, what representations his Department made at the time of selection of the euro symbol to ensure it was distinguishable from that for sterling where physical display of coin or note is not involved; what representations he has received from (a) software and (b) hardware specialists on problems adapting their systems to permit computer representation of the euro symbol; and if he will estimate the projected cost of implementing changes to computer systems to accommodate the euro symbol. [20315]

Mrs. Liddell: The European Commission was responsible for the design of the euro symbol. The selection was carried out by market testing a number of alternative designs with the public. The Treasury has not separately made representations on the ease with which the euro currency symbol is distinguishable from the pound sterling symbol.

The Treasury is in regular contact with representatives from the IT industry, including through the work of the Business Advisory Group on the practical implications of EMU.

The use of the symbol is not required by legislation. We expect there will be a number of options for computer users wishing to display the symbol.

Individual Savings Accounts

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the estimated administration costs to the institutions associated with individual savings accounts. [19769]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 473, to the right hon. Member for Hitchin and Harpenden (Mr. Lilley).

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if his working party on the Information Technology Implementation of European Monetary Union has assessed the need for the computer systems involved to be millennium compliant; and if he will make a statement. [20974]

Mrs. Liddell: The working party to which the hon. Member refers was commissioned by the Chancellor's Business Advisory Group to examine the Information Technology issues involved in the preparations for EMU. It has not, therefore, focused its work on the Year 2000 problem. However, the resource issues raised by the Year 2000 problem and their impact on EMU preparation have been recognised and considered by the working party.

The Government have recently set up a ministerial committee to look into the Year 2000 issue, with the public sector coordinated by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has launched the Action 2000 initiative with the aim of helping private sector businesses tackle the problem.

Population Statistics

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the likely changes in the population of the United Kingdom up to 2050 assuming no further net immigration. [21831]

Mrs. Liddell: The latest (1996-based) population projections for the United Kingdom were issued at the end of November. Details of the underlying assumptions regarding future fertility, mortality and migration were published in Population Trends 89 (page 1). Based on the same assumptions of future fertility and mortality, but assuming zero net migration from 1997–98 onwards, the future population of the United Kingdom would be as follows:

Projected population of the United Kingdom, assuming net zero future migration

Millions

Year	Projected population	Projected change since 1996
2010	59.7	+0.9
2020	60.1	+1.3
2050	55.6	–3.2

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the latest estimates by the Register General of Populations of those aged 17 years and over, plus 63 per cent. of those aged 16 years, for each district council area and parliamentary constituency in England and Wales, together with the equivalent electoral registration figures also expressed as a percentage of these population figures and in ascending order. [22292]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Harry Barnes, dated 12 January 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me, as Director of the Office for National Statistics, to reply to your recent question on the latest mid-year population estimates for each district council and parliamentary constituency in England and Wales, together with the equivalent electoral registration figures and for the electoral figures to be expressed as a percentage of the population figures.

The attached table provides the requested information for local authority districts. Also, as requested the table is presented in ascending order by the percentage of the estimated mid-1996 population who were registered to vote. The table shows that some districts are quite a bit below 100 per cent. and some are over 100 per cent. However, these percentages need to be treated with care, as there are a number of reasons why they do not necessarily represent the percentage of eligible persons who were on the register at their qualifying address. These reasons include the fact that the electoral register may not be up to date and so may contain some redundant entries for people who had already moved elsewhere or died at the time the register was compiled. The register contains some legitimate dual registrations, for example by students and owners of second homes. This table is voluminous and copies are being placed in the Library of the House rather than reproduced in Hansard.

The population estimates include residents who would be ineligible to vote and so percentages below 100 per cent. would be expected in areas where there are large numbers of such people, e.g. where there is a large American air force base. On the other hand, the electoral register but not the population estimates includes overseas voters and service voters living abroad. Finally, it must be remembered that the population data are estimates, the average absolute error of the population estimates at the local authority district level was estimated to be 2.5 per cent. in the 1995 publication "Accuracy of rolled-forward population estimates in England and Wales, 1981–91" OPCS Occasional Paper 44. This average error varies between districts and, in particular, it is generally accepted that accurate estimation of the population for small areas is particularly difficult (e.g. for areas with less than around 20,000 people).

Statistics on the number of people registered on the 1997 electoral rolls by parliamentary constituency was published on the 18 December 1997 in Series EL no. 24 "1997 Electoral Statistics", an ONS reference volume. They were first published by ONS on the 26 March 1997 in a Population and Health Monitor, series EL 97/1. Copies of these publications are available in the House of Commons library.

ONS do not produce population estimates for parliamentary constituencies. The main use of the Registrar General's population estimates is to distribute central government revenue support grant resources between local authorities and for this purpose the estimates are required by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions at local authority district level.

Unemployment

Mr. Tom King: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the unemployment percentage for each of the standard regions of England in (a) September 1981, (b) September 1985, (c) September 1989, (d) September 1993 and (e) September 1997. [21781]

Mrs Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Tom King, dated 12 January 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as the Director of the Office for National Statistics, to your recent question on the unemployment rate in each of the standard regions of England at various dates.

The ONS measure of unemployment, derived from the quarterly Labour Force Survey (LFS), is defined on a consistent and internationally recognised basis set out by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and counts as unemployed people who are: a) without a paid job; b) available to start work within the next two weeks and c) have either looked for work in the last four weeks or are waiting to start a job already obtained. The ILO unemployment rate is defined as the number ILO employed as a proportion of all those either in employment or ILO unemployed.

The ILO measure of unemployment has been used in the LFS since 1984. The LFS was conducted annually each spring between 1984 and 1991 and has been conducted quarterly since spring 1992. Tables for each Standard Statistical Region (SSR) covering the period from spring 1984 to spring 1997 are published in the Labour Force Survey Historical Supplement, a copy of which is available in the House of Commons library (ONS, December 1997, pp95-105). The ONS has recently adopted a new regional classification based on the boundaries of the Government Offices for the Regions, but there is no LFS data available on this basis prior to spring 1992.

ONS also publishes the monthly claimant count, which is based on the administrative system which records all people claiming unemployment-related benefits (i.e. Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) or National Insurance (NI) credits) at Employment Service offices on the day of the monthly count, who on that day had signed on as unemployed and available to do any suitable work. Essentially, all people who attend an Employment Service office to sign on the designated day are counted. Claimant count levels and rates are available by SSR for each of the periods specified, from Nomis which can be accessed by the House of Commons Library.

Inland Revenue

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what account the Inland Revenue policy takes of levels of unemployment and social deprivation when considering the merger or closure of its offices. [22231]

Dawn Primarolo: In considering which of its offices should merge or close, the Inland Revenue's main objectives are to improve the quality of its service to the public and to achieve cost efficiency.

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the proposed new office structures for Inland Revenue offices on (a) processing of self assessment tax returns, (b) mail clearance times, (c) clearance of CY-2 open cases, (d) the handling of telephone and fax inquiry calls, (e) the handling of debt and return management lists and (f) dealings with employer compliance system reviews. [22232]

Dawn Primarolo: All the available evidence so far indicates that taken, as a whole, the performance of new-style offices created under the Inland Revenue's restructuring programme is similar to the offices they replaced. These results are being achieved with fewer resources and reduced running costs.

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy in respect of maintaining Inland Revenue offices in areas which produce high black economy yields. [22229]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue is engaged in a major programme of change which includes restructuring its local office network. Before any office is closed under that programme, the Department and Ministers need to be satisfied that the new offices will deliver an enhanced compliance performance including maintaining or improving black economy yields.

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what factors underlie the Inland Revenue's offer proposal to close offices in the South East region. [22230]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue is engaged in a major programme of change which includes restructuring its local office network. Before any office is closed under that programme, the Department and Ministers need to be satisfied that the new offices will deliver good quality customer service, enhanced compliance performance and reduced costs.

Orange Juice

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated financial loss to the EU of duties forgone in respect of imports of Brazilian orange juice falsely labelled as made in Israel. [22194]

Dawn Primarolo: This information is not available.

Tax (Channel Islands and Isle of Man)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to discuss with the responsible authorities in the Channel Islands and in the Isle of Man the closer harmonisation of their respective tax regimes with that of the UK. [22239]

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions his Department has conducted with the authorities of the Channel Islands regarding taxation. [21328]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 17 December 1997]: The Channel Islands and the Isle of Man are responsible for their own tax laws. The UK Government maintain close contact at all levels with their dependent territories within the framework of the constitutional arrangements, on a wide range of issues, including tax matters.

Cycle Spaces

Mr. Brake: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many secure cycle spaces there are in his Department. [22688]

Mrs. Liddell: There are 60 secure covered cycle spaces in the Treasury's Headquarters building in Parliament Street and five covered spaces at its Allington Towers office.

Purchasing Power

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average purchasing power of the pound in (a) 1967, (b) 1977 and (c) 1987 relative to its current purchasing power. [22567]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr David Winnick, dated 12 January 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me, as the Director of the Office for National Statistics, to reply to your recent question on the average purchasing power of the pound in earlier years relative to its current purchasing power.

The figures requested are shown in the table below, and have been calculated using the all items Retail Prices Index (RPI). For more information on the method of calculation, you may wish to consult the RPI Business Monitor (MM23), a copy of which is held in the House of Commons library.

Internal purchasing power of the pound (pence)

	Pence
November 1997	100
1987 average	64
1977 average	29
1967 average	10

The above means that a basket of goods, which cost £1 to buy in November 1997, could have been purchased in 1987 for sixty-four pence.

European Bank for Reconstruction and Development

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the circumstances surrounding the departure or Elizabeth Bukspan from the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development. [20805]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 15 December 1997]: Elizabeth Bukspan's departure as Director for France reflected action taken by the French authorities and therefore the Chancellor is not in a position to make a statement.

Green Pound Fluctuations

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the EU programme to compensate for fluctuations in the valuation of the green pound would come from United Kingdom funds; and what estimate he has made of the total cost which this would represent. [21850]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 19 December 1997]: Under EU rules, the UK could pay up to £980 million to compensate farmers for any income effects arising from the four appreciable revaluations of the sterling green rate in 1997. Up to half of this sum—£490 million—could be reclaimed from the EU budget, with any funds in excess of this coming from the UK budget. However, because of the abatement applied to the UK's EU contribution, the Exchequer bears a significant share of new CAP expenditure in the UK which is reimbursed by the EU budget. Taking the abatement effect into account, payment of the full £980 million available to the UK would result in costs to the Exchequer of around £840 million (about 85 per cent. of the total amount).

Aging Population

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of (a) the likely long-term effects of an aging population on the economy and (b) the steps which the Treasury will need to take in response. [22063]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 22 December 1997]: The Government keep policy issues likely to arise from changing demographic patterns across the whole range of Government policy under constant review.

The Comprehensive Spending Review provides a structured framework in which all Government departments, together with the Treasury, can consider what policy action might be needed to respond to projected demographic changes over the long term.

In particular, the Government have made clear that they will address the effects of demographic change and aging in the context of its Pensions Review, launched by the Secretary of State for Social Security on July 17. The Royal Commission on Long-term Care will also have regard to demographic change in its work, as it examines and then makes recommendations on short and long-term options for a sustainable system of funding of long-term care for elderly people in the United Kingdom.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Group 4 Securities

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his Answer of 8 December 1997 to the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith), Official Report, column 434, how many of the former 40 officials of his Department who have taken paid employment with private prison contractors after leaving his Department had responsibilities in relation to overseeing, managing or inspecting private sector contracts; if he will list the (a) contracts for which they had responsibility and (b) the dates those employees left his Department and the dates they started employment in the private sector. [21585]

Ms Quin [holding answer 19 December 1997]: The information requested is not kept centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Campsfield House Detention Centre

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many serious incident forms were completed in Campsfield House Detention Centre during (a) 1993, (b) 1994, (c) 1995 and (d) 1996. [21345]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 19 December 1997]: Group Four (Total Security) Ltd. staff employed at Campsfield House detention centre routinely submit incident reports to their site managers about any event which affects the running of the centre. These reports cover incidents ranging in seriousness from the minor to the more important. The reports are copied to Immigration Service staff on site, and those which are of an urgent or serious nature receive immediate attention.

The centre opened on 29 November 1993. Accurate statistics relating to incident reports were not kept in the form requested before 1995.

In 1995, there were a total of 592 reports submitted, and in 1996 the total was 322. Records relating to the reports do not at present differentiate between the relative seriousness of the incidents to which they refer. It is expected that the report submitted by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons, following his unannounced short inspection of Campsfield House conducted in October 1997, will recommend that such a distinction should in future be made. The report will be published shortly.

Prisoner Statistics

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the per capita cost of holding a (a) male and (b) female prisoner for each prison in England and Wales in the most recent year for which figures are available. [22116]

Ms Quin [holding answer 22 December 1997]: In 1996–97, the most recent financial year for which information is available, the cost per prisoner was as follows:

Private Prisons

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many new private prisons are currently being built; and in each case what is the (a) expected date of opening and (b) planned prisoner population; [22119]

(2) how many private prisons are currently in operation in England and Wales; and for each, when it opened, where it is located and what is its current prisoner population. [22118]

Ms Quin [holding answer 22 December 1997]: Details of the six prisons in England and Wales that are managed by the private sector are as follows:

HM prison	Location	Date of opening	Population on 18 December 1997
Altcourse	Merseyside	1 December 1997	193
Blakenhurst	Worcestershire	26 May 1993	768
Buckley Hall	Greater Manchester	14 December 1994	836
Doncaster	South Yorkshire	20 June 1994	1,053
Parc	South Wales	17 November 1997	215
Wolds	Humberside	6 April 1992	402

Blakenhurst, Buckley Hall, Doncaster and the Wolds prisons were transferred from Prison Service management to private sector management on the dates shown. Altcourse and Parc were built under the Private Finance Initiative.

One prison is under construction in England and Wales under the Private Finance Initiative: Her Majesty's Prison Lowdham Grange, Nottinghamshire, which is scheduled to open by the end of February 1998 with planned capacity for 500 prisoners when it is fully operational.

Prison Workshops

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to involve private companies in (a) consulting and (b) administration in respect of the prison workshops at HMP Garth and HMP Wymott; and if he will list the companies which have been invited to tender. [22062]

Ms Quin [holding answer 22 December 1997]: As stated in my reply to my hon. Friend on 14 November 1997, Official Report, columns 688–89, there are no plans to change the arrangements for the provision and administration of prison workshops at either Garth or Wymott.

Both establishments undertake a small percentage of work for the private sector (most work undertaken is for the internal prison market). Prisoners produce and assemble a range of goods for mostly locally based companies.

Wymott is one of 18 establishments selected for additional support and funding by the Prison Service as part of the wider Prison Service Workshop Expansion Programme. In order to meet the overall aims of the programme, Wymott and Prison Service headquarters will be jointly involved in seeking additional work from the private sector. Negotiations are currently underway with a local based company, Giraffe Products Limited, for the manufacture of music stands. It is anticipated that this will be a Private Finance Initiative, requiring the company to provide additional capital for the purchase of either plant or equipment to undertake the work.

The Company's involvement is restricted to that of customer.

Young Prisoners

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of those persons aged (a) 15 and (b) 16 years have been remanded (i) in adult prisons and (ii) in total, in each month in each of the last five years; and what was the average period of detention in each year. [21600]

Ms Quin [holding answer 18 December 1997]: The information on the number of remand receptions for untried juvenile prisoners is given in the following tables, along with the estimated average periods in custody for all juvenile untried prisoners.

Lewes Prison

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons aged (i) under 15 years, (ii) under 16 years, (iii) under 17 years and (iv) under 18 years were being held in Lewes prison in each month between January 1994 and November 1997 inclusive. [21439]

Community Relations Unit

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) Black and (b) Asian people are employed in the Community Relations Unit. [21872]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Information on ethnic origin is usually collected by means of a voluntary self-classification questionnaire under an assurance that it will be used for statistical purposes only and not disclosed without the subject's consent. The Civil Service Management Code requires Departments and agencies to take appropriate steps, as described in the Model Code of Practice on Ethnic Monitoring issued by the Cabinet Office (Office of Public Service), to safeguard the confidentiality of ethnic origin data. The Model Code of Practice on Ethnic Monitoring requires that information on ethnic origin is collected on the understanding that it will be treated as confidential, and that the ethnic origin of identifiable individuals will not be made known without their consent.

Babies (Prison)

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many babies have been held in prison units in each year since 1992; what was the average time each baby spent in prison in each year; what category of prisoner was each mother; and if he will make a statement. [21535]

Ms. Quin [holding answer 18 December 1997]: Information on the number of babies accommodated in prison mother and baby units is given in the following table. Women prisoners are categorised as either suitable for closed or open prisons. The mother and baby units at Holloway. New Hall and Styal are all in closed prisons. The mother and baby unit at Askham Grange is in an open prison.

Female Prisoners

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total female prison population, by category and in total, on 1 January for each of the last 10 years; what is the current female prison population, by category and in total; and what is the projected female prison population for 1 January 1998. [21534]

Ms Quin [holding answer 18 December 1997]: The available information for the female prison population is for 31 December each year and is given in the table. The breakdown as at 30 November 1997 is also included in the table. The number of females in prison is expected to be 2,740 on 31 December 1997 (570 remand, 2,150 sentenced and 20 non-criminals).

Primate Imports

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will ban the import of primates from Indonesia; [22378]

(2) what action he has taken to investigate alleged breaches in the provision of the CITES convention in respect of the importing of primates from Indonesia. [22385]

Mr. George Howarth: Since 1996, approval for the acquisition of primates from overseas sources for use in scientific procedures has been given only if the Home Office is satisfied that the conditions at the breeding and supplying centre are acceptable. Each batch of animals acquired from overseas sources must be separately authorised and the transport arrangements approved by the Home Office.

After each batch of animals is received, the recipient must send to the Home Office:

(a) confirmation that the animals were shipped according to the prior agreement and that they arrived safely;

(b) life-time records for each individual animal;

(c) the report of the veterinary inspection on arrival; and

(d) details of any morbidity and mortality arising during the first four weeks following arrival in the United Kingdom.

An application was received during 1996 for approval to acquire macaques from a particular centre in Indonesia. A member of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate had previously visited this centre. There had been some deficiencies in the standards of care and accommodation, but these had been corrected before the application was submitted. The application was approved.

No animals have been imported into the United Kingdom from this source for over 12 months.

Recent reports emanating from the United States of America suggested that the centre had been involved in the transportation of pregnant and infant animals and that the levels of care and accommodation during transport were inadequate. A member of the Inspectorate investigated these reports during a recent visit to the United States of America and found evidence to support the allegations. Approval to acquire primates from this source for use in the United Kingdom was immediately withdrawn. Any future application to acquire animals from this centre will be considered only if the applicant can demonstrate that these problems have been rectified and will not recur.

Cycle Spaces

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many secure cycle spaces there are in his Department. [22673]

Mr. Straw: The Home Office Central London Estates provides 41 secure spaces for bicycles which meets the present demand. Figures for the rest of the Home Office estate are not available centrally and can be collected only at disproportionate cost. As a former secretary of the House of Commons cycling club, I am very willing to do all I can to facilitate the use of bicycles by staff of this Department.

Ministerial Group on the Family

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if the scope of the work of the Ministerial Group on the Family includes measures to strengthen the institution of marriage; [22713]

(2) what is the definition of family which is being used by the Ministerial Group on the Family. [22710]

Mr. Michael: The Government have a manifesto commitment to strengthen family life. The Ministerial Group is interpreting this remit widely and is not focusing on particular family structures.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish (a) the agenda for, (b) the minutes of and (c) a list of those attending the Ministerial Group on the Family. [22711]

Mr. Michael: The group comprises:

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary (Chair) and me together with:

my noble and learned Friend the Solicitor General;

my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury;

my hon. Friend the Minister for Public Health;

my hon. Friend the Minister without Portfolio;

my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Department for Education and Employment (Mr. Howarth); my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Department of Trade and Industry (Ms Roche); my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary at the Lord Chancellor's Department; my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Department of Social Security (Ms Ruddock); and the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Mr. Raynsford).

There are no plans to publish the agenda or notes of the meetings.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he plans to hold any meetings of the Ministerial Group on the Family in public. [22712]

Mr. Michael: No.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes that the Ministerial Group on the Family should produce a report. [22716]

Mr. Michael The Ministerial Group is intended to make a positive contribution to policy-making as it affects the family.

One report, on a seminar organised on behalf of the Group and entitled "Promoting Successful Parenting", is already available free from the Home Office Special Conference Unit. I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Young Remand Prisoners

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many 15 and 16-year-olds were held on remand in prison service accommodation at the most recent date for which figures are available. [22708]

Ms Quin: The information requested is given in the table. All the prisoners were male.

Persons aged 15 or 16 held in Prison Service accommodation on remand, by category of remand [1]

Age	Convicted unsentenced	Untried	Total
16	61	112	173

[1] Figures for 30 November 1997 (provisional).

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he plans to end the remands of 15 and 16-year-olds to prison accommodation; [22706]

(2) how many of the places in local authority secure accommodation which are (a) currently available and (b) planned within the next five years he plans to use for the accommodation of 15 and 16-year-olds on remand; [22705]

(3) if he plans to require (a) medical reports and (b) other reports to be obtained on 15 and 16-year-olds before they can be remanded to prison service accommodation on their physical or emotional immaturity or propensity to cause self-harm; [22707]

(4) how many new places in local authority secure accommodation have become available in each year since 1991; [22703]

(5) how many of the new places which he plans to make available in local authority secure accommodation within the next five years were not planned for on 1 May 1997; [22704]

(6) what representations he has received on the practice of remanding 15 and 16-year-olds into prison service accommodation; [22701]

(7) how many places in local authority secure accommodation he plans to make available in the next (a) five years and (b) 10 years. [22702]

Mr. Michael: The Government want earlier and more effective intervention so as to prevent young people graduating to the stage where secure accommodation is needed. The youth justice reform programme will include measures for improving the delivery of youth justice services. One of these proposals will include placing a new duty on local authorities to provide appropriate access to youth justice services and bail support which, coupled with the Government's plans to speed up the existing youth justice process, should help to reduce the existing pressures on the juvenile remand system.

There will be occasions when it is necessary for the courts to remand certain juveniles to secure accommodation for their own or the public's protection. The Crime and Disorder Bill contains proposals which begin the process of implementing a policy, which the last Government failed to do, of allowing the courts to remand direct to local authority secure accommodation certain groups of juveniles, subject to certain strict criteria. These will include all 12 to 14-year-olds, 15 and 16-year-old girls and those 15 and 16-year-old boys who are adjudged by the courts to meet the definition of vulnerability, which is within the Crime and Disorder Bill, and where a place has been identified in advance.

Before a court decides to remand in such circumstances, it will be required to consult a probation officer, a social worker or a member of a youth offending team and consider such information as is appropriate. This may include reports on the vulnerability of 15 and 16-year-olds.

In February 1991, the previous Government indicated its intention of stopping prison remands for 15 and 16-year-old boys, but failed to provide the means to that end. Although a building programme was eventually put in place to provide the 170 new secure places in local authority accommodation, which the then Government estimated as necessary in 1991 to cater for the introduction of court-ordered remands to local authority secure accommodation for all 12 to 16-year-olds, seven years later these new places are still not fully available. This programme should be completed later this year. The number of juveniles remanded in security has increased significantly since that building programme began and prison remands of 15 and 16-year-old boys now stand within the 250 and 300 range. The demand from this group alone would significantly out strip the capacity of the local authority secure estate even when the existing building programme has been completed. It would be unsafe at this stage to change the existing arrangements for these boys.

The Government hope that the Crime and Disorder Bill will receive Royal Assent by next summer at the latest. Separately, and in parallel, we are in the process of discussion with the local authority associations and others about the method of paying for such court-ordered secure remands, the cost of which will be met centrally. The intention is that courts should have these powers available for use, at the earliest, by October 1998. Once the courts begin to make use of these powers the Government will be in a better position to assess the feasibility of extending the provisions to all 15 and 16-year-old boys taking account of work by the Prison Service and others. The Government's decision does not in any way represent a lessening of its commitment to end prison remands for 15 and 16-year-old boys, which it aims to do as soon as is practicable.

Ministers have held a number of meetings with organisations, such as the Children's Society and the National Association for the Care and Rehabilitation of Offenders Remand Review Group, chaired by the hon. Member for Fareham (Sir P. Lloyd), on the issue of juvenile secure remands. The Government have also received a number of responses on this issue which was contained in their consultation paper "Tackling Delays in the Youth Justice System", published on 15 October 1997. A summary of the responses to this consultation paper has been placed in the Library.

The primary purpose of the local authority secure estate is to accommodate any child who is being looked after by the local authority under the Children Act 1989. In addition, the local authority secure estate is used to hold those who are sentenced under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 or those who are held on secure remand. Since 1991 the number of approved secure places' available in England and Wales (as at 31 March) is as follows:

Year	Places
1992	280
1993	275
1994	293
1995	270
1997	348

There are now 435 approved local authority secure places in England and Wales.

Source:

Children Accommodated in Secure Units, year ending 11 March 1997.

The Government have instituted a review of the whole range of secure accommodation for young offenders and young people held on remand, including the local authority secure estate. The review is examining how to make better use of the existing and planned accommodation to ensure that provision is more consistent and coherent and that regimes tackle criminality and meet the educational and other needs of these young people. The Government will be considering the outcome of the review, which is due to report shortly, when planning the implementation of these proposals. The review will help inform whether there should be a further expansion of the secure estate.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many 15 and 16-year-olds remanded into Prison Service accommodation (a) committed suicide and (b) were involved in incidents of self-harm in the latest year for which figures are available. [22715]

Ms Quin: There were no suicides among 15 or 16-year-olds remanded into Prison Service custody during the calendar year 1997. There were 17 reported incidents of deliberate self-harming among 15 and 16-year-olds during the same period.

Human Rights

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what conclusions he has reached on the compliance of the provisions of the Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords] with the European Convention on Human Rights; and if he will state his reasons. [22719]

Mr. Michael: My Department has given detailed consideration to the compatibility of the Bill with the Convention. I am satisfied that the Bill is compatible with the Convention and we will continue to keep the subject under review as the Bill progresses.

Young Offenders

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases involving 10 to 14-year-olds it has been necessary for the prosecution to rebut the presumption of doli incapax in the last five years. [22717]

Mr. Michael: For all prosecutions involving children under the age of 14 years, the prosecution must rebut the presumption of doli incapax. In 1996, the most recent year for which statistics are available, 7,125 children under 14 were proceeded against in the magistrate's court.[1] The presumption of doli incapax has been in force over the last five years except for a period between a Divisional court judgment in 1994, which ruled that doli incapax was no longer part of English law, and a House of Lords judgment in 1995, which re-instated it.

[1] Criminal Statistics England and Wales: Supplementary Tables 1996; Volume 1. This figure includes those who were subsequently transferred to the Crown Court.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department has commissioned in respect of the operation of the presumption of doli incapax; and if he will publish it. [22718]

Mr. Michael: None. In March 1995, the House of Lords commented (in the case of Crown v Director of Public Prosecutions) that the common law presumption of doli incapax had been inconsistently applied and was capable of producing inconsistent results, and recommended that Parliament should review its continued retention in English law. In September 1997, the Government published, as part of the consultation document "Tackling Youth Crime", their proposals to reform doli incapax, with a preference to abolish the presumption outright. The majority of respondents to that consultation exercise who commented also favoured abolition. The Crime and Disorder Bill contains the necessary legislative provisions to abolish the presumption of doli incapax.

Serious Sexual Offences Trials

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to extend the role of judges in trials involving rape and other serious sexual offences so as to permit or require them to take over the cross-examination of witnesses, with particular reference to victims. [22709]

Mr. Michael: On 13 June, we announced an urgent, wide ranging inter-departmental review of the way in which vulnerable and intimidated witnesses are treated by the criminal justice system. This includes the consideration of ways to prevent unrepresented defendants from personally cross-examining victims in rape and other serious sexual offence cases. The work of the review group is nearing completion.

Reparation Orders

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he plans to make available to victims about reparation orders when obtaining their views about the making of such an order. [22714]

Mr. Michael: Currently, the Victim's Charter explains to the victims of any criminal offence what happened after that offence has been reported to the police, and outlines the standards of service that victims of crime can expect to receive from the criminal justice agencies. In the future, in cases where the court may consider imposing a reparation order, the victim will be advised that this is the case, and his view on receiving reparation from the young offender will be sought.

The reparation order will be piloted, as set out in our White Paper "No More Excuses", published in November 1997. The pilot will allow for all aspects of the order to be evaluated and "fine-tuned", including the process of liaison with the victim. It is therefore too early to say definitively exactly what information might be given to victims when obtaining their views about receiving reparation from a young offender. However, the victims in such cases will not be asked for their view on the making of a reparation order; a victim will simply be asked whether he or she is willing to receive specific reparation from the young offender, and what form that reparation might take. There is no question of requiring victims to receive direct reparation if that is not their wish. If the victim does not with to receive such reparation, this will not preclude the making of a reparation order, as reparation may alternatively be made to the community at large.

Drug Courts

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he plans to promote (a) drug courts and (b) the sponsorship of drug courts. [22720]

Mr. George Howarth: The Crime and Disorder Bill will allow courts to impose a drug treatment and testing order which will have some of the features of the drug court systems found in America. It will give courts the power to require drug misusing offenders to undergo treatment and will provide for the use of drug testing to enable the courts to monitor the progress of offenders at review hearings. We have no plans for commercial sponsorship of this initiative.

Police (Pensions)

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many police widows there are in receipt of the preserved rate widow's pension, in each of the police forces of England and Wales; and what is the average weekly payment to them; [22297]

(2) how many retired police officers, who are in receipt of a police injury pension, are now paying tax on the element repayable to police authorities as a result of the changes brought about by the introduction of incapacity benefit; [22296]

(3) how many retired police officers there are in receipt of a police injury pension payable, as a tax free allowance, under Regulation B4 of the Police Pensions Regulations 1987. [22295]

Mr. Michael: Police Pensions Regulations are administered locally by police authorities. The information requested is not therefore available centrally and could be collected only by making inquiries of each of the 43 police forces. It could therefore be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Advisory Panel for Animal Experimentation

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the terms of reference for the Advisory Panel for Animal Experimentation; who are its members; what are their qualifications and other employments; and how often the panel meets. [22697]

Mr. George Howarth: The Advisory Panel on Animal Experiments was replaced in 1987 by the Animal Procedures Committee which was established under the terms of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

The terms of reference for the Animal Procedures Committee are set out in section 20 of the 1986 Act:

(1) It shall be the duty of the Animal Procedures Committee to advise the Secretary of State on such matters concerned with this Act and his functions under it as the Committee may determine or as may be referred to the Committee by the Secretary of State.

(2) In its consideration of any matter the Committee shall have regard both to the legitimate requirements of science and industry and to the protection of animals against avoidable suffering and unnecessary use in scientific procedures.

(3) The Committee may perform any of its functions by means of sub-committees and may co-opt as members of any sub-committee any persons considered by the Committee to be able to assist that sub-committee in its work.

(4) The Committee may promote research relevant to its functions and may obtain advice or assistance from other persons with knowledge or experience appearing to the Committee to be relevant to those functions.

(5) The Committee shall in each year make a report on its activities to the Secretary of State who shall lay copies of the report before Parliament.

The names, qualifications and other employments of the members of the Committee are listed each year in its annual report. The current membership is as follows:

Professor Margaret Brazier, LLB (Chairman)—Professor of Law, University of Manchester.

Professor Ronald Anderson, BVMS PhD MRCVS—Professor Emeritus of Animal Husbandry, University of Liverpool.

Professor Margaret Boden, FBA MA ScD PhD—Professor of Philosophy and Psychology, University of Sussex.

Dr. Yvonne Cripps, LLB LLM PhD—Reader and Director of Studies in Law, Emmanuel College Cambridge.

Professor Robin Dunbar, BA PhD—Professor of Psychology, University of Liverpool.

Professor Paul Flecknell, MA VetMB PhD DLAS DECVA MRCVS—Director, Comparative Biology Centre, the Medical School, University of Newcastle.

Mr. John Gregory, FIAT Cbiol MIBiol RAnTech—Imperial College of Science, Technology and Medicine.

Mrs. Judy Macarthur Clark, BVMS DLAS MRCVS—Director REC Europe Ltd. Consultant in laboratory animal science and ethics.

Miss Cindy Milburn, MSc—UK Director, International Fund for Animal Welfare.

Dr. Ian Purchase, BVSc PhD MRCVS FRCPath FIBiol—Director, Central Toxicology Laboratories, Zeneca.

Dr. Jacqueline Southee, PhD—Consultant in alternatives to the use of animals.

Dr. Anthony Suckling, BSc PhD—Deputy Director, Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Professor John Turner, BSc DPhil FRSA—Professor of Evolutionary Genetics, University of Leeds.

Mr. Les Ward—Director, Advocates for Animals.

We expect to announce the appointment of a new Chairman shortly and to make further appointments to the Committee within the next two months.

The Committee met on 10 occasions during 1997. The primate sub-committee met twice and the research sub-committee met on three occasions during the year. In addition, the Committee held a two-day seminar in November and several working group meetings to progress its review of the operation of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Elections

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to permit voting in national and local elections (1) to take place in venues other than traditional polling stations; [22208]

(2) what plans he has to introduce electronic voting in national and local elections. [22209]

Mr. George Howarth: The Working Party on Electoral Procedures, which I will chair, has been set up to look at these and many other questions of electoral practice.

Police (Ranks in Post)

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by police force the number of (a) constables, (b) sergeants and (c) other ranks in post on 1 January 1998. [22123]

Mr. Michael: The information collected centrally on police numbers relates to officers in post at the end of March and September each year. The table shows police numbers by rank in each force as at 30 September 1997.

Plastic Baton Guns

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 15 July 1997, Official Report, column 145, when the current review of baton gun guidelines which the Association of Chief Police Officers is conducting will be completed. [22480]

Mr. Michael: I understand that the Association of Chief Police Officers has nearly completed its review of the guidelines.

Republic of Ireland

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement regarding a bilateral agreement between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland on mutual assistance in criminal matters. [22544]

Mr. Michael: The United Kingdom has been concluding bilateral agreements with other countries since 1988 with the aim of enhancing co-operation in tracing, freezing and confiscating the proceeds of drug trafficking and other crimes. At the end of 1997, 37 such agreements had been concluded, of which 28 were in force. Negotiations on an agreement with the Republic of Ireland are underway following recent changes in legislation in the Republic.

Cycling (Fixed Penalty Offences)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to include the offence of cycling on the pavement in the list of fixed penalty offences; and if he will make a statement. [22213]

Mr. Michael: The Government intend to make cycling on the pavement a fixed penalty offence later this year. This will be done by Statutory Instrument under provisions contained in the Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988.

Re-offending

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on the collection of statistics on re-offending while in receipt of a suspended sentence; and if he will make a statement. [22590]

Mr. Michael: The Criminal Justice Act 1991 restricted the use of fully suspended sentences to cases where a court decides the offence is so serious that only an immediate custodial sentence of not more than two years imprisonment is justified, but where there are exceptional circumstances which justify its suspension. Between 1993 and 1996, fully suspended sentences accounted for less than one per cent. of those sentenced for indictable offences.

Statistics on re-offending, as measured by reconvictions, can be derived from regular samples drawn from the Offenders Index, a database of criminal careers maintained by the Home Office. For example, in a sample of those sentenced in 1991 (prior to implementation of the Criminal Justice Act 1991), 39 per cent. of those given a fully suspended sentence were reconvicted of a standard list offence within two years. Samples of those sentenced in later years have been drawn but any information on reconviction derived from these samples would be unreliable because of the small numbers of fully suspended sentences in the samples.

Information on the number of offenders breaching fully suspended sentences is collected and published annually. The most recent published data relate to those breaching fully suspended sentences in 1996 and appear in table 7.25 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1996" (Cm. 3764).

Information was published regularly on reconviction rates for standard list offences within two years of release for prisoners discharged from partly suspended sentences. However, partly suspended sentences were abolished under the provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 which was implemented on 1 October 1992. The most recent available information appears in Home Office Statistical Bulletin 5/97 "Reconvictions of Prisoners Discharged from Prison in 1993, England and Wales". There were only 27 prisoners released from such sentences in 1993.

Prison Suicides

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 10 December 1997, Official Report, column 586, on female deaths in prisons, how many prisoners in each category, in each year, were (a) on remand and (b) convicted. [22122]

Ms Quin [holding answer 22 December 1997]: The information requested is given in the following table.

Year	Female[1] prisoners held	Rx	Sent	Female deaths	Rx	Sent	Female S.I.D.S	Rx	Sent
1988	1,789	507	1,282	0	—	—	0	—	—

Rx = Remand.
Sent = Convicted.
S.I.D.S = Self-inflicted deaths.

Not all self-inflicted deaths conclude with a verdict of suicide.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Higher Education

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list those access courses that are designed for entry to specific higher education courses. [22102]

Dr. Howells: The Secretary of State publishes a list each year of courses of further education which are approved under Schedule 2(c) of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 and which are eligible for funding. Such courses are commonly known as access courses. I have placed a copy of the current list in the Library.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students currently in higher education have completed an access or foundation course. [22104]

Dr. Howells: The numbers of entrants to higher education with an Access or Foundation course as the highest entry qualification over the last three years were:

1996: 22,950.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the total number of students currently enrolled on (a) access and (b) foundation courses; and if he will make a statement. [22101]

Dr. Howells: The information requested is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, publications by the Quality Assurance Agency for Higher Education suggest that there are around 30,000 students taking part in some 1,200 access courses in England.

Study and Training Leave

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of allowing certain employers exemption from the requirement to permit employees aged 16 or 17 years the right to time off for study or training. [22371]

Dr. Howells: The legislation proposed in clauses 23 and 24 of the Teaching and Higher Education Bill will apply to all employers. The Government will continue to work with employers, and other key partners, to build on existing good practice, so that the legislation can be implemented in a way that is both sensible and flexible, and attains its objective of enabling all young people who are able to achieve qualifications at Level 2 (whether National Vocational Qualification or equivalent).

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to exempt employers who offer in-house training for employees aged 16 and 17 years from the requirement to allow such employees time off for study or training; and if he will make a statement. [22369]

Dr. Howells: The long-term aim of this Government is that all young people who are able should achieve qualifications at least at Level 2 (whether National Vocational Qualification or equivalent), to equip them for the world of work. The legislation proposed in the Teaching and Higher Education Bill will apply to all employers. No employer will be exempt, but in-house training during the employee's working hours which leads to a relevant qualification, and which meets the requirements of reasonableness that are set out, will enable the employer to meet his obligations under the proposed legislation.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to reduce grant in aid to the Equal Opportunities Commission. [22235]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Chorley (Mr. Hoyle) on 18 December 1997, Official Report, column 252.

Youth Training

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many young people in Sunderland in receipt of youth training bridging allowance receive jobseeker's allowance. [22051]

Dr. Howells: No young person in Sunderland was in receipt of both allowances in the week ending 5 December, the latest period for which data are available.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which TECs have set (a) higher minimum levels of training allowance for non-employed trainees than the minimum permitted and (b) more than the 19.5 days per annum holiday; and if he will make a statement. [22047]

Dr. Howells: TECs are free to set allowances above the minimum and to determine holiday entitlements for non-employed trainees in conjunction with training providers. Information of TEC practice in this connection is not held centrally.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to increase the minimum weekly training allowance for youth training. [22046]

Dr. Howells: The level of training allowance is under review.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what would be the present minimum weekly training allowance for youth training if it had been uprated in line with inflation since 1990. [22049]

Dr. Howells: The present minimum weekly training allowance, which is frequently supplemented by employers, would be £40.69 for 16-year-olds and £47.47 for 17-year-olds and above if it had been uprated in line with inflation since 1990.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the numbers and percentages of young people in Sunderland who are participating in youth training and the percentage who are receiving more than the minimum allowance from employers or training providers. [22050]

Dr. Howells: Around 3,000 young people in Sunderland are currently participating in work-based training for young people, representing about 40 per cent. of the 16 to 17-year-old population. Information on those who are receiving more than the minimum allowance in Sunderland is not available. Nationally, around two-thirds of young people in work-based training receive a wage or an allowance topped up above the minimum.

Student Fees

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to remove HEFC grant from those universities which fail to collect the student fee element. [22370]

Dr. Howells: Given the concern that has been expressed by universities about the reduction in public funding per student since 1989, it would be surprising if many decided that they could forgo tuition fees for a substantial number of students. However, where a university has extensive private income—for instance, from business sponsorship—which it can use to reduce or waive fees without affecting the quality of its provision, then we would not seek to intervene.

Special Needs

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the measures in the Green Paper "Excellence for All Children" which strengthen the present legal framework of protection of the rights of children with special needs; and if he will make a statement. [22699]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Green Paper does not propose changes to the fundamental legal framework for Special Educational Needs (SEN). Parents will continue to have the right to seek a statutory assessment and a statement of SEN for their child; their rights would be strengthened through our proposal that an independent adviser should be available to all parents whose children's needs are being formally assessed. We want parents to have greater assurance of effective intervention at the school-based stages of the SEN Code of Practice, with support from local education authorities. This emphasis on early practical support should in time mean that fewer children need to move onto a statement.

Child Care

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many additional childcare places he expects to become available under the Government's £300 million initiative in (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000 and (c) 2000–01. [22367]

Mr. Alan Howarth: It is too early to give detailed information of this kind. The £300 million is made up of £30 million from the receipts of the Windfall Tax in 1998–99, £50 million under the Out of School Childcare initiative over five years from 1998–99, £220 million from the New Opportunities Fund over three years from 1999–2003. We expect that most of the funding will be allocated in response to bids and plans which originate at local level. The intention is that there should be a project in every community which needs it, providing places for up to a million children in total.

After-school Clubs

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his policy towards after-school clubs for under-eights. [22593]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Government are committed to improving the quality and quantity of out of school childcare as part of our development of a national childcare strategy. We have made £300 million available over the next five years which will provide out of school child care to every community in Britain which needs it.

Circulars

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will review each of his Department's circulars issued to education authorities which are still in force; and if he will make a statement. [22260]

Mr. Byers: The Department reviews circulars when changes in the law or policy supersede the guidance they contain.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is her estimate of the expenditure by (a) her Department, (b) its agencies and (c) its non-departmental public bodies on overseas travel for (i) 1980–81, (ii) 1987–88, (iii) 1990–91, (iv) 1991–92, (v) 1992–93, (vi) 1993–94, (vii) 1994–95, (viii) 1995–96, (ix) 1996–97 and (x) 1 May to 30 September 1997; and if she will provide a breakdown to show (1) air fares and (2) other expenditure relating to overseas travel. [15251]

Mr. Murphy [holding answer 11 November 1997]: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, information on all travel and associated expenses for the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments and Agencies is listed[1,2,3]:

1990–91	[4]6,932
1991–92	14,555
1992–93	[4]7,619
1993–94	16,380
1994–95	15,301
1995–96	16,205
1996–97	16,991
1997–98	7,105 (1 May to 30 September)

[1] Information on NDPBs could be provided only at disproportionate costs.

[2] Information for 1980–81 and 1987–88 is not available.

[3] Northern Ireland Office figures include Personnel Services (Belfast) and NI Prison Service for 1990–91 to 1997–98 and also the Forensic Agency of NI for 1991–92 to 1997–98.

[4] The Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Environment could not provide information for 1990–91 and 1992–93 without incurring disproportionate costs.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) special advisers, (b) task force members and (c) review body members her Department employs; what is the total salary and benefits of (a) to (c); and what was the equivalent cost prior to 1 May. [19314]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information for the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments is as follows:

	Since 1 May		Prior to 1 May
	Number	Cost (£)	Number	Cost (£)
(a) Special Advisers	2	52,686	1	35,746
(b) Task Force Members[1]	Nil	—	—	—
(c) Review Body Members[1]	1	2,655 (annually)	1	2,655 (annually)

In addition, two civil servants are currently seconded to work on a Pay and Grading Review in the Northern Ireland Prison Service at a cost of £109,000. In 1996–97, three civil servants were seconded to this work, at a cost of £121,000.

[1] With the exception of the Review in the Northern Ireland Prison Service, it is not possible to distinguish the cost of officials time spent on Task Force and Review Related work.

Flax Trust, Belfast

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list (a) the sources and (b) the amount of funding made available to the Flax Trust, Belfast in the current and previous financial year; and if any of these funds were (i) intended for and (ii) used by the Golden Thread Arts Theatre. [20005]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Department of Health and Social Services provides funding towards the cost of a project run by the Flax Trust through the Community Volunteering Scheme, which is administered on behalf of the Department by the Northern Ireland Volunteer Development Agency. In 1996–97 this amounted to £28,506. The same amount has been set aside for the project in 1997–98, of which £21,380 has been paid to date. The Golden Thread Art Theatre does not receive any funding from the Community Volunteering Scheme.

T&EA Belfast Region has no direct contractural arrangements with the Flax Trust; however the Trust is an overarching organisation for a number of initiatives in the Ardoyne area, and two of these are directly involved with the Agency.

(a) Brookfield Business School (BBS) is a Jobskills Training Organisation based in the Brookfield Mill complex. BBS offers training for young people and adults in Catering, Information Technology, Welding and Business Administration. T&EA provided funding of £347,081 in 1996–97 and £240,213 in the current financial year.

(b) Community Aid is a 117 place ACE project in the Ardoyne area, offering employment in Environmental, Clerical, Computing, Welfare, Home Visitation and Creche work. T&EA provided funding of £712,857 in 1996–97 and £351,445 in the current financial year.

Police

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many complaints were made against the police; what is the ratio of the number of complaints to (a) the population of the jurisdiction, (b) the number of police officers and (c) the number investigated; how many of these complaints were investigated; how many investigations led to the instigation of disciplinary proceedings against officers; what is the ratio of proceedings instigated to complaints made; how many disciplinary proceedings led to disciplinary action; and what is the ratio of disciplinary action to complaints made for the last year for which figures are available. [19500]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 10 December 1997]: The available information for Northern Ireland, in relation to complaints made and completed in 1996 is given below. Number of complaints received: 4,429.

(a) Ratio of complaints to the population: 1 : 376.

(b) Ratio of complaints to number of officers at 30 November 1997 (including Full Time and Part Time Reserve): 1 : 2.89.

(c) Ratio of complaints received to the number of complaints fully investigated in 1996 is 1 : 0.45 (Complaints recorded in a year are not necessarily completed in that year; and the number of complaints investigated includes some originating in earlier years. Also, the figure for investigated complaints does not include complaints withdrawn, informally resolved or deemed incapable of investigation. It is not possible to give a figure for the number of complaints received in 1996 which were investigated in 1996, as the figures on completion can relate to cases originating in earlier years).

Two thousand and eleven complaints were fully investigated in 1996 and 10 completed investigations led to disciplinary proceedings against officers.

The ratio of disciplinary proceedings to complaints made against officers is 0.003 : 1. (The disciplinary proceedings may have arisen from complaints originating in earlier years; some investigations led to more than one officer facing disciplinary action).

Six officers received disciplinary action following disciplinary hearings arising from investigations completed in 1996. These figures may contain proceedings from complaints made in earlier years. The ratio of disciplinary action to the number of complaints is 0.0014 : 1.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Police Authority for Northern Ireland purchased the Seapark complex at Carrickfergus; what the purchase price was; what professional surveys and advice were obtained; and what amounts have since been spent in adapting and developing the complex. [20795]

Mr. Ingram: The Police Authority signed the contract to purchase the Seapark Complex, Carrickfergus, on 4 March 1988.

The agreed purchase price was £660,000.

In February 1987 the Authority commissioned a professional architectural, structural, mechanical and electrical condition survey of the Seapark premises.

Since 1988 the Authority has spent a total of £5.9 million on various projects.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the (a) location, (b) extent and (c) effects of the discovery of asbestos in the Police Authority's Seapark complex, and what estimate she has made of the cost of stores (i) cleaned and (ii) disposed of and the cost of surveys and other remedial work to deal with the asbestos problem. [20797]

Mr. Ingram: Asbestos, primarily in the form of asbestos/cement roof and wall panels, is present extensively throughout the former factory and boiler house areas of the Seapark complex.

Asbestos based material was also present in ceiling tiles and is present in pipe and duct lagging within certain roof voids.

The discovery of asbestos contamination led to the closure of all contaminated areas and required the relocation of staff, equipment and functions.

The cost of cleaning re-usable stores items and equipment totals £802,080 and the value of stores disposed of as a direct result of asbestos contaminated amounts to £579,760.

The cost of surveys and other remedial work to deal with the asbestos problem is £829,243.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who was the vendor of the Seapark complex at Carrickfergus when it was purchased by the Police Authority for Northern Ireland. [20799]

Mr. Ingram: The vendor of the Seapark complex was Rothmans International PLC.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who was involved in the decision to identify and evaluate the premises which led to the Police Authority for Northern Ireland purchasing the former Carreras Tobacco plant at Seapark, Carrickfergus. [20796]

Mr. Ingram: The availability of the former Rothmans/Carreras factory at Seapark was first identified by senior officials in the Police Authority in December 1986. There then followed a period of evaluation of the premises.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations she has received from the (a) Police Authority and (b) Chief Constable for legislation on the role and responsibilities of the Police Federation for Northern Ireland. [20791]

Mr. Ingram: The Secretary of State has received no representations from either the Police Authority or the Chief Constable on the role and responsibilities of the Police Federation for Northern Ireland.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures she will take to ensure that the Police Authority protects the health and safety of all staff at the Seapark complex and fully discloses the extent and implications of the discovery of asbestos in the complex. [20798]

Mr. Ingram: Assurances have been received from the Police Authority that it has taken, and will continue to take, whatever measures are necessary to protect the health and safety of all staff at the Seapark complex.

Following the discovery of asbestos contamination at Seapark, a programme involving re-location, de-contamination and remedial works was implemented.

Staff and the staff associations were informed about the contamination and, since that time, weekly tests have been carried out for the continuing reassurance of staff.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will encourage the Police Authority and RUC jointly to undertake a comprehensive fair employment audit and action plan and publish it. [20907]

Mr. Ingram: Both the Police Authority and the RUC already furnish the Fair Employment Commission with regular reviews of their employment composition and practices in accordance with the obligations placed on employers under Section 31 of the Fair Employment (NI) Act 1989.

Both bodies take seriously their responsibilities under the legislation and I am not convinced that an audit is required.

RUC Garnerville (Union Flag)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what factors determine the length of time the Union flag is flown at RUC Garnerville; and if she will review the practice. [20764]

Mr. Ingram: The Union flag has traditionally been flown at the RUC Training Centre on week-days during the hours of 8 am to 5 pm. The flying of the Union flag over police establishments in Northern Ireland is a matter to be dealt with by the Chief Constable.

Schools Funding

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if DENI's proposal that the premises factor in the LMS formulae should relate solely to the area of the premises will be implemented for 1998–99. [21226]

Mr. Worthington: Following extensive consultation with Education and Library Boards and schools, the original proposals for LMS funding have now been amended to ensure that over a period of years we progress towards commonality and transparent fairness of funding of schools in Northern Ireland. This means that in some cases in 1998–99 the determination of the premises factor will not relate solely to the area of premises.

Low Pay

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many full-time employees in her Department are paid at an hourly rate of between (a) £3.27 and £3.50, (b) £3.51 and £3.75 and (c) £3.76 and £4. [20613]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 15 December 1997]: The information for the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments is as follows:

Hourly rate	Employees
(a) £3.27 to £3.50	1,500
(b) £3.51 to £3.75	329
(c) £3.76 to £4.00	390

Pensions

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps she will take to protect pensioners resident in Northern Ireland who receive their pensions from the Republic of Ireland against the impact of currency fluctuations. [21385]

Mr. Worthington: None. This is a matter for the Republic of Ireland who determine the rate of pension to be paid.

Mr. Jackie Mahood

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the RUC investigation into the attempted murder of Mr. Jackie Mahood. [21511]

Mr. Ingram: The attempted murder of Mr. Mahood is currently the subject of an investigation by the RUC and is therefore sub judice.

Farm Improvements

Mrs. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to continue the SPARD programme for improvements on farms after 1999. [21637]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Any decision about a future SPARD (Capital Grants) Scheme will be based on an assessment of the needs of the industry and an evaluation of the current scheme which, while closed to new applications is still being administered. Additionally, as a scheme with co-funding from the European Community it will need to address any agreements reached on foot of Agenda 2000.

Beef Export Ban

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps she is taking to ensure that the export ban on Northern Ireland produced beef is removed. [21628]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Government have had exhaustive discussions with the European Commission over the last few months on the Export Certified Herd Scheme (ECHS). We have offered changes to meet all the main points of concern.

We are hopeful that the Commission will put a proposal on ECHS to the Standing Veterinary Committee on 14–15 January.

The Government are also in discussion with the Commission on the proposals on the Date Based Scheme which was submitted to the Commission in October. We are pursuing this Scheme with just as much urgency as the Certified Herd Scheme.

Guardsmen Fisher and Wright

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the factors in addition to the advice of the Life Sentence Review Board which led her to reach her decision on the cases of Guardsmen Fisher and Wright; and if she will make a statement. [20981]

Marjorie Mowlam [holding answer 22 December 1997]: The two Guardsmen were each provided with a written gist of my considerations of their cases at the time that my decision was conveyed to them by the Northern Ireland Prison Service. A copy of the relevant extract from the letter is reproduced as follows.

"Gist of the Secretary of State's considerations

The Secretary of State carefully considered all the currently available information and reports about your case in the knowledge of the confidential recommendation of the Review Board. She also considered at length all the available information about the other cases identified. However, the Secretary of State concluded that while it was useful to recall the other cases and to be aware of their outcomes, and the reasons for them, in so far as they are known, they lent little assistance to the deliberations given the full facts of your particular case. The Secretary of State also felt that the information relating to Manslaughter cases and other serious crimes other than murder covered such a wide range that they were also not particularly helpful or relevant.

The Secretary of State also considered the formal representations from your Solicitor along with the other correspondence received about your case.

Looking therefore at your case on its own individual merits the Secretary of State weighed up the various competing mitigating and aggravating factors. The Secretary of State noted that there was no agreement as to who fired first. She concluded that this factor, which could be variously viewed as mitigating or aggravating, was of minor significance. She concluded that a gravely serious crime had been committed which resulted in the death of an unarmed youth who was running away from your patrol in circumstances where the Courts found that there was no lawful justification for the shooting. She also acknowledged, however, the difficult background against which the offence had been committed in which you were operating during the course of your duty and the fact that there was no premeditation. She decided that, given all the available facts of your case, you have not yet served a period sufficient to reflect the seriousness of the crime. She therefore decided to invite the Life Sentence Review Board to consider your case again in one year's time when you will have served approximately six years.

I must of course, advise you, without prejudice to whatever recommendation that the Review Board may come to next year, that a deferral of your case for this period is not an indication that release will be appropriate at that time."

I would assure the House that the consideration that has been given to these cases by all those who are involved in the life sentence review process has been scrupulous. These are very serious matters and the cases have been carefully and thoroughly considered on the basis of the facts as adduced by the Courts. They have been dealt with strictly on their own merits and I can assure the House that no extraneous considerations, political or otherwise, have been permitted to influence my decision.

Prisoners (Head Counts)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the dates and times of the last five full head counts of prisoners in each prison in Northern Ireland indicating for each such count whether the prisoners were locked in their cells at the time or outside their cells. [22175]

Mr. Ingram: With the exception of HMP Maze, head counts are carried out at frequent and regular intervals both in and out of cell. There are a minimum of five head counts in any period of 24 hours and these are detailed for the last 24 hours. At HMP Maze however, two head counts are carried out per day and prisoners are locked in the block but not in the cells.

Head counts—HMP Magilligan

08.00: Prisoners locked in cell

12.30: (lunchtime) Prisoners locked in cell

16.30: (return from work) Prisoners locked in cell

17.30: (teatime) Prisoners locked in cell

20.30: Prisoners locked in cell

Prisoners are checked approximately every two hours during the night in cell.

Head counts—HM Young Offenders Centre

08.00: (two checks) nightguard and day staff—Prisoners locked in cell

09.30: (before work) Prisoners not locked

12.45: (lunchtime) Prisoners locked in cell

13.30: (unlock) Prisoners locked in cell

16.00: (lock up) Prisoners locked in cell

16.45: (unlock) Prisoners locked in cell

20.00: (lock up) day staff—Prisoners locked in cell

21.30: (nightguard) Prisoners locked in cell

Head counts continue during the night at irregular intervals.

Head counts—HMP Maghaberry

08.00: (unlock) Prisoners locked in cell

12.30: (lunch) Some prisoners are locked in cell and some are in the exercise yards or out with work parties

14.00: (unlock) Same as 12.30 above

16.30: (lock up) Prisoners locked in cell

17.30: (unlock) Prisoners locked in cell

20.30: (lock up) Prisoners locked in cell

In addition, regular cell checks are carried out by the nightguard every hour.

Head counts—HMP Maze

08.30: approximately

19.30: approximately

Prisoners are locked in the blocks but not in their cells.

HM YOC is not a prison under the terms of the Act, but as the establishment is the responsibility of the NIPS it has been included in the answer.

Preparatory Schools

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the proposals to cut funding for preparatory schools in Northern Ireland were subjected to a policy appraisal and fair treatment analysis; and what were the results. [22256]

Mr. Worthington: A Policy Appraisal and Fair Treatment analysis is currently being carried out concurrent with the analysis of all the comments received during the consultation process. This analysis will be an integral part of the final decision making process.

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what research she has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the impact of the proposed reductions in funding for preparatory schools in Northern Ireland upon the viability of such schools; and what were the findings of this research. [22257]

Mr. Worthington: As part of the consultative process, each school with a preparatory department was asked to provide an assessment of the impact the proposed funding changes would have on the existing and future pupil numbers and the ongoing viability of the school. Responses are currently under consideration.

Fair Employment Commission

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the classes or groups of employers for which the Fair Employment Commission does not require that information about the religious and community background of its work force be published below the level of the organisation as a whole; and what are the criteria which an employer has to meet to receive such status. [22219]

Mr. Ingram: The FEC does not publish information on the religious composition of any employers' workforce below the level of the workforce as a whole.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the organisations for which the Fair Employment Commission only requires information on the religious and community background of the workforce as a whole. [22220]

Mr. Ingram: There are none. All registered employers must submit to the Commission annual monitoring returns showing the community composition of their overall workforce and the composition in nine standard occupational classifications.

Prison Escape

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what reports she has received on the time and method of the escape of Liam Averill from prison, other then the information given to the prison authorities by the person claiming to be the spokesman for the IRA in the prison. [22203]

Mr. Ingram: Shortly after the escape, I received reports from the Governor of HMP Maze and from the Chief Executive of the NI Prison Service. I then initiated a full inquiry, the result of which will be published in due course.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the RUC stations which she has visited since she took up her present Ministerial responsibilities. [22177]

Mr. Ingram: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has visited the following RUC stations since taking up her present Ministerial responsibilities:

Lurgan
Strand Road
Newtownabbey
Dungannon
Musgrave Street
Ballymoney

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will place in the Library a copy of the survey recommended by Her Majesty's Inspector for Constabulary on religious harassment within the RUC. [20793]

Mr. Ingram: I have today placed in the Library of the House a copy of the survey recommended by Her Majesty's Inspector for Constabulary on religious harassment within the RUC.

Plastic Baton Rounds

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer of 15 July 1997, Official Report, column 145, whether the army is participating in the review of baton gun guidelines which the Association of Chief Police Officers is conducting. [22481]

Mr. Ingram: The Army is not participating in the review being conducted by the Association of Chief Police Officers, but will consider any recommendations from that review with regard to its own guidelines on the use of baton guns.

Police Authority

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will amend the Police (Northern Ireland) Bill to require the Police Authority for Northern Ireland to hold its meetings in public and publish minutes for public inspection. [21050]

Mr. Ingram: The Secretary of State has no immediate plans to amend the Police (Northern Ireland) Bill so that the Police Authority is required to hold its meetings in public and publish minutes for public inspection.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps the Police Authority for Northern Ireland is taking to prepare and plan for its meetings to be held in public. [21049]

Mr. Ingram: The Police Authority's Code of Openness and Accountability, published on 8 April 1997, sets out its policy on public access to meetings and minutes. The Code commits the Authority to holding a well-publicised annual meeting open to the public. In December 1997, two such meetings were held in Belfast and Londonderry. The minutes of the Authority's monthly meeting with the Chief Constable are made available for public inspection and copies are issued to the media.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Cycle Spaces

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many secure cycle spaces there are in her Department. [22683]

Clare Short: There are secure spaces for 28 bicycles at the Department's London office and 10 at the office in East Kilbride. Additional spaces could be made available in both locations if there were increased demand.

Aid (Rules for Use)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what factors influenced the Government's decision to offer developing countries greater flexibility in the use of aid; and what measures she proposes to prevent aid being used for military purchases. [22469]

Clare Short: Our new emphasis on poverty elimination highlights the importance of entering deeper and long-term partnerships with those poorer countries who share our commitment to the international development targets through the adoption of sensible economic, social and political policies. A key feature of the UK's relationships with our developing country partners is to ensure that the latter play a full part in the planning, implementation and evaluation of development projects in their countries.

There is not and will not be any link between aid and sales of British arms equipment.

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what terms Her Majesty's Government require to be met before signing up to the Multilateral Agreement on Investment; and what safeguards Her Majesty's Government will require for developing countries. [22431]

Clare Short: The Government will be seeking a Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI) with a satisfactory balance of commitments from each negotiating partner. The MAI is not designed for poorer developing countries but it could become a model, and we are supporting consultation with them on how their needs can be taken into account. My Department is commissioning a study to look at any implications the MAI may have for these countries.

Denver Summit

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what estimate she has made of the extra spending obligations arising from the Prime Minister's policy announced at the Denver Summit in relation to overseas aid; and from what budget extra resources will come. [22470]

Clare Short: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced an increase by 50 per cent. of our bilateral commitments for basic education, health care and clean water in the sub-Saharan Africa. This means my Department will commit at least £360 million over the next three years in these areas compared with £240 million in the previous three. Funds will come from existing resources and will be found by giving higher priority to programmes to combat poverty.

Bilateral Aid (Africa)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much bilateral aid has been given for (a) health care, (b) education and (c) clean water in Africa in each of the last three years; and what is the estimated level for the next three years. [22468]

Clare Short: Over the last three years we have committed £240 million bilateral aid to health care, education and clean water in Africa and of this we have so far actually spent the following amounts:

£ million

	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Health care	19.0	35.8	32.6
Education	2.9	21.2	6.7
Water and sanitation	7.2	8.2	12.5

At the G7/8 Denver Summit in June last year my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister, announced that we would increase by 50 per cent. our commitments on basic education, health care and clean water over the next three years. We intend, therefore, to commit at least £360 million over the next three years to meet these targets.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beef

Sir George Young: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from independent butchers about deboning costs. [21376]

Mr. Rooker: A number of organisations consulted about the legislative proposals to require the deboning of all beef, whether from home supplies or imported, coming from cattle over six months old, before it is sold to the consumer, drew attention to the cost of deboning in their responses. Copies of all the responses received and considered before the Beef Bones Regulations 1997 were made have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to ensure that beef labelled as produced in Britain is not merely processed in the United Kingdom. [22441]

Mr. Rooker: The Beef Labelling Scheme, which takes full effect from 31 March 1998 will require retailers and others selling beef to consumers which is labelled "British" to seek prior approval from a competent authority for use of the term. To obtain approval, such operators will have to demonstrate that beef labelled "British" is derived from animals born, reared and slaughtered in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library details of the representations he has received from (a) representative bodies and (b) others on his proposals to ban beef on the bone. [22286]

Mr. John Cunningham: Copies of all the responses received and considered following the formal consultation on legislative proposals to require the deboning of all beef, whether from home supplies or imported, coming from cattle over six months old, before it is sold to the consumer, were placed in the Library of the House on 22 December 1997.

Mr. Hogg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library the advice that he received from Sir Kenneth Calman regarding the health risks posed by beef on the bone. [22494]

Mr. Rooker: A statement by Sir Kenneth Calman in which he outlined his advice to Ministers was published in a press release by the Department of Health on 5 December 1997. As is usual practice, a copy was placed in the Library of the House at the same time.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he considered to ensure that all beef on the bone products are clearly identified and sold with suitable warnings of the risk of CJD infection; and what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of such measures as an alternative to the ban on the sale of beef on the bone products. [20505]

Mr. Rooker: We carefully considered the advice which was received from the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee on the safety of bone-in beef, including making their assessment public and leaving it for consumers to decide whether or not to continue purchasing such products. Taking account of the views of the Chief Medical Officer, we concluded that further action was necessary on a precautionary basis, and, following consultation with interested organisations, have introduced a prohibition on the sale of bone-in beef products in the Beef Bones Regulations 1997.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action has been taken in other EU countries to regulate the sale of bone-in beef. [21040]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 16 December 1997]: The precautionary action taken in the United Kingdom to prohibit the sale of bone-in beef in the interest of consumer safety, together with the full advice from the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee, was notified to the European Commission immediately. It was subsequently considered by the Scientific Steering Committee in Brussels who are continuing to review the scientific evidence in the light of their initial assessment. In the meantime, any action in individual Member States is a matter for their authorities. We understand, however, that Belgium is considering a ban on bone-in beef from early in 1998, and the Irish Republic has given a strong warning about the risks of eating bone-in beef to its citizens but taken no further action.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect of the ban on bone-in beef upon catering establishments specialising in such products. [21201]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 16 December 1997]: Comments received by the deadline from those consulted, including the catering industry, on the proposed legislation to implement a ban on bone-in beef, were all carefully considered before the Beef Bone Regulations 1997 were made and presented to Parliament. The accompanying Regulatory Appraisal sets out our best assessment of the impact of this legislation on those sectors directly affected, based on the information available to us at the time. A copy is available in the Library of the House, and on the MAFF Internet site.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he was first notified of SEAC's recommendations on beef on-the-bone. [21608]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 18 December 1997]: My right hon. Friend received SEAC's recommendations on bone-in beef just before 9.00 am on Wednesday 3 December 1997.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to ensure that imported beef supplied to schools meets the (a) meat safety and (b) animal welfare standards required of United Kingdom producers. [21603]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 18 December 1997]: The sourcing of food supplied to schools is a matter for the appropriate education authorities and governing bodies. Health provisions concerning the beef available on the British market are set at the EU level, and animal welfare provisions in both EU and Council of Europe measures. From the 1 January 1998, all beef entering the UK food chain is required to meet the UK SRM (specified risk material) controls.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the advantages of exempting beef from cattle born after 1 August 1996 from the ban on beef on-the-bone; and if he will make a statement. [21598]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 18 December 1997]: Consideration was given to such an exemption. However, as my right hon. Friend indicated in his statement to the House on 3 December 1997, Official Report, columns 372-89, this would give rise to considerable problems of identification and enforcement. We therefore concluded that, to avoid any possibility of errors, mix ups, cheating or confusion, we should follow SEAC advice that all beef from cattle over six months old should be deboned. The position will be kept under review.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide additional money to councils to fund environmental health officers' inspection of butchers' shops, following the ban of beef-on-the-bone. [21675]

Mr. Rooker: There will be no increase in the level of supervision as a result of the prohibition on the sale of bone-in beef contained in the Beef Bones Regulations 1997. Normal levels will continue to apply, although enforcement officers will, in future, be required to check that boning requirements are being met. I therefore see no need to make additional money available to local authorities for this work.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current cost to the United Kingdom of its contribution to the Common Agricultural Policy. [21390]

Mr. Rooker: The United Kingdom is expected to contribute about £4.3 billion towards Community expenditure on the CAP in 1997, some of which will be abated next year under the Fontainebleau arrangements.

School Milk

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what European Union funding is available for the provision of school milk in schools within the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [21889]

Mr. Rooker: Under the fully EU-funded scheme, the UK subsidises drinking milk and unflavoured yoghurt provided to primary schools and nurseries. The rate of subsidy is as follows:

	Pence per pint
Whole milk	11.99
Semi-skimmed milk	7.57
Plain whole milk yoghurt	2.05

Beef Imports

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements with the Government of Argentina govern the importing of beef from that country; and if he will make a statement. [22191]

Mr. Rooker: Imports of beef from Argentina must be in accordance with harmonised Community rules laid down in Council Directive 64/433/EEC. Consignments of beef must also be accompanied by public health certification which conforms to the model laid down in Commission Decision 87/221/EEC. Argentina also benefits from certain concessionary tariff arrangements.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures the Government will take to ensure that the labelling of beef and other meat products identifies the country of origin. [22357]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for South-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Paice) on 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 492.

Meat Labelling

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations his Department has held with supermarkets to ensure that beef and other meat products are properly labelled. [22358]

Mr. Rooker: The Department's officials have regular discussions with retailers about food law, including the accuracy of labelling information. Officials have held specific discussions with representatives of the major supermarkets and independent butchers about the forthcoming arrangements for the labelling of fresh and frozen beef and beef mince.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to ensure that meat is labelled with the country of production. [22076]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 22 December 1997]: The Government have already announced plans for the labelling of fresh and frozen beef and beef mince. Under the proposed arrangements, which will enter into full force on 31 March 1998, origin claims along with other detailed information, such as production method, will require approval by a competent authority. While these arrangements will be voluntary in the first instance, I expect the majority of beef sold retail to be covered. It is envisaged that origin claims on beef will be compulsory by the year 2000. The European Commission will be reviewing the operation of the beef labelling arrangements in 1999. As part of the review the Commission is expected to consider the possibility of extending the beef labelling arrangements to other species.

Rendering Subsidy

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will reintroduce the rendering subsidy. [22356]

Mr. Rooker: The objective of the support to the rendering industry was to avoid the disorderly collapse of the meat chain in the immediate aftermath of the BSE crisis. This was achieved. A wide range of industry bodies and representatives were involved in drawing up the Schemes, which were always intended to cover only the financial years 1996–97 and 1997–98, and to provide reduced support in the second year to allow the meat chain to adjust to the post BSE economic and regulatory realities.

Following the election, the Government carefully considered representations made by a wide range of interested industry bodies, from producers to renderers, before confirming the phasing out of support, which began in July. The principal reason for the decision was that the conditions last year which gave rise to the threat of collapse of the meat chain no longer exist. The support has served its purpose and there are no plans to continue the support into 1998–99.

Cattle Traceability Scheme

Mr. Collins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to encourage the use of (a) information technology and (b) electronic ear tags for cattle in the Cattle Traceability Scheme; and if he will make a statement. [22078]

Mr. Rooker: The British Cattle Movement Service, which is being set up to oversee the Cattle Tracing System (CTS), will operate a highly automated system. It will make use of barcode technology to process machine readable forms. Industry are also being encouraged to notify cattle movements to the BCMS by electronic mail.

It will not be a requirement of the CTS for cattle to have electronic eartags. However, the CTS will take account of the fact that increasing numbers of cattle are likely to have them in the future, which the Government view as a welcome development.

Food Agency

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to include farmers in consultations regarding the new Food Agency. [22446]

Mr. Rooker: We will be seeking the views of all interested parties when the White Paper on the Food Standards Agency is published and circulated for consultation later this week. We will also be meeting key stakeholders, including farmers' representatives, over the coming weeks to discuss specific issues.

BSE Crisis

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to instigate a public inquiry into the BSE crisis; and if he will make a statement. [22443]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend and the reply he gave to my hon. Friend the member for Enfield, North (Ms Ryan) on 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 497-98.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what stage the applications for EU compensation for (a) beef farmers, (b) dairy farmers and (c) sheep farmers affected by the BSE crisis have reached. [22444]

Mr. Rooker: No measures are currently in place at the EU level which provide for the payment of compensation to farmers for the effect of BSE on market prices. On 22 December 1997 my right hon. Friend announced a package of measures to assist beef and sheep farmers. This consists of two elements:

£60 million to be paid as agrimonetary compensation to suckler cow producers on the basis of their 1996 premium claims;

£25 million to be paid in increased Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances, split equally between cattle and sheep.

Both elements of this package require the approval of the European Commission before they can be put into effect. To this end, discussions with the Commission are in progress.

Vitamin B6

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his timetable in respect of implementing regulations for the sale of vitamin B6; and if he will make a statement. [22432]

Mr. Rooker: The regulations required to implement the proposed controls on dietary supplements containing vitamin B6 are in the process of being drafted and we hope that it will be possible to issue them for consultation in early February. The European Commission will be notified of the draft regulations at the same time. The timing of the laying of the regulations before Parliament will depend on the outcome of the consultation exercise and the Commission's reaction to the proposals. The earliest date that they could be laid would be during May.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will instruct the expert group recently constituted to assess the safety limits of vitamins and minerals to make examination of vitamin B6 a priority. [22571]

Mr. Rooker: The Government have already received advice from independent expert Committees on the safety of vitamin B6 in dietary supplements, following the very thorough review of this issue which was carried out last year. There are, therefore, no plans to ask the new expert group to undertake a further review of the data on the safety of vitamin B6.

Genetically Modified Food

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the (a) date of appointment, (b) terms of reference and (c) membership of the focus groups established by his Department to discuss genetically modified food. [22604]

Mr. Rooker: Although the Department has not set up any formal focus groups to discuss genetically modified food, it has commissioned a number of research projects to investigate consumer opinion on this subject which include ad-hoc groups of this type. Consumer views are also obtained from projects conducted by others, such as the large study published by Lancaster University last year, as well as from a wide variety of other sources such as the MAFF Consumer Panel and the National Biotechnology Conference, held in March 1997, at which a number of consumer groups were represented.

In addition to these various methods for assessing public opinion, note is also taken of consumer purchasing patterns of products such as the genetically modified tomato paste which has been on sale since February 1996.

Tallow

Mr. Collins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he has taken in the last three months to assist the trade in tallow; and if he will make a statement. [21956]

Mr. Rooker: Commission Decision 96/239 (as amended) set out conditions which must be met in order for the resumption of tallow exports. These requirements were implemented in the UK in March 1997, and the first plants meeting these conditions were registered in August. During the last three months, the registered plants have continued to be inspected weekly to ensure that the conditions set out in the legislation continue to be observed. A list of the plants was sent to the Commission on 23 October 1997 with a formal request that they undertake the inspections required by the Decision. We are currently awaiting a response.

Following the inspections, the Commission will put the matter to the EC's Standing Veterinary Committee who must then set a date for the resumption of tallow exports. However, the Standing Veterinary Committee has discussed a proposal to revoke and replace Commission Decision 96/239. These discussions may delay their consideration of a proposal to allow the resumption of exports of tallow from the UK.

Rescheduled Cattle Scheme

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the Government's policy towards the rescheduled cattle scheme. [22445]

Mr. Rooker: I am not aware of any rescheduled cattle scheme.

Novel Foods and Processes

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact of the proposals in the White Paper on Freedom of Information on the modus operandi of the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes. [22631]

Mr. Rooker: The Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes already operates in accordance with many of the proposals contained in the white paper. For instance, it has for some time published agendas for its meetings and notes of its discussions as well as detailed reports of its safety assessment of individual novel food applications. More recently, it has been considering what action it might take to increase the openness of its operations still further and an announcement of this conclusions will be made shortly.

Mink Farms

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking with regard to the evidence presented to his Department on 3 November 1997 regarding the conditions of animals at a mink farm in Hampshire. [22519]

Mr. Morley: The information supplied on 3 November 1997 has been followed up as a matter of urgency. Our investigations are continuing.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he has received over (a) escaped mink and (b) animal welfare in relation to the mink farm licensed in Hampshire. [22521]

Mr. Morley: The Department has received two letters making representations about escaped mink in relation to the mink farm licensed in Hampshire and 11 concerning animal welfare at the same premises.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food at how many mink farms the killing of mink was witnessed by his officials over the last three months; and what methods were used in the killing. [22520]

Mr. Morley: Veterinary Officers of the State Veterinary Service have witnessed the killing of mink on 15 of the 16 mink farms currently licensed in the last three months. Ten farms used carbon monoxide gas, four used carbon dioxide gas and one, barbiturate injection. The sixteenth farm had no stock to kill during this period.

Poultry Meat

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact on the international competitiveness of the United Kingdom poultry meat industry of the ban on the use of mammalian meat and bone meal in poultry rations in the United Kingdom. [20572]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 12 December 1997]: The ban on feeding mammalian meat and bone meal to all farmed livestock was introduced in 1996 by the Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy (Amendment) Order 1996. An assessment was made, prior to the legislation being introduced, on how, in economic terms, the ban would affect the agriculture industry. It was estimated that the costs of feed for the egg laying flock would increase by about £3 per tonne and by around £4-£5 per tonne for broilers.

Beef Imports

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he will take to prohibit beef imports in cases of suspect documentation. [21582]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 18 December 1997]: If there are suspicions regarding the authenticity of documentation, these would be investigated. Council Directive 90/675/EEC provides for imports of animal products from third countries which do not satisfy Community rules to be re-dispatched outside the Community, destroyed or used for a purpose, other than for human consumption, for which they are considered fit. In accordance with Council Directive 89/662/EEC, imports of animal products from other Member States which do not satisfy the conditions laid down in Community law may be destroyed, used for other purposes for which they are considered fit, or returned. Return of products must be authorised by the competent authority of the country of the establishment of origin.

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that imported beef conforms to the criteria for United Kingdom domestic slaughter. [21581]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 18 December 1997]: All fresh meat produced in the UK, and imported into the UK from other EU Member States, must be produced in accordance with harmonised Community rules laid down in Council Directive 64/433/EEC. Fresh meat imported from third countries must come only from approved establishments in countries which are authorised by the European Commission to export to the Community. These controls are designed to ensure that the meat satisfies health requirements equivalent to those applying within the Community.

In addition, national legislation, which came into force on 1 January 1998, prohibits imports of specified risk materials (SRM) of bovine, ovine or caprine origin (except for technical uses) from all other countries, including other EU Member States, and requires a number of imported animal products to be accompanied by official veterinary certification confirming that they do not contain and are not derived from SRM. National controls on the use of certain specified risk materials, which have been amended a number of times in the light of scientific advice, have been in place since 1989.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what mechanisms are used to ensure that beef imported into the UK from European countries is from animals which were less than 30 months old. [22077]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 22 December 1997]: The Fresh Meat (Beef Controls) (No. 2) Regulations 1996 prohibit the sale for human consumption of all meat derived from bovine animals which at the time of slaughter were more than 30 months old. This measure applies to all bovines slaughtered on or after 29 March 1996, whether in the UK or overseas, other than those born, reared and slaughtered in those third countries specifically excluded by the Regulations and UK animals from the Beef Assurance Scheme. Local authorities enforce the Regulations acting on any information available to them. The Regulations do not impose restrictions on the import of meat.

Bovine Bones

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1997, Official Report, column 232, what method will be used by local authority staff to determine the age of bovine bones in butchers' shops and catering establishments. [22140]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 22 December 1997]: If a local authority enforcement officer considers that bone-in beef sold to the ultimate consumer has come from animals over six months old at slaughter, (the age limit contained in the Beef Bones Regulations 1997) the onus will be on the seller to demonstrate the true age of the animal concerned.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the licensing of genetically modified crops for commercial planting. [21798]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 22 December 1997]: The licensing of genetically modified crops for commercial planting involves two distinct clearance processes. First, the release and marketing of all GMOs is strictly controlled by regulations made under Part VI of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 which implements Council Directive 90/220/EEC on the deliberate release into the environment of genetically modified organisms. No release or marketing of genetically modified crops may take place without the prior consent of the Secretary of State for the Environment. This consent is issued by the Secretary of State if the release is in England, or the Secretary of State for Scotland or Wales as appropriate and my right hon. Friend acts jointly with the Secretary of State in matters in which he has an interest. No consent can be issued without the agreement of the Health and Safety Executive. Applications to market genetically modified crops are scrutinised by all EC Member States and a final decision is made by qualified majority vote under Article 21 of Directive 90/220/EEC. In the UK, the independent expert members of the statutory Advisory Committee on Releases into the Environment (ACRE) consider applications to release and market GMOs on the basis of a detailed environmental risk assessment and they advise Ministers on whether or not a consent should be granted and what conditions should apply. Matters of food safety are addressed by the Advisory Committee on Novel Food Processes in accordance with the EC Regulation on Novel Foods and Novel Food Ingredients.

Secondly, no seed of agricultural varieties can be marketed in the UK unless they appear on the UK National List or EC Common Catalogue of varieties. These systems—which usually involve two years or more of growing trials—ensure that new varieties are distinct from others already in the market place and that they have a value for cultivation and use in the UK. However, successful trialling under the National List system is not sufficient on its own to permit the marketing of a genetically modified plant variety.

SCOTLAND

NHS Administrative Staff

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff were employed as management and administrative staff in each of the NHS trusts and boards in Scotland on 1 November; what percentage of the total staff of the NHS trusts and boards in Scotland this represents; and what was the figure and percentage on (a) 1 May 1997; (b) 1 November 1996 and (c) 1 May 1996. [20059]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 10 December 1997]: The information available is shown in the table.

Falkirk College (Grants)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will visit Falkirk College of Further and Higher Education in order to discuss with student representatives the need to expedite payment of student grants. [20485]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 12 December 1997]: Neither my right hon. and learned Friend nor I have any plans to do so at present, but substantial progress is being made in dealing with the outstanding grant applications from students at Falkirk College of Further and Higher Education.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students at Falkirk College of Further and Higher Education have not received payment of their grants for the current session; and what is the reason for the continuing delay. [20484]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 12 December 1997]: As at 15 December 1997, some 1,120 grant applications from students attending Falkirk College of Further and Higher Education had been processed and a further 237 remained to the be dealt with. The vast majority of the outstanding applications were submitted from October onwards, well after the academic year at the College had begun.

Initial problems with a new computer system at the Student Awards Agency for Scotland, together with the concentrated volume of applications received around the start of the new academic year, were the main causes of the delays. Substantial progress has now been made towards reducing the delays.

Health Service Vacancies

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many vacant NHS posts there are currently in Scotland, by health board area, for (a) hospital doctors, (b) general practitioners and (c) nurses; and what these numbers were at the same time in 1996. [21161]

NHS Staff

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the projected shortfall for (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99 for (i) hospital doctors, (ii) general practitioners and (iii) nurses. [21358]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 18 December 1997]: The information requested is not collected centrally although vacancies are monitored on an annual basis. We are aware of recruitment difficulties in certain specialties and in particular localities.

Private Finance Initiative (NHS)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate, by scheme, the subsidies paid by his Department under the smoothing mechanism to the three major acute PFI schemes prioritised by his Department since May. [21407]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 18 December 1997]: The smoothing mechanism is not a feature of PFI in health schemes in Scotland, hence no subsidies will be paid to the NHS Trusts involved in the major PFI schemes. To succeed under PFI, schemes must prove themselves to be affordable to the healthcare planners.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate for each of the major acute PFI schemes prioritised by his Department since May, the financial and percentage change in the purchasers' annual revenue commitment to PFI hospital schemes between outline and full business case. [21410]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 18 December 1997]: Health Boards as strategic planners of healthcare do not make annual revenue commitments to schemes at either the outline or full business case stage.

As part of the business planning process for both publicly and privately funded schemes, Health Boards are required to confirm that the proposals are affordable within the wider context of healthcare provision. It is the responsibility of NHS Trusts to ensure that the revenue commitments implied by a scheme can be met from the resources available.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each of the acute PFI schemes prioritised by his Department since May, how much each relevant health trust paid for each of the last three years in annual capital charges to the Treasury. [21408]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 18 December 1997]: NHS Trusts do not pay capital charges to HM Treasury. However, they do repay interest on their interest bearing debt and may be required to pay a dividend on their Public Dividend Capital. The total sums for interest and dividends remitted to HM Treasury in 1994–95 to 1996–97 by the three NHS Trusts with acute PFI schemes was as follows:

NHS Trust	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh	6,010	6,324	6,167
Law Hospital	1,341	1,478	1,657
Hairmyres and Stonehouse Hospitals	1,996	2,687	2,441

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each of the major acute PFI schemes prioritised by his Department since May, how much each lead consortium involved will receive per year for the use of the new hospitals upon completion. [21412]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 18 December 1997]: Since none of the deals for the major acute PFI schemes has reached financial close, details of the unitary charge payable to the private sector is still being negotiated.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each of the three major acute PFI schemes prioritised by his Department since May (a) the cost of renovating the existing facilities and (b) the current estimated cost of the scheme. [21406]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 18 December 1997]: As part of the capital investment process, NHS Trusts prepare outline business cases examining all the investment options and through an economic appraisal identify the preferred option. The preferred option is the one which, taking account of costs and benefits and the transfer of risk, delivers the best value for money. The renovation of existing facilities was not the preferred option in any of the major acute PFI schemes.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the number of staffed acute beds in use for each of the last 10 years. [21403]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 18 December 1997]: The number of average available staffed acute beds for each of the last 10 years is given in the following table.

Average available staffed beds in acute specialties[1]

Years ending 31 March	Average available staffed beds
1988	19,597
1989	19,193
1990	18,798
1991	18,317
1992	17,580
1993	17,414
1994	16,873
1995	16,360
1996	15,963
1997	15,503

[1] Excludes beds in the specialities of geriatric assessment, maternity, psychiatric, learning disability and long stay.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate (a) the number in 1996 of, (b) the number projected upon completion for and (c) the percentage change in staffed acute beds at NHS trusts subject to PFI developments prioritised by his Department since May. [21409]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 18 December 1997]: For each Trust with a major acute PFI project, the number of acute beds in 1996; in the public sector comparator; and projected to be in the PFI facility are as follows:

NHS Trust	Number of acute beds in 1996	Number of acute beds in PSC	Projected number of acute beds in PFI facility
Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh	1,099	986	869
Law Hospital	404	336	336

Crown Office

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the adequacy of funding for the Crown Office. [22034]

Mr. Dewar: The Crown Office is an independent Government Department under the direction of my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate. As such, its funding is provided by Parliament through a separate vote and is not part of the Scottish Block.

The Government have initiated the Comprehensive Spending Review and, in common with the other Departments, the Crown Office is committed to ensuring that forward provision is sufficient to meet the needs of prosecution and law and order in Scotland.

Judicial Appointments Board

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the Government's policy on a judicial appointments board for Scotland. [22035]

Mr. Dewar: I have no plans to propose a Judicial Appointments Board for Scotland.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many times he has met the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to discuss the Scottish fishing industry since 2 May. [22038]

Mr. Dewar: I and my noble Friend the Under-Secretary with responsibility for agriculture, environment and fisheries have regular discussions with our colleagues at the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food about matters relating to the UK fishing industry.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many times he has met representatives of Scottish fishing and fish-farming industries since 2 May; if he will list the bodies concerned; and if he will make a statement. [22040]

Mr. Dewar: My noble Friend, the Under-Secretary with responsibility for agriculture, environment and fisheries and I have met numerous representative organisations concerned with fisheries since 2 May, including meetings with the Scottish Fishermen's Federation, the Scottish Salmon Growers' Association and the Association of Scottish District Salmon Fishery Boards.

NHS (50th Anniversary)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funds will be made available to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the National Health Service; and if he will ensure that the maximum proportion of such funds is used in ways which promote patient care. [21704]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 19 December 1997]: Ministers have decided that the special occasion of the 50th Anniversary of the National Health Service should be marked with events and initiatives that reflect the Service's achievements and equally importantly herald its further development over the coming years. The Service has been issued with guidance that emphasises that the main focus should be at local level, with active participation of staff and patients, and should reflect the caring ethos of the Health Service.

The guidance emphasises that events should be low-cost, sponsored, or self-financing so that resources are not diverted from patient care.

Arable Area Payments

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the retention of five per cent. of arable area payments due to farmers; and when he expects to complete the payments due for 1997. [22143]

Mr. Macdonald: Subject to the continuing co-operation of farmers, we aim to make most final payments by 31 March 1998.

It is a legal requirement that every field claimed under the 1997 Arable Area Payments Scheme (AAPS) must be checked against a register consisting of unique field identifiers. Failure to carry out such a check would result in the UK suffering disallowance of AAPS funding by the EC Commission. Due to the scale of the task, it was not possible to complete this exercise prior to paying the bulk of the 1997 AAPS claims.

To avoid payments being delayed, and following discussions with the commission, we have made advance payments of 95 per cent. of the eligible areas claimed. The remainder will be paid when each field can be fully validated.

To 31 December 1997, Scottish farmers received over £124 million under the 1997 AAPS. Almost £110 million was paid to over 98 per cent. of claimants with a further £14.6 million of advance oilseeds payments. The balance of the oilseeds aid will be paid in the early part of 1998 following the announcement by the Commission of the final payment rate.

Handguns

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many handguns were taken illegally from (a) firearms dealers, (b) police, (c) the armed forces, (d) members of the public, (e) a common carrier while in transit and (f) firearms clubs, in each year since 1992 in each police force area in Scotland up to the latest available date; what was the largest number taken at any one time; and what were the descriptions of the firearms taken as recorded by the Police. [21840]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 19 December 1997]: The information is not held centrally.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons have been (a) killed and (b) injured by (i) legally held handguns and (ii) handguns illegally owned or used in each police force area in Scotland in each year since 1992; and for how many deaths and injuries it had not been determined whether the handgun used was legally or illegally held. [21837]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 19 December 1997]: The tables below detail the number of persons (a) killed and (b) injured by pistols or revolvers held (i) legally and (ii) illegally, in each police force area in Scotland in each of the years 1992 to 1996. Information has also been provided on the number of deaths and injuries caused by a pistol or revolver where it was not possible to determine whether or not the weapon was legally held; either because no accused was identified or the weapon was not recovered.

Teacher Training

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the recommendations made by Sir Stewart Sutherland about improved teacher training as they relate to Scotland. [22095]

Mr. Wilson: I am giving careful consideration to the recommendations relating to Scotland in Sir Stewart Sutherland's report on teacher education and training. I hope to be able to respond fully to the recommendations before the end of January.

Tuition Fees

Ms Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how soon after supplying the necessary information to the Student Awards Agency applicants for places at Scottish colleges and universities will be notified of the amount they or their parents will have to contribute towards their fees. [21877]

Mr. Wilson: The Student Awards Agency for Scotland will be expected to meet its published performance target and respond to fully completed applications within 28 calendar days of receipt. This will apply to both students continuing their studies under the existing arrangements and those entrants in academic year 1998–99 whose entitlement to support with tuition fees will be subject to means-testing.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what additional resources will be allocated to colleges and universities to enable them to pursue the collection of fee income from students and parents who are reluctant to pay; [22272]

(2) what allowance for uncollected fee income is built into the calculations about college and university finances. [22361]

Mr. Wilson: From academic year 1998–99, new students entering full-time courses of higher education will be liable to contribute up to £1,000 towards their tuition. The balance will be paid by the Student Awards Agency in Scotland. The financial support made available to universities and colleges will assume that the assessed fee contributions from students will be paid, but the actual collection arrangements will be a matter for each institution.

On 3 December, the Government announced that an additional £17 million would be available to higher education sector and an additional £8 million to the further education sector in 1998–99. Uncollected fees and the cost of collection were factors taken into account in the Government's assumption that higher education institutions will collect some £14 million net, and further education colleges some £2 million, in fee income directly from students. This assumed a 5 per cent. reduction in potential gross fee income to take account of uncollected fees and the cost of collection.

Secondary Schools

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to raise standards in Scottish secondary schools. [22036]

Mr. Wilson: Implementation of the Government's initiative to raise standards in Scottish schools is being overseen by the Action Group on Standards in Scottish Schools. I chair the Group and membership is widely drawn from within and beyond education.

In September, with the endorsement of the Action Group, we issued for consultation a strategy paper for the development of a framework of school targets in key areas with national introduction in the school year 1998–99. The key areas are, in the first instance, literacy, numeracy and attainment. The outcome of the consultation was discussed by the Group on 15 December. The Group gave broad support to the principle of target setting; agreed that improvement could be achieved in every school; and agreed also that comparability among similar schools was important. The Action Group agreed to meet again in February to take matters forward.

Private Finance Initiative (Construction Industry)

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on which PFI schemes in Scotland construction work has started; and on which schemes which have not yet started the legal and financial work has been completed. [21878]

Mr. Dewar: The information requested is set out in the tables.

In the Health Sector, there are other smaller projects developed on the same principles which fall within Trust and Health Board delegated limits and for which information is not held centrally.

PFI projects in Scotland

Procuring agency	Project description
(a) Construction/work under way
Law Hospital NHS Trust	Provision and operation of a hospital information system

North of Scotland Water Authority	Inverness main drainage and Fort William sewage treatment
Dundee City Council	Baldovie waste to energy plant

Cornton Vale Prison

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the funds allocated to Cornton Vale Prison for each of the years 1988–89 to 1992–93 and (b) the allocations under each of the heads of spending into which the figures are broken down, for each of those years. [22059]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 22 December 1997]: Total net expenditure (excluding capital, headquarters and other central costs) on Cornton Vale Prison, allocated between vote categories (running costs and other current expenditure), is as shown in the table:

£ million

	Running costs	Other current expenditure	Total
1988–89	3.3	0.3	3.6
1989–90	4.1	0.2	4.3
1990–91	4.1	0.3	4.4
1991–92	4.2	0.3	4.5
1992–93	4.8	0.4	5.2

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 10 December, 1997 Official Report, column 625, on Cornton Vale Prison, if he will provide a breakdown of expenditure by budget category for each year. [22115]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 22 December 1997]: Total net expenditure (excluding capital, Headquarters and other central costs) on Cornton Vale Prison, allocated between vote categories (running costs and other current expenditure), is as shown in the table:

£ million

	Running costs	Other current expenditure	Total

Cattle (Electronic Tagging)

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to extend the electronic tagging scheme for cattle from the Borders area to the rest of Scotland; and if he will liaise with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to extend the scheme elsewhere in the United Kingdom. [22276]

Mr. Macdonald: The Borders electronic tagging scheme is an independent venture over which the Scottish Office has no direct influence. However, Scottish Office officials are in regular contact, and a Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food representative recently visited the project. The Agriculture Departments regard electronic tagging as a positive development, and while there are no plans to make it compulsory, the computerised Cattle Tracing System, due to be introduced in Great Britain next year, will accommodate electronic tags.

Specialist Teachers

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the annual statistical return provided by schools to the Scottish Office includes figures for visiting specialist teachers in primary schools and for learning support teachers. [22274]

Mr. Wilson: The annual School Census statistical return to individual schools does not collect information on the number of visiting specialist teachers in primary schools and for learning support teachers. Such information was last collected in the School Census return to individual teachers in September 1994. The next collection of information on the number of visiting specialist teachers in primary schools and learning support teachers is planned for September 1998.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will co-ordinate and simplify the systems of financial and academic audit of further education colleges. [22266]

Mr. Wilson: This matter has been raised with me by the Association of Scottish Colleges. We are considering ways of improving audit procedures without compromising the necessary rigour of financial and academic audit of the further of the further education colleges.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects individual further education colleges to be notified of their Government funding for 1997–98 and 1998–99. [22268]

Mr. Wilson: Letters setting out Government grant-aid allocations to individual further education colleges for 1997–98 were issued in February 1997. We shall advise colleges of their allocations for 1998–99 as soon as we have considered responses to recent consultations on proposed changes to the funding methodology, and taken final decisions.

Ferry Crews

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what language requirements his Department demands in respect of crews employed on ferries operating solely within United Kingdom waters. [22168]

Mr. McLeish: All ferries operating within Scotland or from Scotland to other parts of the United Kingdom are subject to the Merchant Shipping (Minimum Standards of Safety Communications) Regulations 1997 which apply to United Kingdom ships and to all passenger vessels which start or finish a voyage in the United Kingdom. To comply with these regulations, the operators of passenger ferries in Scotland, as elsewhere in the United Kingdom, must ensure that all crew members with a responsibility for assisting passengers in emergency situations have communication skills that are sufficient for that purpose, including the ability to communicate in English. The oversight of these regulations is the responsibility of the Marine Safety Agency, an executive agency of the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

Female Prisoners

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many female prisoners have been held in Scotland in each of the last five years, broken down by (a) length of sentence, in the categories (i) three months or less, (ii) three to six months, (iii) six to 12 months, (iv) 12 to 24 months and (v) more than 24 months, (b) type of offence and (c) age, in the categories (1) under 16, (2) 16, (3) 17, (4) 18 to 21, (5) 22 to 25, (6) 26 to 30, (7) 31 to 40, (8) 41 to 50, (9) 51 to 60 and (10) over 60 years. [22364]

Mr. McLeish: The information provided is for receptions rather than persons admitted to prison. The tables detail the number of direct sentenced and fine default receptions of female prisoners to Scottish Prison Service establishments by sentence length, type of offence and age in each of the years 1992–1996. One reception is counted if one or more warrants arrive for the same person from the same court on the same day. Some receptions relate to warrants arriving at establishments for people already held in custody.

As the information is rather lengthy, I have arranged for a copy of the tables to be placed in the Library of the House.

Pensions (Health and Education)

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the additional expenditure which will have to be made by (a) health boards and trusts, (b) further education colleges and (c) universities in Scotland in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99 and (iii) 1999–2000, as a result of the changes in the rules governing advance corporation tax on pensions. [22376]

Mr. Dewar: The NHS superannuation scheme is not affected by the changes in the rules governing advance corporation tax.

Any effects on the superannuation schemes of further education colleges or universities in Scotland would be a matter for the managers of the schemes concerned.

Population Statistics

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of state for Scotland if he will list the latest estimates by the Register General of Populations of those aged 17 years and over, plus 63 per cent. of those aged 16 years, for each district council area and parliamentary constituency in Scotland, together with the equivalent electoral registration figures also expressed as a percentage of these population figures and in ascending order. [22293]

Mr. McLeish: The information requested is given in the tables. The population figures have been prepared by a method that involves a certain degree of approximation and therefore should be treated with some caution.

Teachers' Salaries

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since 1978–79 average salaries in primary and secondary schools in Scotland in (a) cash terms and (b) current prices. [22401]

Mr. Wilson: Teachers' salaries are the responsibility of local authorities as employers. Information on average salaries is not held centrally.

Hospital Salaries

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average annual salary of (a) nurses, (b) doctors and (c) consultants employed in Scotland's hospitals for each year since 1978–79 in 1996 prices. [22388]

Mr. Galbraith: It is not possible to identify the average annual salary of nurses, doctors and consultants. The current salary ranges for qualified nurses, doctors and consultants employed on national terms and conditions are as follows:

Nurses	12,385 to 25,975
Doctors	15,440 to 56,470
Consultants	43,750 to 56,470

Nursery Provision

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many meetings he has had with local authority representatives to discuss nursery provision. [22381]

Mr. Wilson: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have had meetings with COSLA expressly for this purpose. However, officials met COSLA on 29 August 1997 to discuss pre-school education generally, and have also met 14 local education authorities individually as part of an ongoing programme of liaison visits on pre-school education provision. COSLA and a number of individual authorities are part of a standing liaison group between officials and pre-school education providers in all the sectors. There are other contacts with local authorities in various fora, such as ADES. I published a major consultation paper on the future of pre-school education last November, a copy of which is available in the Library; the closing date for responses is 6 February.

Hospital Operations

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since 1978–79 the number of (a) hospital operations and (b) hip operations carried out in Scotland. [22386]

Mr. Galbraith: The information requested is given in the following table:

Year ending 31 March	Total number of in-patient/day case operations and procedures[1] (Excludes obstetrics and psychiatric specialties)	Number of total and partial hip replacements[1]

Household Incomes

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since 1978–79 the average household income in Scotland. [22394]

Mr. Wilson: Total income and total income per head for Scotland for the household sector is given in the table. The household sector covers individuals living in households and in institutions. Data are available from 1984 only and are given at current prices.

Household income: Scotland

	Total household income £ million	Total household income per head £
1984	23,423	4,552
1985	25,386	4,942
1986	27,493	5,369
1987	29,560	5,782

Roads and Bridges

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact on public expenditure of the measures contained in the Roads and Bridges (Scotland) Invergarry, Kyle of Lochalsh Trunk Road (A87) Extension (Skye Bridge Crossing) Toll Order (Variation) Order 1997; from what budget expenditure it is to be met; and if he will make a statement. [22377]

Mr. McLeish: The Order gives effect to the reductions in discounted tolls on the Skye Bridge agreed between my right hon. Friend and Skye Bridge Ltd. The impact on public expenditure depends on users' uptake of the discounted tolls, but is limited to a maximum of £600,000 per annum (at 1996 traffic and toll levels). The limit will be revised annually to reflect traffic growth and inflation. The public expenditure will be met from the Roads and Transport Programme and will displace other expenditure on that programme.

Hospital Staff

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since 1978–79 the number of (a) nurses, (b) doctors and (c) consultants employed in Scotland's hospitals. [22390]

Mr. Galbraith: The information is shown in the table.

Hospital staff employed by the NHS in Scotland

Year	Nurses[1]	Doctors[2,3]	Consultants[2,3]
1978	24,145	5,826	1,837
1979	24,512	5,998	1,868

1996	34,460	7,620	2,572

[1] Nurses are defined as qualified nurses. The transfer of elderly, physically and mentally infirm, and patients with learning disabilities out of long-term hospital care to community based settings since 1992 has resulted in a number of hospital nurses moving to a community setting.
[2] Excludes community medical staff.
[3] Doctors include consultants.

Jobs (Inward Investment)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state for each of the years between 1978–79 and 1996–97 inclusive, the number of (a) jobs created and (b) safeguarded in Scotland as a result of inward investment projects; and if he will indicate those projects that have (i) created and (ii) safeguarded 100 jobs or more. [22419]

Mr. Wilson: The number of jobs which the inward investment projects attracted to Scotland since April 1981 were expected to create or safeguarded is as follows:

Year[1]	Planned jobs
	New	Safeguarded	Total
1981–82	4,559	2,443	7,002
1982–83	4,181	1,146	5,327
1983–84	3,446	3,460	6,906

1991–92	4,857	1,145	6,002
1992–93	5,342	2,717	8,059
1993–94	7,688	3,384	11,072
1994–95	9,114	3,215	12,329
1995–96	10,136	2,424	12,560
1996–97	11,148	3,147	14,295

[1] Figures for years prior to 1981–82 are not available.

Tables listing the projects which were expected to create or safeguard 100 or more jobs have been placed in the Library.

Hospital Statistics

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since 1978–79 the number of (a) in-patients and (b) out-patients treated in Scotland's hospitals. [22392]

Mr. Galbraith: The information requested is given in the following table.

Year ending 31 March	In-patient discharges	Day case discharges	New out-patients attendances[1]
1979	737,816	80,271	1,039,326
1980	764,301	87,223	1,035,655

Road Statistics

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since 1978–79 the number of miles of (a) dual carriageway and (b) motorway in Scotland. [22387]

Mr. McLeish: The numbers of miles of (a) dual carriageway and (b) motorway (excluding slip roads) in Scotland, reported by the appropriate authorities in annual Road Lengths returns for 1981 and later years, are shown in the table. Such figures are not readily available for the years prior to 1981.

Year (as at 1 April)	Dual carriageway	Motorway (excluding slip roads)
1981	365	146
1982	369	147
1983	375	147
1984	398	147

1993	536	177
1994	536	190
1995[1]	517	193
1996	535	193

[1] There may have been under-reporting of dual carriageway road lengths for 1995.

Car Ownership

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since 1978–79 the percentage of Scottish households owning one or more motor cars. [22389]

Mr. McLeish: Information is not available in the form requested. The table shows the percentage of Scottish households which had regular use of cars, for each year since 1978–79 for which such estimates are available. The figure for 1981 is from the Census of Population. The other years' figures were estimated from the results of three sample surveys (the Family Expenditure Survey, the General Household Survey and the National Travel Survey), and are therefore subject to sampling errors. Accordingly, undue weight should not be placed on the figure for any single year, or upon the apparent change between one year and the next.

1981	51
1985–86	53
1986–87	51
1988	53

Ferry Services

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from island communities about the costs of fares on ferry service in West of Scotland. [22384]

Mr. McLeish: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations from island communities in the West of Scotland concerning the proposal by Caledonian MacBrayne Ltd. to implement an average 5 per cent. rise in ferry fares across their network. These representations included a petition, protesting against the company's intention to levy above-average rises on the Ullapool–Stornoway route, which was presented to my right hon. Friend on 5 December 1997 by the Vice-Convenor of Western Isles Council.

Economic Growth

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the rate of growth in the Scottish economy for each year since 1978–79. [22410]

Mr. Wilson: Output-based Gross Domestic Product (GDP(O)) in Scotland rose by an average annual rate of 1.6 per cent. between 1978 and 1995. The annual growth rates are given in the table:

	Growth in GDP(O) for Scotland
1978–79	1.0
1979–80	–1.9
1980–81	–1.4
1981–82	1.5

Exports

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the level of manufacturing exports from Scotland in each year since 1978–79. [22412]

Mr. Wilson: The Government do not maintain separate export figures for Scotland. The following figures are based on data maintained by the Scottish Council for Development and Industry.

Year	Scottish manufactured exports (£ million) (unadjusted)
1979	3,409
1980	3,762
1981	4,024
1982	4,065
1983	4,532
1984	4,953
1985	5,522
1986	5,137
1987	6,026
1988	7,166
1989	7,664
1990	8,574
1992	9,682
1993	11,540
1994	14,264
1995	17,316
1996	18,415

Diabetes

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will support the introduction of a national screening programme for diabetes among high risk groups, with particular reference to those aged over 40 years with a hereditary propensity. [21617]

Mr. Galbraith: The Government receive advice on national screening programmes from the UK National Screening Committee, which prioritises existing or future screening programmes against criteria which are internationally recognised. The Committee will consider national screening for diabetes, along with other possible screening programmes, in accordance with its developing work programme. Any future decisions on a national programme will be made in the light of those considerations.

Students

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if students who take a year out from their studies will be able to return to the same financial arrangements as before their year out. [22405]

Mr. Wilson: Eligible students who have already embarked on a continuous programme of full-time higher education up to first degree level will retain their entitlement to assistance under the existing arrangements until they complete that continuous programme.

Students who take a year out from study during a course of higher education will have their award suspended during that period, provided the absence is approved by the academic authority. They will then be able to return to the course under the same student support arrangements. Students who take a year out between two separate courses of higher education will have their eligibility reassessed as new entrants at the beginning of the new course.

Students who took a year out prior to beginning their programme of study in academic year 1998–99 will be eligible for support under the existing arrangements if they had, by 1 August 1997, a firm offer of a place deferred until 1998, or a provisional offer for deferred entry which was subsequently confirmed.

DEFENCE

Former Military Airfields

13. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to ensure that structures and runways of former military airfields which are of historic significance are safeguarded. [20208]

Mr. Spellar: My Department is fully compliant with the Government's Nine Point Plan of Action for care of Historic buildings which establishes appropriate levels of care for the continued upkeep of statutorily protected buildings and sites. This includes former military airfields.

Strategic Defence Review

14. Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Strategic Defence Review will examine the capacity for increased jointery in Britain's armed forces. [20209]

35. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Strategic Defence Review will examine the capacity for increased jointery in Britain's armed forces. [20230]

Mr. George Robertson: Enhanced joint-Service co-operation, as a means both of enhancing efficiency whilst maintaining military effectiveness, is one of the main themes of the Strategic Defence Review. A great deal of work is in hand to examine practical options to achieve it.

20. Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the factors underlying the delay in completing the Strategic Defence Review; and what consultations he has held with the Treasury. [20215]

28. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the reasons for the delay in completing the Strategic Defence Review. [20223]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer the right hon. Member and the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 25 November 1997 to my hon. Friend, the Member for Walsall, South (Mr. George), Official Report, column 499–500.

HM Treasury and other Government Departments have been and will continue to be consulted throughout the Strategic Defence Review.

21. Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will publish the foreign policy base line for the Strategic Defence Review. [20216]

Mr. George Robertson: In my speech to the House on 27 October 1997, Official Report, Columns 609–20, I outlined the emerging conclusions of the first phase of the Strategic Defence Review, which looked at the foreign and security policy framework. This work will form an important part of the Review White Paper which I envisage publishing in the first part of year.

NATO Enlargement

15. Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress towards NATO enlargement. [20210]

22. Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress towards NATO enlargement. [20217]

31. Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress towards NATO enlargement. [20226]

Mr. George Robertson: The protocols for the accession of Hungary, Poland and the Czech Republic to NATO were signed in December by NATO Foreign Ministers: all Allies now need to ratify them. NATO is continuing its work with the invited countries to ensure their effective military and political integration into the Alliance.

Smart Procurement Initiative

16. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make statement on the progress of the Government's smart procurement initiative. [20211]

Mr. Spellar: MOD is undertaking a fundamental and rigorous review of its procurement and commercial practices and of the organisation required to ensure that its business is done both economically and efficiently, and in a framework of continuing improvement. Much has already been done and we are now engaging industry in a constructive dialogue to ensure that they play their full part in improving our business.

Armed Services (Complement)

17. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by how many each of the armed services was below establishment on 1 January. [20212]

Mr. Spellar: Details for 1 January are not yet available. As at 1 November 1997, the latest figures available, the shortfall in trained strength against trained requirement for each of the Armed Forces was as follows: Naval Service, 1,900; Army, about 4,500; and RAF, 2,900.

Royal Naval College

18. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the Royal Naval College. [20213]

Mr. George Robertson: Considerable progress has been made on establishing the arrangements for the future of this magnificent site. I have now agreed the financial terms whereby the Foundation will hold the site by a lease from the Greenwich Hospital. The Department for Culture, Media and Sport and my own are working closely with the Foundation with a view to concluding shortly a package of financial and other support.

Rapid Reaction Corps

23. Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends visiting the headquarters of the Allied Rapid Reaction Corps. [20218]

Mr. George Robertson: I visited the headquarters of the Allied Rapid Reaction Corps on 23 June last year. I currently have no plans for a further visit.

Eurofighter

24. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress in respect of the Eurofighter project. [20219]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South (Mr. Marsden) on 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 417.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the need for a mid-life upgrade for the Eurofighter; and in which areas of capability. [22694]

Mr. George Robertson: Eurofighter is still being developed and the Memoranda of Understanding to commit to the production and support phases of the programme were only signed on 22 December 1997. I am confident that Eurofighter will respond to meet the operational requirements for which it is designed. Moreover, the Eurofighter design has growth potential to enable it to be modified to respond to changes in the threat and to take account of relevant tactical and technological developments. On this basis the question of a Eurofighter mid-life upgrade is likely to be one for consideration some years away.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the anticipated annual costs of ownership of Eurofighter over the operational life of the aeroplanes ordered. [22693]

Mr. George Robertson: The current estimated annual in-service support cost to the UK of Eurofighter is £230 million.

Public Expenditure Review

25. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's review of public expenditure on defence (a) procurement and (b) research in the south-east of England; and if he will assess the advantages of relating such expenditure to the Barnett formula. [20220]

Mr. Spellar: My Department places contracts for research and for procurement on the basis of value for money after open competition wherever practicable. As such, this public expenditure is not targeted at any region in particular but depends upon the distribution across the UK of suppliers.

The latest figures available for the breakdown of expenditure on procurement by region are contained in Section 1.9 of the "UK Defence Statistics 1996", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. No similar figures are held centrally for research spending.

It would not be appropriate to apply the Barnett formula, or any other regionalisation mechanism, to defence spending on procurement and research as this would run contrary to our policy of obtaining best value for money for the taxpayer.

Long-term Costings

26. Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received in respect of the publication of his Department's long-term costings. [20221]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces to the hon. Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 8 July 1997, Official Report, column 425. I am aware of no other representations on the publication of the Ministry of Defence's long-term costings.

Challenger Tank

27. Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on the Army's current operational requirement for the Challenger tank. [20222]

Mr. Spellar: We have received a number of representations on the Army's current operational requirement for a main battle tank, which is to be met by Challenger 2.

Landmines

29. Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress towards a worldwide landmine ban through the Ottawa Process. [20224]

Mr. George Robertson: On 3 December my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development signed the Ottawa Convention. In the first two days, 125 countries signed the Convention which will ban the production, transfer, manufacture and use of anti-personnel landmines. This is a development which the Government warmly welcome; but there is no room for complacency and we will be pursuing complementary activity, notably in the Conference on Disarmament in Geneva, in order to ensure the widest possible participation in a ban of these weapons. The UK will seek to ratify the Convention as soon as possible; primary legislation will be required to enable the UK to meet fully its obligations under the Convention. The Government intend to bring forward the necessary Bill as soon as the Parliamentary timetable allows.

Defence Medical Service

30. Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current state of the Defence Medical Service. [20225]

34. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his plans for the Defence Medical Service. [20229]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces to the hon. Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) on 1 December 1997, Official Report, columns 22–23.

The main problems experienced by the Defence Medical Service at present are shortages of personnel and equipment. The greatest manpower shortages are among general and orthopaedic surgeons, anaesthetists, physicians and operating theatre nurses.

Chemical and Biological Weapons

32. Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department is taking to protect British service personnel in the event of their being deployed where chemical and biological weapons are a threat. [20227]

Mr. Spellar: Defensive measures taken to protect British service personnel against the threat of use of chemical and biological weapons comprise five components: Detection, Identification and Monitoring; Warning and Reporting; Individual and Collective Protection; Contamination Control; and Medical Countermeasures. Work is continuing to improve our capability in all five areas.

The passive defensive measures are part of a spectrum of capabilities relevant to chemical and biological threats, including intelligence and command and control, air defence, operational doctrine and training, and the potential for retaliatory military action. The Government are also fully committed to active support of arms control and non-proliferation measures to eliminate the threat of weapons of mass destruction.

European Defence Industry (Restructuring)

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the impact of European defence industry restructuring on his procurement programmes. [20214]

Mr. Spellar: The success of our procurement programmes depends on a strong defence industrial base. European companies must remain competitive on the world market to ensure their survival and commercial well being. Restructuring is essential if we are going to maintain a globally competitive defence industry.

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on European defence industry restructuring. [20228]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer given earlier today to the hon. Member for Colchester (Mr. Russell).

Republic of Ireland

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many goodwill calls were made by (a) Irish naval vessels to the UK and (b) the Royal Navy to the Republic of Ireland in each of the last three years. [22537]

Dr. Reid: Irish Naval Service vessels did not pay any goodwill visits to the UK in 1995. One was made in 1996, and three in 1997. Royal Navy ships paid two goodwill visits to the Republic of Ireland in 1995, one in 1996 and two in 1997.

Armed Forces (Disabled People)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many disabled people work (a) in the Ministry of Defence and (b) for the armed forces; and how many work at rates below £4 an hour. [22643]

Mr. Spellar: The number of civilian staff who were recorded as having some form of disability on my Department's civilian disability database at 1 October 1997 was 4,312. This includes staff serving in Defence Agencies. Armed Forces personnel are exempt from the employment provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act and therefore there are no accurate records of disabled Service personnel. Details of these, and how many disabled civilian staff work at rates below £4 an hour, could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Cycle Spaces

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many secure cycling spaces there are in his Department. [22678]

Mr. Spellar: This information is not held centrally and could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Non-lethal Weapons

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Ministry of Defence establishments have been carrying out research into non-lethal weapon technologies since 1990. [21884]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence has for some years conducted research into potential Non-Lethal Weapons technologies to assess not only performance but also operational deplorability, supportability, environmental impact and effect on personnel. Accordingly, a wide range of technologies have been examined at various Establishments, all of which have now been subsumed into the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency.

AWE Aldermaston

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the size reduction facility at AWE Aldermaston to be completed and able to commence operations. [21810]

Mr. Spellar: An interim facility should be completed and available to start operations by summer of 1998. Options for a longer term facility are under consideration.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current space storage capacity at AWE Aldermaston for nuclear waste designated for disposal at the NIREX deep waste repository. [21807]

Mr. Spellar: Following the previous Government's decision in March 1997 not to support Nirex's appeal against the decision of the planning inspector concerning the proposed rock characterisation facility at Sellafield, none of the radioactive waste at AWE is designated for disposal at Nirex. Safe and secure storage for AWE's Intermediate Level Waste will be provided as necessary until a new national policy for the disposal of such material has been devised.

The total storage capacity for Intermediate Level Waste at AWE Aldermaston is 4,000 cubic metres of which approximately a quarter is still available.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are to construct further nuclear waste stores at AWE Aldermaston. [21834]

Mr. Spellar: Construction of a new Intermediate Level Waste store is under consideration.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what public safety assessments have been made of buildings at AWE Aldermaston converted from their previous use to become nuclear waste stores. [21805]

Mr. Spellar: All facilities at AWE Aldermaston that store radioactive waste have safety cases prepared which are submitted to the Health and Safety Executive and the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much intermediate-level and low-level nuclear waste that cannot be disposed of at Drigg is currently in store at AWE Aldermaston. [21806]

Mr. Spellar: There is currently 2,549 cubic metres of intermediate and low level waste in store at AWE Aldermaston which is not suitable for disposal at BNFL Drigg.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the estimated costs, for each of the next 10 years, of decommissioning old buildings and equipment at AWE Aldermaston. [21833]

Mr. Spellar: The detailed plans for decommissioning old buildings and equipment over the next ten years at AWE Aldermaston represent projections and assumptions which inform advice to Ministers on the affordability of that particular element of the defence programme and have not yet received approval. Accordingly I am withholding this information under exemption 2, internal discussions and advice, of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if repairs to the A91 plant at AWE Aldermaston have now been completed; and when he expects the plant to become fully operational. [21804]

Mr. Spellar: The repairs to A91 are complete. It is expected that the plant will become fully operational in 1999.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the estimated annual arisings of (a) low-level waste that can be disposed of at Drigg, (b) low-level nuclear waste that cannot be disposed of at Drigg, (c) intermediate-level nuclear waste arising from normal operations, (d) intermediate-level waste arising from decommissioning, (e) low-level waste arising from decommissioning operations that can be disposed of at Drigg and (f) low-level waste arising from decommissioning operations that cannot be disposed of at Drigg, from AWE Aldermaston, in each of the years between the present and 2020. [21808]

Mr. Spellar: Forecasts of waste arisings are produced annually for the following ten years. The present forecast is (all volumes shown in cubic metres):

(a) low level waste that can be disposed of at BNFL Drigg:

1999: 2,200

2000: 1,800

2001: 2,800

2002: 3,000

2004: 3,700

2007: 3,000

(b) low level waste that cannot be disposed of at Drigg is not forecast separately from intermediate level waste arisings and is included in (d) below.

(c) intermediate-level waste arising from normal operations:

2000: 40

2001: 40

2002: 40

2004: 40

2005: 40

2006: 40

2007: 40

(d) intermediate-level waste arising from decommissioning:

1998: 190

1999: 130

2000: 220

2001: 170

2002: 150

2003: 160

2004: 170

2005: 160

2006: 150

2007: 150

(e) low level waste arising from decommissioning operations that can be disposed of at Drigg:

1998: 400

1999: 760

2000: 510

2001: 1,580

2002: 1,970

2004: 3,010

2006: 2,010

2007: 2,530

(f) low level wastage arising from decommissioning operations that cannot be disposed of at Drigg is not forecast separately from ILW arisings and is included in (d) above.

AWE Visits (French Officials)

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the visits made by French officials to each United Kingdom atomic weapons establishments since October 1996. [21827]

Mr. Spellar: Details of the visits are as follows. It is not possible to be more precise as the information requested is not held centrally.

Dates	Aldermaston	Burghfield	Foulness
October 1996 to March 1997	5	0	0
April 1997 to December 1997	6	0	0

Sludge (Aldermaston)

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the sludge solidification treatment facility at AWE Aldermaston to be completed and able to commence operations. [21809]

Mr. Spellar: The sludge solidification treatment facility is complete and is being used to support commissioning of A91.

Trident

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United Kingdom personnel are stationed in the US, and US personnel stationed in the United Kingdom, under the terms of the 1958 Agreement and the Polaris sales agreements, as amended for Trident. [21830]

Mr. Spellar: There are currently five UK personnel stationed in the US as part of the 1958 Agreement. In addition, 3 AWE employees are there on short-term appointments. A further 15 British personnel are in the USA as part of the Polaris Sales Agreement, as amended for Trident.

As regards US personnel stationed in the UK, none is here under the terms of the 1958 Agreement. There are 4 US employees in the UK as part of the Polaris Sales Agreement, as amended for Trident.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost to the United Kingdom of engineering services provided at the Sandia National Laboratory for the development, evaluation, production and stockpile surveillance of the UK's Trident re-entry body system. [21821]

Mr. Spellar: The relevant cost this year is estimated to be between $1 and 2 million.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if construction has begun on the new refit yard for Trident submarines at Devonport Royal Dockyard; and if he will make a statement. [21217]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 17 December 1997]: The contract with Devonport Management Ltd. covers both the design and construction of Trident submarine refitting and refuelling facilities, and the modernisation of existing nuclear submarine support facilities. Construction work on the existing facilities is progressing. Preparatory work on the Trident facilities, including the detailed design phase, is underway.

Gloveboxes

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many gloveboxes are currently in store, awaiting treatment and disposal, at AWE Aldermaston. [21832]

Mr. Spellar: There are at present forty-one gloveboxes stored at AWE Aldermaston. Decommissioned gloveboxes are classified as Intermediate Level Waste. Safe and secure storage is provided at the site.

Official Visits

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of occasions since April 1996 on which United Kingdom officials have visited (a) CEA and (b) DGA facilities. [21828]

Mr. Spellar: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, details of visits made by personnel from the Atomic Weapons Establishments are as follows:

	CEA	DGA
April 1996 to March 1997	12	3
April 1997 to December 1997	10	2

Atomic Co-ordinating Offices

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff are employed in the Atomic Co-ordinating offices in London and Washington; what are their Civil Service grades; and what are the annual operating costs of each office. [21829]

Mr. Spellar: The details requested are currently as follows:

Atomic Control Office, London

Senior Executive Officer: 0.5[1]

Executive Office: 1

Administrative Officer: 1

Administrative Assistance: 4

[1] This official has other duties in addition to his responsibilities as Head of the Atomic Control Office, London.

Atomic Control Office, Washington

Unified Grade 6: 1

Unified Grade 7: 1

Executive Officer: 1

Personal Secretary: 1

Administrative Officer: 1

The annual running costs of the London and Washington offices are £121,000 and £296,000 respectively.

Nimrod

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the average annual costs of one Nimrod aircraft. [21213]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 17 December 1997]: The estimated average annual cost of supporting a Nimrod MR Mk2 aircraft is some £4 million. This figure does not include fuel and aircrew costs.

Commachio Company

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the primary roles and functions of Commachio Company, Royal Marines; and what are its annual running costs. [21210]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 17 December 1997]: Commacchio Group Royal Marines protects the nation's independent strategic nuclear deterrent on UK territory. It also administers Royal Marines Condor, Arbroath, for itself and for two other units of the Royal Marines Command. The Group's estimated annual running costs for financial year 1997–98, including Service Pay, are some £10 million.

Nuclear Accident Response Organisation

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the annual running costs of the Nuclear Accident Response Organisation. [21208]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 17 December 1997]: The Ministry of Defence Nuclear Accident Response Organisation (NARO) would only be activated for exercises or in the event of a defence nuclear accident, using resources from a number of military commands. The occasional costs attributed to the NARO function in these commands are not separately identified. The annual manpower costs for the Headquarters element in the Ministry of Defence in London, however, amounts to £300,000 and the annual cost of support contracts provided by the Meteorological Office, Defence Evaluation and Research Agency and other associated costs amounts to some £2.5 million.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the annual running costs of a hunter-killer nuclear powered submarine. [21206]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 17 December 1997]: The annual running costs of an RN vessel depend on the activities it carries out, and the amount of maintenance it undergoes. In approximate terms, the annual running costs of a hunter-killer nuclear powered submarine are some £10 million. These costs include manpower, stores and fuel. They exclude maintenance.

Destroyers and Minesweepers (Running Costs)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the average running costs of (a) one Royal Navy destroyer and (b) one mine countermeasure vessel. [21214]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 17 December 1997]: The annual running costs of an RN vessel depends on the activities it carries out, and the amount of maintenance it undergoes. In approximate terms, the annual running costs of a Type 42 destroyer are some £12 million; and for a Sandown class MCMV some £2 million. These costs include manpower, stores and fuel. They exclude maintenance.

Service Accommodation (Evictions)

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many households on armed forces' housing estates have been served with notices of eviction in the current year; what estimate he has made of the figures for each of the next three years; and how many of these are in the categories (a) civilian and (b) irregular. [21320]

Mr. Spellar: In the current year, 28 Irregular Occupants have been served with eviction notices, none of whom were civilian licensees. It is not possible to predict future numbers as Irregular Occupancy arises as a result of loss of entitlement through bereavement, marital breakdown and personnel leaving the Services but remaining in their quarters. On occasion, civilian licensees may similarly refuse to leave their homes at the end of their licence periods but it is not possible to predict this eventuality. Even in such circumstances it is not always necessary to seek eviction of occupants.

Armed Forces (Pay and Conditions)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people in the armed forces earn less than £4 an hour. [22640]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey) on 19 December 1997, Official Report, columns 380–81.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the functions, bodies or units not covered by the £200 million estimated cost of dealing with the millennium computer problem in his Department and its associated public bodies; if this estimate covers the cost of dealing with the problem as it affects front-line military units; if it includes provision for dealing with the embedded chip problem; and if he will make a statement; [21541]

(2) what estimate he has made of the moneys which will be made available to his Department from the contingency reserve to ensure millennium computer compliance in the United Kingdom armed forces; [21543]

(3) what margin of error is associated with his Department's estimate of a £200 million total cost for resolving the millennium computer problem; and if he will make a statement; [21542]

(4) if he will give a breakdown of the £200 million cost of resolving the millennium computer problem in his Department and related bodies to show the estimated expenditure necessary, broken down by each agency or centre. [21540]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 18 December 1997]: The £200 million estimated as the cost to MOD of addressing the millennium problem covers costs associated with tackling the problem in the Department and its associated public bodies. It includes dealing with the problem as it affects front line units and provision for dealing with the embedded chip problem. The figure is based on estimates associated with Year 2000 tasks which have been assessed and for which costed plans have been produced. However the number, scope and complexity of systems to be checked within Defence means that the figures are still being refined.

In estimating the costs, contingency sums are included to cover unforeseen difficulties. The margin of error included for each system will depend on its complexity and the associated risk of finding that there is more to correct than originally estimated.

The Department's internal plans represent projections and assumptions which inform advice to Ministers on the affordability of particular parts of the Defence programme. Accordingly I am withholding information requested on the breakdown of costs associated with the millennium computer problem under exemption two of the Code of Practice on Access to Government information.

Funds to meet the projected costs are being allocated on the assumption that no additional money will be available from the contingency reserve.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what existing problems have been encountered in (a) his Department and (b) public bodies under the responsibility of his Department and (c) the armed forces as a consequence of the millennium computer problem; and if he will make a statement; [21539]

(2) what assessment he has made of the extent to which the operational military effectiveness of the United Kingdom armed forces is likely to be impaired by the millennium computer problem; and if he will make a statement. [21544]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 18 December 1997]: Millennium date change problems have already been identified and are being addressed in a number of operational and administrative computer systems across the Department, the Armed Forces and Non-Departmental Public Bodies.(NDPBs).

Within the programme established within MOD to address the year 2000 date change problem, priority is given to the rectification of those systems which could affect safety or operational effectiveness.

Joint Working Groups

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the projects on which his Department is working jointly with Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory; [21825]

(2) if he will list the joint working groups currently in operation as part of (a) the 1958 mutual defence agreement for co-operation on the uses of atomic energy for defence purposes, (b) the Polaris sales agreement and (c) the Trident sales agreement; [21822]

(3) if he will list the projects on which his Department is working jointly with Sandia National Laboratory; [21826]

(4) if he will list the research projects on which his Department is working jointly with Los Alamos National Laboratories. [21824]

Mr. Spellar: The Joint Working Groups established under the terms of the 1958 Mutual Defence Agreement exchange technical information on the following subjects:

Radiation Simulation and Kinetic Effects Technology
Energetic Materials
Test Monitoring
Nuclear Materials
Warhead Electrical Components and Technologies
Non-Nuclear Materials
Nuclear Counter-Terrorism Technology Facilities
Nuclear Weapons Engineering
Nuclear Warhead Physics
Computational Technology
Aircraft, Missile and Space System Hardening Laboratory Plasma Physics
Manufacturing Practices
Nuclear Weapon Accident Response Technology
Nuclear Weapon Code Development
Nuclear Weapon Environment and Damage Effects

With the exception of support to the UK Trident Project which is effected under the terms of the Polaris Sales Agreement, as amended for Trident, there is no joint work under way on new weapons systems. There are however regular exchanges on a wide range of research and technology areas as specified above. They involve all three US National Laboratories, namely Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, Sandia National Laboratory and Los Alamos National Laboratory.

Separate arrangements are in place for exchanges under the Polaris Sales Agreement, as amended for Trident. The groups concerned are the Joint Steering Task Group, supported by the Trident Joint Re-Entry Systems Working Group and the Joint Systems Performance and Assessment Group.

Arms Control

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the annual budget for his Department's Proliferation Arms Control Unit in the last two years; [22512]

(2) what work his Department is currently carrying out to support and implement arms control treaties in the fields of (a) chemical weapons and (b) nuclear weapons; and if he will make a statement; [22516]

(3) What work is currently being carried out by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment Porton Down to (a) support and implement the Chemical Weapons Convention and (b) support the negotiations to strengthen the 1972 Biological and Toxic Weapons Convention; [22548]

(4) what work is currently being carried out by the Atomic Weapons Establishment Aldermaston to support and implement international arms control agreements and treaties; [22549]

(5) what work is being carried out by his Department to support the negotiations to strengthen the 1972 Biological and Toxic Weapons Convention. [22517]

Mr. George Robertson: The Ministry of Defence and its agencies and contractors conduct a wide range of activities in support of the negotiation and implementation of international nuclear, biological and chemical arms control and non-proliferation agreements, in parallel with extensive activities in support of conventional arms control. It provides particular expertise in support of the effective verification of such arrangements.

The central division for this work is the Proliferation and Arms Control Secretariat within the Defence Policy Staff. It draws on other parts of the Department as necessary, including the Defence Commitments Staff, and specialists within the Defence Intelligence Staff and the Defence scientific staffs. The division works closely with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to develop Government Arms Control policy as a whole and routinely provides part of the UK team at international arms control negotiations and discussions. Its budget for 1995–96 was £3.362 million, and for 1996–97, £2.735 million. As well as the costs of the London-based staff, this also includes provision for the Senior Military Adviser to the UK Delegation to the Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe based in Vienna, and for a range of work at the Chemical and Biological Defence Sector (CBD) of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency at Porton Down in support of the effective verification of the Chemical and Biological Weapons Conventions. Outside the Department's Central Staffs, the Joint Arms Control Implementation Group, based at RAF Henlow, although mainly engaged in incoming and outgoing inspections under the CFE Treaty and Vienna Document, also provides escorts when UK defence facilities and units are inspected under the Chemical Weapons Convention. JACIG is also responsible for escorting under the INF Treaty and inspections to the former US Ground Launched Cruise Missile facilities in the UK.

The Department and the Armed Forces also continue to provide significant support to the work of the UN Special Commission on Iraq (UNSCOM) and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) in eliminating Iraq's nuclear, biological and chemical weapons and long-range ballistic missiles. The Director of the Proliferation and Arms Control Secretariat is a member of the Special Commission.

The Atomic Weapons Establishment has long had particular expertise in the seismic monitoring of nuclear tests, a programme costing some £1.5 million in the current financial year. Its specialist staff made a widely recognised contribution to the negotiation of an effective verification regime for the Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty (CTBT). The UK's contribution to the costs of the CTBT Organisation and the establishment of the International Monitoring System—£850,000 in the current financial year—is funded from the Defence budget. The MOD also provides a specialist in the UK Mission in Vienna in support of CTBT implementation.

CBD Porton Down provides advice and research and development on a range of Chemical and Biological arms control and export control matters, both for the MOD and other Government Departments, including for the DTI in support of national implementation of the CWC. It is recognised internationally as a leading player in development of chemical and biological verification techniques. Experts from Porton Down provide technical support to the UK delegation in Geneva in the negotiations to strengthen the BTWC. This includes acting as Friend of the Chair in some technical meetings. CBD also provides support for the UN Special Commission on Iraq, and for the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW), including input to inspector training, and is preparing for nomination as an OPCW designated laboratory for sample analysis.

Atomic Weapons Establishments

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current annual running costs of the Atomic Weapons Establishments. [21215]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 17 December 1997]: The annual running costs of the Atomic Weapons Establishment are of the order of £300 million. As well as research and production, they cover such things as capital investment, site maintenance, decommissioning redundant buildings, equipment and weapons, and waste management.

HEALTH

Psychiatric Hospitals

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what sums of money, out of the totals announced in his oral statement of 12 December, Official Report, column 1330, as being allocated to mental health care, will be used for providing (a) single-sex ward areas, (b) half-spindle locks on doors and (c) moves towards safe and therapeutic environments, within NHS acute psychiatric units; [21491]

(2) what he estimates the cost to be of providing (a) single-sex ward areas and (b) half-spindle locks on doors, in NHS acute psychiatric hospitals. [21492]

Mr. Boateng: Our prime concern is to ensure that the additional resources we have identified are deployed in the light of Departmental guidance, including guidance on single-sex wards and security, and in the most effective way to improve services for mentally ill people.

Detailed decisions about the allocation of the Local Authority Partnership Fund and the National Health Service Partnership Fund have yet to be made. We expect the Independent Reference Group to offer advice about priorities for the use of both funds. There is no reason why health and local authorities should not bid for these funds to support the development of facilities, of the kind suggested by the hon. Member, if they consider them to be a priority.

Information about the estimated costs of providing single-sex ward areas and half spindle locks on doors in NHS acute psychiatric units is not available centrally.

Northwick Park Hospital, Kenton

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will call for a report on the care policy of Northwick Park Hospital, Kenton. [21862]

Mr. Milburn: We know of no reason to call for a report on the care policy of Northwick Park Hospital. If there are specific concerns about an individual's treatment, the Northwick Park Hospital and St. Mark's National Health Service Trust has a complaints procedure through which these should be addressed in the first instance. Complaints should be referred to the Chief Executive of the trust.

St. George's Hospital, Tooting

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were waiting for operations at St. George's Hospital, Tooting on 1 December 1997. [22183]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is not available. Waiting time data collected centrally give the position at the end of each quarter. The latest figures are for 30 September 1997 and show 7,087 patients awaiting admission to St. George's Group National Health Service Trust on an in-patient basis. This includes all patients waiting for admission to hospital whether it be for surgery, medical treatment, assessment, therapy or rehabilitation. The number of patients waiting for an operation cannot be identified separately.

AIDS

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with health authorities and trusts on standards of health care for AIDS patients. [22169]

Ms Jowell: Earlier this year a consensus statement was published in the Lancet by The British HIV Association. This provides guidelines for antiretroviral treatment of HIV seropositive individuals, and has been widely disseminated across the country. The Department will shortly be issuing guidance to all health authorities in England on the use of the £228 million provided for HIV/AIDS treatment and care in 1998–99, which will draw attention to the publication of the guidelines, so that all health authorities are aware of them.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health authorities and trusts are not offering the full range of treatment and drugs to AIDS patients. [22171]

Ms Jowell: There have been anecdotal reports but no formal evidence that health authorities and trusts are not offering the full range of treatments and drugs to AIDS patients. In recognition of the increased costs and uptake of combination drug treatments we have allocated an extra £23 million to the HIV/AIDS treatment and care budget for 1998–99. £3 million of this extra funding is to provide additional resources to the 14 health authorities with the highest caseload. The new National Health Service White Paper outlines a modernisation programme which will provide a more consistent quality of care in the future.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the relative costs of treating an AIDS patient (a) in hospital and (b) as an outpatient. [22172]

Ms Jowell: The relative costs of treating AIDS patients in hospital and as outpatients will vary from hospital to hospital due to a variety of factors including the choice of treatment, which is a matter for discussion between patient and doctor. The success so far of new combination drug treatments for people with HIV and AIDS is resulting in fewer patients being treated as hospital in-patients. For the longer term, we have set up an Expert Working Group to undertake a Stocktake of the HIV/AIDS treatment and care budget, its use and future distribution, taking into account the costs and benefits of combination drug treatments.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when was the most recent review of the registration and inspection of privately-run nursing homes. [22180]

Mr. Boateng: There was a review of the regulation and inspection of social services in 1995–96 which covered the regulation and inspection of nursing homes. It stemmed from a Government consultation document, "Moving Forward", published in October 1995, for which Mr. Tom Burgner acted as independent assessor of consultation responses. The report following the review, "The Regulation and Inspection of Social Services" (commonly known as the Burgner Report) was published in October 1996. Copies of both "Moving Forward" and the Burgner Report are available in the Library.

We are committed to creating independent regulatory arrangements for residential care and nursing homes which are tough, transparent and accountable. We intend to publish a White Paper next year setting out our proposals.

Xenotransplantation

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what advice he has received from the Advisory Group on the Ethics of Xenotransplantation regarding the possibility of cross-species viral transfer as a result of xenotransplantation; [22612]

(2) what advice he has received from the Advisory Group on the Ethics of Xenotransplantation regarding clinical trials involving genetic material from pigs. [22611]

Mr. Boateng: The Advisory Group on the Ethics of Xenotransplantation completed its work in August 1986. Its advice is contained in its Report "Animal Tissue into Humans" which was published in January 1997. Copies are available in the Library.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact of the proposals in the white paper on Freedom of Information on the modus operandi of (a) the United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority and (b) the Advisory Group on the Ethics of Xenotransplantation. [22633]

Mr. Boateng: The Government have recently published a White Paper "Your Right to Know: Freedom of Information" setting out our proposals for a Freedom of Information Act. These proposals will be discussed by the United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority and appropriate action taken. The Advisory Group on the Ethics of Xenotransplantation completed its work in August 1996 and no longer exists.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the Members of the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens, indicating (a) the date on which each membership commenced, (b) those members who are employed or have been employed by companies with interests in biotechnology and (c) those members who, either individually or on behalf of groups, are known to be opposed to xenotransplantation on ethical grounds. [22629]

Mr. Boateng: The joint Department of Health/Health and Safety Executive Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens (ACDP) was reconstituted in January 1995 for a three-year term (subsequently extended for a further 10 months). All current members, except for the two indicated, have served on the ACDP for the full term since January 1995. The members are:

Chairman

Dr. M. J. Crumpton: Served as Chairman since 1991

Expert members

Dr. B. Bannister: Member since 1993

Professor G. E. Griffin: Appointed December 1994

Professor D. J. Jeffries: Member since 1993

Dr. E. A. Gould: Member since 1991

Dr. H. S. Tranter: Appointed December 1994

Dr. R. W. A. Girdwood: Appointed December 1994

Dr. T. D. Wyatt: Member since 1987

Employer/employee representatives

Mr. A. R. Clare: Member since 1984

Miss A. M. Harris: Member since January 1984

Ms V. Bevan: Member since May 1994

Dr. R. C. Slade: Appointed December 1994

Dr. R. Owen: Member since 1981

Mr. P. Taylor: Re-joined ACDP November 1996, served previously 1986–1990

Mrs. T. McGuire: Appointed December 1994

Of the expert members Dr. Bannister, Professor Griffin, Professor Jeffries, Dr. Girdwood and Dr. Wyatt are employed within the health service. Dr. Gould is an Assistant Director at the National Environment Research Council Institute of Virology and Environmental Microbiology. Dr. Jones is the head of the Division of Environmental Microbiology at the Institute for Animal Health. Dr. Tranter is a microbiologist at the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research.

In line with the tripartite principle of all Health and Safety Commission Advisory Committees, employer and employee representatives were nominated by the Confederation of British Industry, The Public Health Laboratory Service (PHLS) Board, the Committee of Vice Chancellors and Principals, the Trades Union Congress and the Royal College of Nursing. Mr. Clare is under contract to his former employer, SmithKline Beecham and Miss Harris is the Medical Affairs Manager at Glaxo Research and Development Ltd. Ms Bevan is head of PHLS Technical Services. Dr. Slade is Safety Advisor at King's College London. Dr. Owen is now retired; he was the former Deputy Director of Medical Services at the Health and Safety Executive. Mr. Taylor, Ms Smith and Mrs McGuire all work within the health service.

We shall write to the hon. Member with further details of the commercial and non-commercial interests of the Chairman and members.

The ACDP is concerned with formulating advice on the infection risks of xenotransplantation. They have not been required to provide advice on ethical issues, and their personal views are not known.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 27 November 1997, Official Report, column 652, when the invitation to visit Imutran's animal facilities was received by his Department; and on which date the visit occurred. [22636]

Mr. Boateng: My noble Friend, The Baroness Jay, Minister of State, who has responsibility for this area, at Imutran's invitation, visited their facilities on 17 October 1997. During her visit she was advised of the developments in their work. The invitation was oral and the proposed itinerary was faxed to the Department on 10 September 1997.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those companies and other organisations from whom his Department has formally sought views in respect of the development of a regulatory structure for xenotransplantation, indicating in each case the date on which views were formally sought. [22609]

Mr. Boateng: An open consultation was held in January 1997 to which industry and others responded. The responses have been considered in depth by the United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority and advice submitted to Ministers. Copies of all those responses, other than those made in confidence, will be placed in the Library in due course.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) which animals he plans to exclude, on ethical grounds, from use as source animals for xenotransplantation; and if he will make a sttaement; [22628]

(2) if he will list those studies which he has evaluated regarding the transfer of pig viruses into human cells through the process of xenotransplantation; and if he will make a statement; [22610]

(3) if the government will make it their policy to prohibit clinical trials of xenotransplantation involving genetic material from pigs until further data have been collected on cross-species viral transfer; and if he will make a statement. [22607]

Mr. Boateng: Proposals for the use of any animal in xenotransplantation will be carefully considered by the United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority (UKXIRA).

The Government are advised by the UKXIRA on the acceptability of any application to undertake trials in xenotransplantation involving humans. The UKXIRA's advice will include consideration of issues such as the microbiological risk of any proposed procedure, the use of the animal proposed as the source, and the likely effect on the patient and their relatives. Within the UK we will allow clinical trials involving humans to take place only if and when we are satisfied that the risks associated with such procedures are acceptable. The UKXIRA will take the latest published information and other evidence offered into account in its advice.

The Home Office has responsibility for the use of animals in scientific procedures and their view on the acceptability of the use of any animal as a source will depend on a consideration of the harm of the procedure against the benefit it may bring. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Office, however, has indicated that he is not prepared to sanction the use of Great Apes for use in scientific procedures.

Research continues into the science underlying xenotransplant developments, including cross-species viral transfer. The Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens (ACDP) is also working with the UKXIRA on microbiological issues involved in xenotransplantation.

Epilepsy

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has commissioned into sudden death in epilepsy; what directions have been issued to health authorities and trusts concerning sudden death in epilepsy; and if he will make a statement. [22484]

Mr. Boateng: The Medical Research Council (MRC) funds around £600,000 of general epilepsy research. There is no research currently being undertaken which is specifically and exclusively into sudden death in epilepsy. However, the MRC multicentre study of early epilepsy and single seizures is looking at immediate versus deferred drug therapy in patients with recently diagnosed single seizures. A number of different outcomes are being examined, including death, and prognostic factors for these are being determined.

The Department issued an Executive Letter (95)120 "A Positive Approach to Epilepsy" to all health authorities and trusts in January 1996 asking the National Health Service to work towards best practice in commissioning, contracting and service delivery for epilepsy. The Epilepsy Task Force's "Specification for Epilepsy Services" was enclosed with the EL which made specific recommendations to improve and prioritise epilepsy services, including reducing morbidity and preventing avoidable mortality.

The Department is working closely with other government departments to increase cooperation on epilepsy and encourage initiatives in other areas such as education and employment.

Dental Services

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the estimated (a) over and (b) under spend for each quarter of 1997–98 in respect of the NHS dental budget. [22561]

Mr. Milburn: There is no fixed allocation for expenditure in the General Dental Service (GDS). Expenditure is affected by a number of factors including patient charge contribution. GDS expenditure, net of patient charges, for the two quarters of 1997–98 for which figures are available are as follows:

Net GDS expenditure—England

1997–98	£ million
April to June	237.5
July to September	236.5

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the current cost of introducing free dental preliminary examinations in the United Kingdom; and what plans he has to bring forward proposals to that end. [22769]

Mr. Milburn: The annual cost of abolishing charges for dental examinations in the United Kingdom based on December 1997 costs, would be about £75 million. This makes no allowance for any resulting increase in the number of examinations or in the amount of treatment provided.

Dental charges are being examined as part of the comprehensive spending review, which is looking at all aspects of the Department's spending in the context of the Government's election manifesto commitment

"if you are ill or injured there will be a national health service there to help; and access to it will be based on need and need alone—not on your ability to pay, or on who your general practitioner happens to be or on where you live".

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements he has made for emergency dental treatment for those who are deregistered following the change of period for continuing care payments. [22768]

Mr. Milburn: Patients are not being deregistered by this change. The registration period for both adult continuing care and child capitation payments was harmonised at fifteen months with effect from 1 September 1996. Regular attenders will be unaffected by the change as their registration period will roll forward when they attend their dentist. The registration of those patients who have not attended the dentist for fifteen months will lapse.

Dentists are free to re-register any patients whose registrations have lapsed. It is for dentists to decide whether they wish to accept any patient onto their list.

Dentists can treat any patient as an occasional patient for emergency care. Health authorities may also make arrangements for dental treatment of patients in urgent cases, when dentists in their area are not normally available to provide treatment.

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will commission a study to evaluate the costs per item of treatment carried out by (a) community dentists and (b) general dental practitioners. [22770]

Mr. Milburn: We have no plans to do so. The General Dental Service (GDS) and the Community Dental Service are complementary services and are not directly comparable. The fees paid for each item of service in the GDS is set out in the Statement of Dental Remuneration, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what current studies he has commissioned to analyse the benefits of preventative dentistry. [22771]

Mr. Milburn: We monitor the combined effect of preventative and restorative dentistry through regular surveys of adult and child dental health. The next survey of adults is due to take place this year and of children in 2003.

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost to his Department of continuing care payments for dentists in each financial year since the scheme was initiated; and what estimate he has made of the comparable cost had the payments been made on a 15-month basis. [22767]

Mr. Milburn: In October 1990 the new dental contract was introduced. From this date, general dental service dentists received continuing care payments for adult patients who were registered with them for National Health Service treatment. The cost of payments made in respect of continuing care for the financial years 1990–91 to 1996–97 in England is set out in the table. Expenditure in 1990–91 and 1991–92 reflects the introduction of the new contract and is therefore not comparable to later years. No estimate has been made of the comparable cost had payments been made on a 15-month basis.

General dental service: Cost of continuing care payments[1] for year ending 1990–91 to 1996–97

England

Year	Continuing care cost (£)
1990–91[2]	13,921,120
1991–92	89,639,544
1992–93	109,105,816
1993–94	105,616,458
1994–95	108,162,318
1995–96	107,429,935
1996–97	108,170,299

[1] Continuing care payments were introduced in October 1990 with the introduction of the new dental contract.
[2] Figure is for six months from October 1990.

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the sums allocated to the remuneration of general dental practitioners are cash limited. [22774]

Mr. Milburn: No. Neither health authorities nor individual general dental practitioners are subject to fixed budgets for general dental services.

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to recognise the GDPA for purposes of negotiation. [22772]

Mr. Milburn: None. The General Dental Services Committee is the organisation recognised by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State as being representative of the dental profession for the purposes of consultation on the general dental services.

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what have been the rises in real terms in NHS payments to general dental practitioners in the last five years; and how these have compared with (a) the retail prices index and (b) real rises in income for non-manual workers. [22773]

Mr. Milburn: Gross expenditure in the General Dental Service in England was £1245.97 million in 1991–92 and £1323.07 million in 1996–97, a rise of 6.2 per cent. in the five year period. In real terms, when compared to the GDP deflator, gross expenditure fell by 7.6 per cent.

Changes in gross expenditure cannot be compared directly with the retail prices index and the income for non-manual workers. Gross expenditure includes not only income for general dental practitioners but also payments to meet practice expenses and additional payments such as maternity allowance, sick pay, seniority payments etc. Levels of expenditure are also linked to the volume of National Health Service dental services provided by dentists.

Dentists working not less than 2 days per week in the GDS, had average earnings of about £50,000 per annum from the NHS in 1996–97, after expenses.

Information on the rise in the retail price index and the earnings of non-manual employees at April each year as reported in the "New Earnings Survey 1997" (Table 30) is available in the Library.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will extend the registration period for NHS dental treatment to 24 months from the end of the month in which the patient last visited his or her dentist. [22283]

Mr. Milburn: The National Health Service (General Dental Services) Amendment (No. 2) Regulation 1996 SI 1996/2051, which implemented the changes to the registration period, were laid before Parliament on 6 August 1996, and came into force on 1 September 1996.

We have no plans to review this policy, which will improve value for money by focusing payments to dentists on those patients receiving active care from them.

Any savings generated will be put back into the General Dental Service, in a targeted way to achieve better oral health for the population.

Waiting Times

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the average waiting times for treatment (a) at the Westmorland General Hospital and (b) in the Morecambe Bay Health Authority area in (i) 1994, (ii) 1995, (iii) 1996 and (iv) 1997. [21958]

Mr. Milburn: The available information is given in the table. This shows average waiting times for all waiting list admissions to hospital during the years concerned.

Average waiting times (days) for admission to hospital on either an ordinary or day case basis during:

	1994–95	1995–96
Westmorland Hospital NHS Trust	85.0	81.0
Morecambe Bay Health Authority	131.3	100.0

Insulin Pen Injector Needles

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to make insulin pen injector needles available on prescription for diabetics. [22487]

Mr. Milburn: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the member for Greenock and Inverclyde (Dr. Godman) on 17 June 1997, Official Report, column 102.

Suffolk Health Authority Funding

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what effect the introduction into the capitation formula this year of a needs weighting for (a) services for people with learning disabilities and (b) administration and other hospital services has had on the Government's health spending allocation to the Suffolk Health Authority for 1998–99. [22483]

Mr. Milburn: The aim of the weighted capitation formula is to determine health authorities' fair shares of available resources by setting targets. The formula does not directly determine allocations. Allocations reflect our decisions on the speed at which health authorities are brought nearer to target through the distribution of growth.

For 1998–99 the formula has been made fairer by the introduction of two new needs weightings. Relative to other health authorities, the introduction of an administration and other hospital services weighting has reduced Suffolk Health Authority's target share by £2,975,000 (1.14 per cent.); and the introduction of a weighting for people with learning disabilities has reduced Suffolk Health Aurhtority's target share by £3,742,000 (1.44 per cent.).

Genetic Engineering

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) date of appointment, (b) terms of reference and (c) membership of the focus groups established by his Department to discuss genetic engineering. [22599]

Ms Jowell: There are no specific focus groups established by the Department to discuss genetic engineering. However, the Department provides the Secretariat for the Gene Therapy Advisory Committee (GTAC) which was set up in 1993, and is chaired by Professor Norman Nevin (Professor of Medical Genetics) from Belfast City Hospital.

GTAC members are:

Professor E. Anionwu—Thames Valley University
Mrs. R. Barnes—Cystic Fibrosis Trust
Professor J. Burn—Royal Victoria Infirmary
Professor A. Dayan—St. Bartholomew's Hospital
Revd. Dr. K. Denison—Church in Wales
Dr. B. Gibson—Hospital for Sick Children
Professor I. Hart—St. Thomas' Hospital
Mrs. A. Hunt—Genetic Interest Group
Professor P. Johnston—Belfast City Hospital
Professor T. Marteau—Guy's Hospital
Professor J. Neil—University of Glasgow.
Professor A. Pinching—St. Bartholomew's Hospital
Miss E. Platt QC—Lawyer
Sir B. Richards—Peptide Therapeutics Group plc
Professor M. Steel—University of St. Andrew's
Mrs. I Train—Nurse

GTAC advises on the ethical acceptability of proposals for gene therapy research in humans.

The Human Genetics Advisory Commission (HGAC), chaired by Professor Sir Colin Campbell (Vice Chancellor, University of Nottingham), was set up in 1996 and reports to health and industry Ministers.

HGAC members are:

Professor C. Aitken—Emeritus Professor, University of Edinburgh
Dr. M. Aldred—Retinoblastoma Society
Professor M. Bobrow—University of Cambridge
Mrs. D. Littlejohn—Central Office of Industrial Tribunals, Scotland
Professor N. Nevin—Chair GTAC
Dr. O. O'Neill—Chair Nuffield Council on Bioethics
Revd. Dr. J. Polkinghorne—Chair Advisory Committee on Genetic Testing
Dr. G. Poste—SmithKline Beecham
Ms M. Stuart—British Broadcasting Corporation

HGAC has a remit to keep under review scientific progress at the frontiers of human genetics and related fields.

Adhesive Arachnoiditis

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of adhesive arachnoiditis have been diagnosed in the last 20 years; and if he will make a statement. [21960]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not available centrally. Statistics held by the Department of Health reflect only diagnostic information collected on in-patients attending National Health Service hospitals in England. The diagnostic information is held in the form of codes from the World Health Organisation International Classification of Diseases, which is ordered by the cause of disease. In this classification, arachnoiditis is not directly used as a term because it is a symptom, not a cause. The Department cannot determine the prevalence of incidence of arachnoiditis from the statistics collected centrally.

Lady Helen Gardiner

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the letter of 14 December from the Minister of State, if he will set out the considerations which led him to conclude that Lady Helen Gardiner should not be reappointed as Chairman of the Surrey Ambulance Service NHS Trust. [22216]

Mr. Milburn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has today written to Lady Helen inviting her to serve until the end of September as chair of the Surrey Ambulance Trust. Lady Helen has already indicated her willingness to accept the appointment.

Read Codes Version 3

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the length of time required to produce a service-strength product of Read Codes Version 3; and if he will make a statement. [22404]

Mr. Milburn: The release of Read Codes Version 3 planned for March 1998 will contain all codes and terms from earlier Read Versions. This is the service strength product, which will enable Read Codes Version 3 to be used in both the Acute and General Practice sectors.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of (a) NHS sites participating in the Read Codes Version 3 partnership programme, (b) NHS sites which have ceased participation in the programme, (c) non-partnership NHS sites currently using Version 3 and (d) non-partnership NHS sites which have ceased to use Version 3; and, for categories (a) and (c), to what extent Version 3 is in use on those sites. [22407]

Mr. Milburn: To avoid being overwhelmed by inquiries from other hospitals, hospitals participating in the partnership programme have asked that their names should not be placed in the public domain. Accordingly, we shall provide a personal response to the hon. Member dealing with his first two points.

The information to answer the remaining points is not held centrally.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list each evaluation (a) conducted or (b) commissioned by his Department into the efficacy of the Read Codes Version 3 coding system, stating the date and author or body responsible for each one; and if he will place the evaluation reports in the Library. [22408]

Mr. Milburn: The Read Codes Version 3 partnership programme started in mid 1995 and was designed to identify, from its operational use, what additional terms might need to be added to Version 3, such as those describing new clinical practices and procedures. Evaluation of the benefits from using Read Codes is part of this programme, which will finish in March 1998. No further evaluations are planned.

Within the partnership programme, one of the main sites for evaluating Version 3 of the Read Codes is the Pembrokeshire and Derwen NHS Trust. Two draft reports on its use of Read Codes Version 3 for clinical coding purposes have been published recently. One is an internal report produced by the trust itself; the other is the result of both external and internal evaluations. Copies of these two draft reports will be placed in the Library as will copies of the final reports when published.

NHS Wages

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS employees earn less than £4 an hour. [22641]

Mr. Milburn: The information is not available centrally following a decision made during the previous Government to discontinue the collection of detailed earnings information.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to seek exemptions from the minimum wage for description of persons working in the NHS. [22654]

Mr. Milburn: The Department of Health is contributing to the Government's evidence to the Low Pay Commission. There are no plans to seek specific exemptions from the minimum wage for descriptions of persons working in the National Health Service.

NHS (Suffolk)

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to reply to the letter of the hon. Member for South Suffolk of 20 November with respect to the NHS in Suffolk. [22291]

Mr. Milburn: I have written to the hon. Member today.

Condom Machines

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to require that condom machines in entertainment venues and public lavatories stock only products approved to British kite mark standards; and if he will make a statement. [12915]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 27 October 1997]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 27 October 1997, Official Report column 767.

There is no general power which would enable me to require this. However, local authority Trading Standards Officers could take action under the General Product Safety Regulations 1994 if the product could be deemed unsafe under the regulations.

Community Nurses

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average number of community nurses in English health authorities in each year since 1979 for which figures are available. [15656]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 12 November 1997]: The information requested is available from 1982 and is shown in the table.

NHS Hospital and Community Health Services (HCHS) average number of community health nurses per health authority in England; as at 30 September of each year

Whole-time equivalents

	Community Health nurses	Number of Health Authorities	Average number of Community Health Nurses
1982	40,440	191	210
1983	41,230	191	220
1984	41,420	191	220
1985	43,050	191	230
1986	42,560	191	220
1987	42,230	191	220
1988	42,470	192	220
1989	41,410	190	220
1990	44,000	190	230
1991	44,540	184	240
1992	43,910	178	250
1993	43,850	145	300
1994	43,090	117	370
1995	53,260	105	510
1996	56,560	100	570

Notes:

1. Figures are not available before 1982.

2. Figures for 1982 to 1989 are for "primary healthcare" nursing and midwifery staff, including: health visitors, district nurses, school nurses, community midwives and a small number of other "primary healthcare" nursing and midwifery staff. The figures for 1990 to 1994 cover the same staff groups as for 1982 to 1989, but include community psychiatric nurses and community learning difficulties nurses, and exclude community midwives. The figures for 1995 to 1996 are based on new occupation codes and are not, therefore, directly comparable with figures for earlier years although they cover similar groups to those used in 1990 to 1994.

Figures are rounded to the nearest ten.

NHS Appointments

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the guidance given to regional chairmen in June on NHS board appointments. [21909]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 22 December 1997]: We wrote to Regional Chairmen on 23 June signalling a raft of changes that we had decided should be made to the appointments process. They were as follows:

the person specification for non-executives and chairmen to be changed to encourage more National Health Service users and carers as their community representatives on NHS boards; interview panels to ensure that all candidates were personally committed to the NHS and would bring a user's perspective to the board;

local authorities and Members of Parliament to be invited to nominate candidates. All nominees to go through the usual selection process and be judged on merit; the balance of board membership to be changed, shifting more towards users and carers and others with a community voice; and all candidates, including those nominated by MPs and local authorities, those already on a database, new self-nominees and serving board members seeking reappointment to be considered against the new criteria for the vacancies available.

DEFENCE

Armed Forces (Food)

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will give a breakdown of the country of origin of meat bought for the armed forces in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement; [20243]

(2) if he will ensure that all meat bought for the armed forces is of United Kingdom origin; and if he will make a statement. [20244]

Mr. Spellar: The procurement of food for the Armed Forces is contracted to Booker Foodservice which took over the contract from NAAFI on 1 October 1997. The Ministry of Defence does not specify the source from which Booker Foodservice should obtain meat, but expects it to seek the best market prices for these and all other products. It is required to give full consideration to British products. Booker Foodservice has advised the following estimate for the breakdown of country of origin for meat purchased for the Armed Forces, based on value, for the 12-month period ending September 1998:

	Per cent.
Pork
United Kingdom	100
Lamb
New Zealand	52
Uruguay	48
Beef
Australia	30
New Zealand	24
Uruguay	22
United Kingdom	13
Holland	4
Ireland	4
Brazil	3

These figures will be subject to variation dependent upon markets providing the best value for money.

Chemical and Biological Weapons

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff are currently employed at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down; and what plans he has for staffing levels over the next five years. [22514]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 13 January 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your question concerning numbers of staff employed at DERA's Chemical and Biological Defence Sector (CBD) at Porton Down.

The number of staff employed by CBD Porton Down was 588 at 1 December 1997.

With respect to staffing levels over the next five years, on current plans we expect our numbers to remain fairly constant. However, these plans take no account of the outcome of the Strategic Defence Review which may affect our plans in either direction.

I hope this is helpful.

Lewisite

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the Chemical Defence Establishment's evaluation of the effects of short-term exposure to lewisite. [22515]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 13 January 1998:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the evaluation of the effects of short term exposure to lewisite as this matter is my responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA).

I have nothing to add to my letter to you of 20 August 1997 (Official Report dated 27 October col. 660) in which I said that lewisite is one of a group of chemical warfare agents known as vesicants or blistering agents. I also explained that DERA's Chemical and Biological Defence Sector's evaluation, based on US human studies from the 1940s and continuing Porton Down animal studies, of the effects of short term exposure to lewisite are that both liquid and vapour forms result in chemical burns to the skin, eyes and respiratory tract. Lewisite injuries are immediately painful. The potential for widespread damage to the internal organs is significant.

Armed Forces (Pay and Conditions)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's estimate of the value of free board and lodging to an employee expressed as an hourly pay rate. [22642]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 12 January 1998]: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Hawk Aircraft

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to upgrade Hawk trainers with digital cockpits. [22692]

Mr. Spellar: There are currently no plans to fit the RAF's Hawk aircraft with a digital cockpit.

PR9 Canberra Reconnaissance Aircraft

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the PR9 Canberra reconnaissance aircraft each came into service; what was their design life; and what is the date on which they are expected to leave service. [22696]

Mr. Spellar: There are five Canberra Mk PR9 aircraft. The aircraft all entered service between 4 March 1959 and 4 August 1960. It is assessed that sufficient fatigue life remains on the Canberra Mk PR9 aircraft to enable them to achieve their predicted out of service date of 2003.

System Requirements

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to sign a memorandum of understanding with the USA to combine the TRACER and Future Scout and Cavalry system requirements. [22695]

Mr. Spellar: Ministers are currently considering the case for signature early this year of a Memorandum of Understanding covering the combine TRACER/Future Scout and Cavalry System requirement. I will write to the hon. Member when a decision is made.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Contaminated Land

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which EU standards on contaminated land have not been implemented by the United Kingdom Government. [22755]

Angela Eagle: There are no EU standards on contaminated land.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when his Department expects to complete a register of contaminated land; [22753]

(2) when his Department expects to formulate a definition of contaminated land. [22754]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside, (Ms Ellman) on 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 439. The legislation referred to in that answer provides a definition of contaminated land. The legislation will also place a duty on enforcing authorities to maintain registers of land which meet that definition. These registers will also contain prescribed particulars of enforcement action taken and of remediation works carried out.

Inland Waterways

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Enviornment, Transport and the Regions how many inland waterway freight grants have been issued since 1981; and if he will list them by location and value. [22760]

Ms Glenda Jackson: 10 inland waterway freight grants have been awarded:

1983	Millgate Investments, Gainsborough, Lincs	369,340
1984	Varma Services Ltd., Deptford, London SE	859,200
1984	Sheffield Haulage and Storage Ltd., Rotherham	61,375
1985	West Country Fuels Ltd., Gloucester	26,950
1986	Colwick Petroleum Ltd., Nr. Nottingham	63,494
1990	Sand and Gravel Ltd., Leeds	20,640
1991	Wimpey Hobbs Ltd., Greenwich, London SE	402,832
1993	Huntsman Chemical Co. Ltd., Carrington, Manchester	415,000
1996	Medway Shipping Ltd., Gillingham, Kent	47,338
1997	J. J. Prior (Transport) Ltd., Fingringhoe, Essex	121,410

Waste Management

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review and update the waste management policies set out in the 1995 White Paper "Making Waste Work: A Strategy for Sustainable Waste Management in England and Wales". [23176]

Mr. Meacher: Reducing the waste we generate, making better use of waste, and ensuring that the remainder is disposed of safely, are all critical components of a more sustainable society. The Government set a high priority on improving our waste management. That is why I am announcing today the preparation of a new waste strategy for England and Wales.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have asked officials, working with the Environment Agency and other interested parties, to begin preparation of the new strategy which will fulfil the requirements of the Environment Act 1995. The first step towards this goal will be a wide public consultation beginning in the Spring of this year, leading to publication of a White Paper in 1999.

The 1995 White Paper "Making Waste Work" set out the previous Government's policy framework for the management of waste, identified ways in which waste could be managed in a more sustainable way and set a number of targets for achieving that aim. It recognised the principles of the waste hierarchy and best practicable environmental option as being at the heart of waste policy, and set out a number of options by which central Government, local authorities, industry and commerce, the waste management industry, householders, and the voluntary and community sectors could help achieve that strategy's aims.

This Government support the broad thrust of the policies set out in the 1995 White Paper but nevertheless believe that the time is now right for a comprehensive review of waste management in England and Wales. I am sure that this will be welcomed by all interested parties. They will want to know what our future priorities will be so that they can plan and invest for them.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Small Claims

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many applications to have housing cases rescinded from the small claims procedure have been granted since the introduction of the higher small claims limit in January 1996. [21313]

Mr. Hoon: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what (a) monitoring and (b) research his Department has undertaken into the impact on housing cases of the increase in the small claims limit from January 1996. [21315]

Mr. Hoon: Claims for possession, which form the overwhelming majority of housing cases, are excluded from the small claims regime. The collection of more detailed statistical information in relation to small claims was introduced by the Court Service in 1996 as part of the exercise in monitoring the effects of the rise in the limit to £3,000. One of the categories is "non-possession housing disputes". This Department has not undertaken any research specifically in connection with housing cases, however, a wider study of litigants' experiences of small claims by Professor John Baldwin was published in December 1997.

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate he has made of the impact on (a) the volume of legal aid certificates and (b) legal aid expenditure of the increase in the small claims limit made in January 1996. [21319]

Mr. Hoon: It is estimated that the increase in the small claims limit made on 1 January 1996, from £1,000 to £3,000, has resulted in a reduction of 18.8 per cent. in the number of certificates issued during 1996–97 for money claims (excluding personal injury claims).

Certificates issued

Year	Money claims (excluding PI)	Annual change (per cent.)
1995–96	148,364	—
1996–97	120,492	-18.8

It is not possible to identify separately any overall savings resulting from the small claims limit.

Money and Damages Claims

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate he has made of the potential savings accruing from the removal of money and damages claims from the scope of legal aid. [21314]

Mr. Hoon: Our spending plans remain unaffected by the proposed removal of money and damages claims from the scope of legal aid. The aim is to use the existing budget better. Until we have reached final decisions on the types of case that are to be excluded and other matters of important detail the expenditure implications cannot be quantified. That will not be until we have completed the extensive consultation we are currently undertaking.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Civil Service (Management Functions) Act

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what delegations were made in 1997 under the Civil Service (Management Functions) Act 1992; to whom those delegations were made; and what were the main conditions attached to them. [23096]

Dr. David Clark: Since the last report to Parliament on, 14 January 1997, Official Report, columns 187–88, Ministers and statutory office holders in charge of departments' have been given delegated authority (from 1 April 1997) under the Civil Service (Management Functions) Act 1992 to determine in respect of home civil servants in their respective departments the allowances for members of the Senior Civil Service.

In some cases, for staff appointed by statutory office holders, the Minister for the Civil Service was statutorily required to give consent to terms and conditions of service. For such staff, delegation has been effected by waiving that requirement, subject to the conditions attaching to delegation.

The delegation was subject to the condition that recipients comply with the provisions of the Civil Service Management Code as amended from time to time. Copies of the Civil Service Management Code are available in the Libraries of both Houses.

A similar authorisation was also made to the Health and Safety Executive. This came into effect on 12 May 1997 and was similarly subject to the condition that they comply with the provisions of the Civil Service Management Code as amended for time to time.

'The statutory office holders are:

Commissioners of Inland Revenue;

Head of the Registry of Friendly Societies, being the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies and the First Commissioner of the Building Societies Commission;

Chief Charity Commissioner;

Commissioners of Customs and Excise;

Crown Estate Commissioners;

Director General of Electricity Supply;

Director General of Fair Trading;

Director General of Gas Supply;

Director General of National Lottery;

Director of National Savings;

Director of Passenger Rail Franchising;

Director General of Telecommunication;

Director General of Water Services;

Director of Public Prosecutions;

Director of the Serious Fraud Office;

Government Actuary;

Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools in England;

Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools in Wales;

International Rail Regulator;

Public Works Loan Commissioners;

Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration and Health Service Commissioners;

Rail Regulator;

Registrar General for Scotland.

WALES

Literacy and Numeracy

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to raise standards in the basic skills of literacy and numeracy in Wales. [22861]

Mr. Hain: Responses to our White Paper "Building Excellent Schools Together" have strongly endorsed the Government's overriding emphasis on strengthening the basic skills of literacy and numeracy and the targets set for attainment in the core subjects in primary schools. The broad purpose and content of the curriculum in Wales—notably as regards the Welsh language and the Curriculum Cymreig—is also well understood and appreciated. The responses did, however, show that many teachers are concerned about overload within the curriculum taught in primary schools in Wales and feel that this might work against the drive to improve standards of literacy and numeracy.

I take these concerns very seriously and I have therefore asked for urgent advice from the Qualifications, Curriculum and Assessment Authority for Wales (ACCAC) on ways in which the curriculum might be slimmed down in a way which reflects the distinctive nature of the curriculum in Wales. I have also written to every primary school head teacher to emphasise the Government's commitment to the targets set in the White Paper and to explain what I have asked ACCAC to do.

In the light of the responses to the White Paper, I want to be sure that the position of Welsh and more generally of the Curriculum Cymreig have been weighed along with our broader objectives to ensure rigorous standards of teaching and learning together with a sound progression into secondary school education. I do not assume that a reduction in overload would of itself result in a better use of available time and I have, therefore, asked Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools to provide further guidance to deal with this point.

I expect to receive advice by March. I will then set out an agenda for action and will consult teachers and others before changes are introduced. This timetable will allow for the option of modifying the Welsh curriculum from September 1998 in line with the announcement today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education.

Copies of my letters to head teachers and ACCAC have been placed in the Library of the House.

Summer Schools

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children took part in the summer school scheme in 1997; and what estimate he has made of the number taking part in (a) 1998, (b) 1999 and (c) 2000. [20101]

Mr. Hain: A total of 736 children took part in the 1997 Wales Summer Literacy Programme. Provision for expansion is being made. The Scheme is to be extended to every authority for 1998 and they are currently working up their delivery plans.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost of the summer school scheme in 1997; and what estimate he has made of the cost in (a) 1998, (b) 1999 and (c) 2000. [20100]

Mr. Hain: The 1997 pilot programme was implemented as a joint initiative between Local Education Authorities (LEAs) and Training and Enterprise Councils (TECs). Seedcorn funding of £75,000 was provided by the Welsh Office.

Subject to Parliamentary approval there will be £220,000 available through the Grants for Education Support and Training (GEST) programme in 1998–99. Provision beyond 1999 is the subject of the Department's Comprehensive Spending Review.

Chiropody and Podiatry Services

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the budget for each trust in Wales for NHS chiropody and podiatry services in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1995–96 and (d) 1994–95. [22542]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Figures on NHS Trust budgets are not available centrally. Expenditure on community chiropody services by NHS Trusts in Wales for the years 1994–95 to 1996–97 is given in the table. Expenditure for 1997–98 is not yet available.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Sri Lanka

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what (a) financial, (b) food and (c) medical aid has been given by Her Majesty's Government to Sri Lanka since 1 January. [21891]

Mr. Foulkes: The total expenditure on bilateral assistance given to Sri Lanka in 1997 by Her Majesty's Government was about £6 million. This included some assistance to projects in the health sector; in particular for a project to improve health of mothers and children displaced by civil conflict. No food aid was provided.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Firearms (Compensation)

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many outstanding unpaid claims there were for compensation under the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997 on 1 January 1998; and what was the average delay between claim and payment for categories A, B and C on that date. [22210]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 12 January 1998]: On 1 January 1998, there were 20,779 claims awaiting processing under Options A and B and 9,628 claims awaiting processing under Option C, the great majority of which are mixed claims on which the Option A and B elements have been paid. The average turn round time between receipt of claims from the police and processing of Options A and B was 19 weeks. Regular processing of Option C claims is expected to begin later this month.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make payment for the confiscated pistols of C. J. A. Foules, West Charleston Grange, near Kingsbridge, Devon. [22527]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 12 January 1998]: Claims under the Firearms Compensation Scheme are dealt with in the order in which they are received from the police. This claim was received on 23 September 1997, towards the end of the three month hand-in period, and is defective, in that the claimant has declined to sign the required declaration relinquishing ownership of the surrendered weapons. Until this is done, no payment can be made. The claim is therefore being returned for completion.

Special Constables

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Maidenhead (Mrs. May) of 4 December 1997, Official Report, column 292, on compensation for special constables, for what reasons he does not plan to consult organisations representing business and industry on his proposals for new regulations governing the Special Constabulary. [22215]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 12 January 1998]: We have not consulted organisations representing business and industry because the proposals contained in the consultation papers do not have direct implications for these sectors. If, as a result of the consultations with the police and local authority associations and the special constabulary, the proposals are revised so that they do have such implications, then we shall, of course, consult these organisations.

Common Travel Area

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the efficacy of the common travel area between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland in relation to immigration matters and asylum. [22545]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Common Travel Area is an important part of our immigration control arrangements, recognising geographical proximity and shared close interests. Its operation is kept under constant review.

Lottery Draws

Ms Blears: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has published the draft Bill to restrict the frequency of lottery draws. [23094]

Mr. George Howarth: I published the draft Lotteries (Frequent Draws) Bill on 7 January for comments by 30 January.

This follows my announcement on 13 November that the Government intend to introduce legislation seeking to restrict the frequency of on-line lottery draws under the Lotteries and Amusements Act 1976.

The draft Bill restricts the frequency of such draws to one a day on any particular premises in Great Britain.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Ms Mary Allen

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what were the bonuses, benefits and pay of Ms Mary Allen during her time at the Arts Council. [20776]

Mr. Chris Smith: The table gives details of Ms Allen's remuneration for the time that she was at the Arts Council. From 1995–96 onwards, these figures were published in the Arts Council's annual reports.

1 June 1992–31 August 1992 Temporary contract

1 September 1992–31 March 1994 Deputy Secretary-General

1 April 1994–23 May 1997 Secretary General

Total	293,061	31,980	750	325,791

[1] Payment in lieu of notice was agreed at £5,000 a month (for three months), the second and third payment being subject to her not taking up remunerated employment in those periods.

[2] This was a contribution to legal costs.

Sport (Lottery Funds)

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much Government and lottery money was allocated to cricket through (a) the Sports Council and (b) other mechanisms in each of the last five years. [22255]

Mr. Banks: I have been advised by the English Sports Council and Sportsmatch that the sums are as follows:

	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98 (to date)	Totals
(a) GB/English Sports Council[1]

Totals	417,536	474,300	7,343,878	23,298,184	18,868,327	50,402,225

[1] The English Sports Council was established on 1 January 1997.
[2] The 1997–98 Grant-In-Aid figure is provisional and awaiting approval.
[3] The 1997–98 Lottery Sports Fund figure includes a World Class Performance grant of £157,379 for women's cricket.

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much money has been received from the National Lottery for sports funding since November 1994. [21393]

Mr. Banks: From November 1994 to December 1997, the Sports Councils for England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland have received in total £950.3 million of Lottery money to fund sports projects of which £768.8 million has already been awarded. In addition the Millennium Commission has made two awards to sports related projects totalling £69 million.

Information on Lottery awards is now available on the Department's website www.lottery.culture.gov.uk.

Lottery Funding (Scotland)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the date, value and recipient of each award of Lottery funding to good causes in Scotland. [22416]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 12 January 1998]: As at 31 December 1997, 4,105 Lottery awards worth £498,679,648 have been made to organisations and individuals in Scotland. A full list will be placed in the Library.

Details of Lottery awards can be found on the Department's internet website www.lottery.culture.gov.uk.

Football Trust

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport who was responsible for selecting the new Chairman-designate of the Football Trust; how many candidates were considered; what was the process of interviewing and consultation prior to the announcement;and what will be the remuneration of the Chairman-designate. [22668]

Mr. Banks: The appointment of the Chairman-designate of the Football Trust was wholly a matter for the Trustees. I was consulted by Trustees on their nomination of my hon. Friend the Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry), as the Trust Deed provides, and was very pleased to be able to support that nomination. My hon. Friend has considerable experience of all aspects of football and is widely acknowledged as a key figure in sports policy making. I understand the question of remuneration is to be considered at the first meeting of the new Trust. I would like to pay tribute to the excellent work Lord Aberdare has done as Chairman of the Football Trust since 1979, and to wish my hon. Friend well when he succeeds Lord Aberdare shortly.

National Lottery

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on what statutory basis he has ordered the diversion of money from the National Lottery to causes other than those originally approved by Parliament. [22574]

Mr. Banks: No funds have been diverted from the existing good causes. Funds continue to be allocated between the existing five good causes according to the percentages approved by Parliament. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 1 October 1997 that, from 14 October, and with the agreement of existing Lottery distributors, "shadow" accounts would be maintained, setting aside funds for the New Opportunities Fund and NESTA on the basis of the proposed percentage shares outlined in the National Lottery Bill. The existing distributors are planning their commitments and expenditure on the basis of these "shadow" accounts. Subject to Parliamentary approval of the relevant provisions of the Bill, resources will be transferred to the New Opportunities Fund and NESTA in line with these accounts after Royal Assent. If the legislation were not passed, for whatever reason, the funds would simply remain in the accounts of the existing distributors, as currently provided.

TREASURY

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's preferred method for companies to interface with the Inland Revenue for millennium computer compliance; and if he will make a statement. [21892]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue has adopted a "no change" policy for handling Year 2000 dates across interfaces between its computer systems and those of other organisations, including companies, so that current protocols will continue to apply in the new millennium.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will extend beyond seven years the period within which gifts between individuals are free of inheritance tax. [22238]

Dawn Primarolo: The Chancellor of the Exchequer keeps under review all aspects of the tax system to ensure that it continues to meet the Government's objectives.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many works of art, on which there is conditional exemption of inheritance tax by virtue of public access, are on the Inland Revenue's register; and what was the figure in 1992. [22237]

Dawn Primarolo: In December 1997 there were 19,716 items listed on the Register of conditionally exempt works of art and other objects and the estimated figure for December 1992 is about 8,500.

Guernsey Trusts

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information the Inland Revenue receives from the Guernsey authorities about (a) the deeds, (b) trustees and (c) letters of wishes of trusts established in Guernsey with discretionary beneficiaries in the United Kingdom.[22588]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 12 January 1998]: The exchange of information between the UK and Guernsey tax authorities is governed by the provisions of Article 10 of our Double Taxation Arrangement with Guernsey (S.I. 1952 No. 1215).

Paymaster General

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in which EU meetings in Brussels the Paymaster General (a) has represented and (b) plans to represent the UK. [22278]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 12 January 1998]: Treasury European issues are not the responsibility of the Paymaster General. He has never represented the UK at any EU meeting in Brussels and he has no plans to do so.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) when the Permanent Secretary received the documentation in support of the assurances made to him by the Paymaster General in respect of the Orion Trust; and what assessment he has made of that documentation; [22814]

(2) if he will publish the questions upon which the Paymaster General sought advice from Sir Terrence Burns about his personal financial affairs. [22345]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 12 January 1998]: On his appointment as a Minister, the Paymaster General sought advice about his personal financial affairs from his solicitors, Titmuss Sainer Dechert, and the Permanent Secretary to the Treasury. In line with the Ministerial Code, his beneficial interests have been placed in a blind trust.

Government Actuary's Department

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed to the cash limit and net running cost limit for the Government Actuary's Department for 1997–98. [22971]

Mr. Darling: The net running cost limit for the Government Actuary's Department, Class XVI, Vote 12, will be decreased by £120,000 from £384,000 to £264,000 and the cash limit will be reduced by £120,000 from £604,000 to £484,000. The decrease follows the breach of the net running cost limit in 1996–97. The Government Actuary's Department has reviewed its systems and procedures to prevent a recurrence of the breach.

SCOTLAND

Falkirk College (Grants)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will instruct the Student Awards Agency for Scotland to ensure that all eligible students at Falkirk College of Further and Higher Education receive payment of their grants before Christmas. [20486]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 12 December 1997]: I have been monitoring the progress made by the Student Awards Agency for Scotland since it became clear that there were delays in the payment of student grants for academic year 1997–98.

The Agency is confident that all new students at Falkirk College who submitted properly completed applications by mid November would have had them processed before Christmas.

Pre-employment Courses

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will request the Scottish Qualifications Authority to consider certificating pre-employment courses. [22271]

Mr. Wilson: All existing SQA courses and awards, to varying degrees, prepare people for employment. Academic qualifications such as Standard Grades, Highers and CSYS provide a foundation of knowledge in preparation for later life. Work-related qualifications such as National Certificate, HNC and HND combine knowledge and practical experience in a wide range of subject areas to prepare for employment. Work-based Scottish Vocational Qualifications (SVQs), which are assessed in workplace conditions and recognise that individuals are competent for specific occupations, can in certain situations also be taken in preparation for employment.

Broadly-based General SVQs were introduced in Scotland in 1991 specifically to assist people acquire the skills and knowledge required for employment, incorporating core skills in communication, numeracy, information technology, personal and interpersonal skills, and problem solving. The GSVQ concept, to be known as Scottish Group Awards, is being incorporated in the new Higher Still structure which, in 1999–2000, will reform the existing Highers, CSYS and National Certificate.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will phase in the changes in the method of calculating the funding of further education colleges, so that they will not take full effect until August 1999. [22267]

Mr. Wilson: We have yet to take decisions on changing the funding methodology for further education colleges, in light of responses to consultations following a recent review. When we do, we shall wish to consider appropriate transitional arrangements, including the possibility of phased introduction of certain elements.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on GDP per capita in relation to (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Northern Ireland and (d) the United Kingdom for each year since 1978–79. [22414]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 12 January 1998]: Provisional data for 1996, together with information for 1986 to 1995 will be published in an article called "Regional Accounts 1996 Part 1" in the January edition of the Office for National Statistics Publication, "Economic Trends". This will be available from the House of Commons Library from 15 January. Data for earlier years are currently available from the Library.

Data covering years to 1995, now about to be revised, were published in the January/February 1997 edition of "Economic Trends".

Class Sizes

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since 1978–79 the average class sizes in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in Scotland. [22418]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 12 January 1998]: The information is as follows:

Education Authority Schools

Average number of pupils per class at September[1]

	Primary[2]	Secondary
1978–79	24.9	19.4
1979–80	23.9	18.9
1980–81	23.8	19.0
1981–82	23.8	19.1
1982–83	23.8	19.0
1983–84	25.3	19.5
1984–85	25.2	n/a
1985–86[3]	n/a	n/a
1986–87	n/a	n/a
1987–88	24.9	18.8
1989–90	24.7	18.6
1991–92	24.7	18.9
1993–94	24.7	19.3
1995–96	24.8	19.5

[1] Since 1983 for secondary schools and 1987 for primary schools, this information has only been collected biennially.

[2] Until the 1983 School Census, classes for small numbers of primary pupils withdrawn for short periods of time from their normal classes were included in the calculation of average class size. From 1983, all pupils were counted against their normal class for statistical purposes.

[3] Information for 1985–86 and 1986–87 is unavailable because of industrial action in some schools.

Capita

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many meetings he has had with Capita. [22406]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 12 January 1998]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has had no meetings with Capita.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much it will cost to cancel the Government's contract with Capita following the abolition of the Nursery Voucher Scheme. [22380]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 12 January 1998]: The amount of the termination fee the Government have negotiated with Capita is commercial in confidence.

Small Businesses

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since 1978–79 the number of small businesses in Scotland. [22393]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 12 January 1998]: There is no single official definition of a small business. For Scotland, the best guide to trends in the number of small businesses is given by the number of VAT-registered enterprises.

VAT registered businesses: Scotland, 1980–96[1, 2]

	Stock at start of year
1980	100,015
1981	100,965
1982	102,715
1983	103,785
1984	106,000
1985	108,210
1986	109,735
1987	111,485
1988	113,165
1989	115,455
1990	119,090
1991	122,770
1992	119,140
1993	118,755
1994	119,825
1995	118,610
1996	117,785
1997	118,125

Notes:

[1] Large increases in the threshold for VAT registration in 1991 and 1993 mean that the estimates for 1980–91, 1992–93 and 1994–96 are not entirely comparable.

[2] Figures for 1980–93 count VAT reporting units. Figures for 1994–96 count whole VAT registered enterprises.

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the membership and remit of the Consultative Steering Group on the Scottish Parliament. [23095]

Mr. McLeish: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland announced on 14 November 1997 his intention to establish an all party Consultative Steering Group to take forward consideration of how the Scottish Parliament might operate.

I am delighted to report that all the main political parties have agreed to participate in the Group. Their agreement to come together to contribute to the development of ideas at this early stage augurs well for the future of the Parliament and the political process in Scotland.

The Group, which I will chair, will comprise the hon. and learned Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) and the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond), or their representatives, representing the Liberal Democrats and the Scottish National Party, Mr. Paul Cullen QC, representing the Scottish Conservative Party, Mr. Keith Geddes CBE from the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, Canon Kenyon Wright, from the Scottish Constitutional Convention, Professor Alice Brown, from the Department of Politics, University of Edinburgh, Dr. Joan Stringer, Principal of Queen Margaret's College, Ms Joyce McMillan, a writer and journalist who chaired the Constitutional Commission, Ms Esther Roberton of the Scottish Constitutional Convention, Mrs. Deirdre Hutton, Scottish Consumer Council, Mr. Andrew Cubie, a lawyer and former chair of the CBI in Scotland, and Mr. Campbell Christie, General Secretary of the STUC.

These individuals, who cover a wide range of relevant Scottish interests, have been chosen for the personal contributions they can make to the work of the Group. I am confident that this Group will work effectively to develop proposals for how the Scottish Parliament should operate and how it will relate to the Scottish public.

The Group will be supported by Scottish Office officials who will be able to draw in advice from a number of expert panels in the relevant fields in preparing proposals for further consideration by the Consultative Steering Group. These will include expert panels on Parliamentary procedures, on the scrutiny of financial matters, on how the Parliament might make best use of IT and telematics and on broadcasting and related media arrangements.

The Group will meet for the first time on Monday 19 January, when members will be asked to approve the following draft remit:

To bring together views on and consider the operational needs and working methods of the Scottish Parliament.

To develop proposals for the rules of procedure and Standing Orders which the Parliament might be invited to adopt.

To prepare a report to the Secretary of State for Scotland by the end of 1998, to inform the preparation of draft Standing Orders.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Information Technology

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the President of the Council what assessment she has made of the demand on IT specialists and systems of the Government's legislative programme other than that caused by preparations for EMU and the year 2000 computer date change problem. [19612]

Mrs. Ann Taylor [holding answer 17 December 1997]: A Compliance Cost Assessment is required for any Bill which has cost implications for Business, Charities and Voluntary Organisations and should include any IT Costs.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Privy Council

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council if she will list the executive functions of the Privy Council. [22261]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The Privy Council approves amendments to the byelaws and statutes of Chartered institutions. It also approves rules made by the statutory registration councils responsible for the medical and certain other professions, and makes instruments of government for higher education corporations. In addition, it makes certain appointments to statutory bodies and to the governing bodies of universities and colleges.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council if she will list the Committees of the Privy Council, the number of times each has met since May and the quorum in each case. [22262]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The standing Committees of the Privy Council are:

The Judicial Committee;

The Universities Committee;

The Scottish Universities Committee;

The Committee for the purposes of the Crown Office Act 1877;

The Committee for the Affairs of Jersey and Guernsey;

The Baronetage Committee;

The Political Honours Scrutiny Committee.

None of these Committees has met since May 1997 other than the Judicial Committee, which has sat throughout the Easter, Trinity and Michaelmas terms, and the Honours Committee, which has met three times. The quorum for the Judicial Committee is three. No quorum is stipulated for the Honours Committee.

In addition, ad hoc Committees are constituted when required. None has met since last May.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Literacy and Numeracy

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what further plans he has to ensure that priority is given to the basics of literacy and numeracy within the primary curriculum. [22798]

Mr. Blunkett: I am announcing today plans that will free up primary teachers' time so that they can give a clear priority to the teaching of literacy and numeracy and to meeting our literacy and numeracy targets. From September 1998 the priorities in the primary curriculum will be English and mathematics. The position of science, information technology and religious education will remain unchanged.

Schools will still need to offer a balanced and broadly based curriculum and to that end will be required to have regard to the other National Curriculum subjects of art, design and technology, geography, history, music and physical education. Key stage 1 and Key stage 2 statutory requirements will be modified so that primary schools have more flexibility in how they teach these subjects. The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) will give schools advice shortly after Easter on how they can achieve this.

I have asked QCA to conduct consultations on these proposals this term; and intend to lay new statutory Orders for the six non-core subjects in the summer.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the universities in the United Kingdom which now provide tuition in remedial English for students unable to write to an appropriate standard. [22614]

Dr. Howells: Individual universities and colleges are responsible for assessing the skills and tuition needs of their students. Information on supplementary tuition for students who need to improve their communication skills is not available centrally. The Department is committed to improving literacy and other key skills at all levels of the education system, and has supported a number of projects to develop key skills in higher education.

Project Work

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many claimants have been referred to project work in each quarter since April 1996; and how many of these have had their benefit cut for (i) two weeks and (ii) four weeks for failure to attend or complete their work placement. [21519]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 18 December 1997]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under it's Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Terry Rooney, dated 13 January 1998.

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of individuals referred to Project Work in each quarter since April 1996; and how many of these have had their benefit cut for (i) two weeks and (ii) four weeks, for failure to attend or complete their work placement. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency. I would like to apologise to you for the delay in supplying the information you have asked for.

Unfortunately, information is not available in precisely the format you have requested. Statistics on referrals to the work experience element of Project Work—as opposed to starts on this element of the programme—were not collected for the original pilots in Hull and Medway and Maidstone which began in April 1996, and it is not now possible to collect this information retrospectively

However, the figures in Table 1 set out the number of starts on the work experience element of Project Work and the number of cases referred for adjudication for refusal and failure to attend Project Work in the two pilot areas. The figures do not include people who left the register between being referred to the work experience element of Project Work and their planned date of starting. The first referrals to the work experience element of Project Work were not made until 22 July 1996.

Table 1

Quarter ending	Number of jobseekers who started project work	Number of jobseekers referred to adjudication
September 1996	658	44
December 1996	1,315	229
March 1997	1,152	223

Statistics on referrals to the work experience element of Project Work were collected for the extended pilots and I am therefore able to supply you with the number of people referred to the work experience element of Project Work from 1 April 1997. This information is contained in Table 2 below. Although the extended pilots started in February 1997 referrals to the work experience element in these areas did not begin until July 1997. The figures in Table 2 for the June quarter relate, therefore, only to Hull and Medway and Maidstone where Project Work was already in operation.

Quarter ending	Number of Jobseekers who were referred to Project Work
June 1997	1,482
September 1997	13,727
December 1997	15,726

With the introduction of the extended Project Work Pilots separate figures for referrals to adjudication resulting from referrals to Project Work were not collected. Information on the total number of Adjudication Officers' decisions and opinions and disallowance rates relating to all government employment training programmes is contained in a published document entitled "Analysis of Adjudication Officers' Decisions". This provides information on all the labour market entitlement and sanction questions arising on claims. The latest information available is up to September 1997. Copies of this document are held in the Library of the House.

Table 3 contains the number of sanctions and disallowances imposed and opinions given from the introduction of JSA in October 1996 for:

- giving up a place on a training scheme or employment programme;
- refusal of a place on a training scheme or employment programme;
- neglect to avail of a place on a training scheme or employment programme;
- failure to attend on a training scheme or employment programme; and
- losing a place on a training scheme or employment programme through misconduct.

Schemes and programmes included in this definition are Jobplan Workshops, Restart Courses, Workwise, Worklink and Project Work. Employment Service statistics do not identify the number of sanctions relating to each programme, nor do they differentiate between tow and four week sanctions or disallowances.

Table 3

Quarter ending	Sanctions and disallowances imposed and opinions given
December 1996	5,193
March 1997	12,284
June 1997	10,961
September 1997	11,294

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what have been the destinations of (a) claimants leaving or completing project work and (b) claimants in the selected control areas broken down to show those (i) in full-time employment, (ii) in self-employment, (iii) in part-time employment, (iv) in full-time education or training course, (v) on another Government programme, (vi) unemployed and claiming jobseekers's allowance, (vii) unemployed and not claiming benefit, (viii) in receipt of another benefit and (ix) doing something else. [21517]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 18 December 1997]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Terry Rooney, dated 13 January 1998:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the destinations of (a) individuals leaving or completing Project Work and (b) individuals in the selected control areas broken down to show those (i) in full-time employment, (ii) in self-employment, (iii) in part-time employment, (iv) in full-time education or training course, (v) on another Government programme, (vi) unemployed and claiming Jobseeker's Allowance, (vii) unemployed and not claiming benefit, (viii) in receipt of another benefit and (ix) doing something else. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency. I would like to apologise to you for the delay in supplying the information you have asked for.

Unfortunately, information is not available in precisely the format you have requested. Information on the destinations of Project Work participants at a national level is given in Tables 1 and 2. The figures refer to the period July-November 1997. Information on the two Project Work pilots in Hull and Medway and Maidstone is given in Table 3 for the period March 1996-June 1997.

It may help if I explain that before entering the work experience element of Project Work, clients are given a Restart Interview following by a 13 week period of intensive job search help. During this time, participants are offered the full range of programmes available to long-term unemployed people, as well as a number of interviews with an adviser. If the person is still unemployed at the end of this period of intensive help, they are required to attend a 13 week period of work experience. This is intended to focus on the participant's job goals and work experience that is of benefit to the local community.

Project Work was initially piloted in two locations during 1996–97, and was expanded subsequently to cover 31 locations. There are no selected control areas for expanded Project Work.

I hope this is helpful.

Further Education

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what will be the total level of his Department's budget, in 1995–96 prices, for further education in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99; what such figurers would be for (i) 1997–98 and (ii) 1998–99 on the basis of the estimates of the gross domestic product deflator contained in the November 1996 Budget; and if he will make a statement. [22109]

Dr. Howells: The total level of the Department's budget for further education in 1997–98 at 1995–96 prices is £2.973 billion. Planned provision for 1998–99 at 1995–96 prices is £2.870 billion. Comparable figures using the GDP deflators contained in the November 1996 Budget are £3.001 billion and £2.920 billion respectively.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact on per capita funding levels in further education of the measures contained in his announcement of 12 November. [22111]

Dr. Howells: Part of the additional funding available to the further education sector is to restrict the squeeze on unit costs in the 1998–99 teaching year to no more than the rate of inflation.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the expenditure per student on capital projects within the further education sector for (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [22113]

Dr. Howells: This information is not yet available.

Figures for individual colleges' capital expenditure in 1996–97 will not be available until January 1998 as the information is taken from colleges' audited accounts which are received by Further Education Funding Council on 30 November 1997. Figures for capital expenditure in subsequent years will follow a similar timetable.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the additional administrative responsibilities placed on current facilities and infrastructure in colleges in further education by recent schemes announced by Her Majesty's Government; what provision he has made for additional administrative responsibilities; and if he will make a statement. [22108]

Dr. Howells: It will be for Further Education colleges to assess the additional administrative responsibilities and costs when bidding for funds made available through these schemes.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what studies he has commissioned on the relative costs of providing further education in urban and rural areas. [22667]

Dr. Howells: None. The Further Education Funding Council has recently consulted on a funding methodology for colleges in 1998–99 in order to reflect the need to widen participation in further education in all areas, whether rural or urban.

Student Finance

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he proposes to publish draft regulations governing the detailed application of the new rules for finance of students in further and higher education. [21915]

Dr. Howells [holding answer issued 22 December 1997]: The rules applying to maintenance grants and tuition fees in 1998–99 will be set out in the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations 1998, which we plan to lay before the House as soon as possible.

Provisions relating to income contingent student loans are contained in the Teaching and Higher Education Bill. The associated regulations will be laid before the House once the Bill receives Royal Assent in line with normal practice. We are taking steps to ensure that hon. Members are fully informed about how the proposed arrangements will operate in detail in advance of the publication of the regulations.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what will be the effect of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's proposal to move to a new system of public expenditure planning by 2001–02 on the implementation of the recommendations contained in the Dearing Report relating to resource accounting. [22373]

Dr. Howells: The Government's proposal to move to a system of full resource accounting and budgeting in 2001–02 will result in a different treatment of student loans from grants. This will be consistent with the recommendation by the National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education.

Cycle Spaces

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many secure cycle spaces there are in his Department. [22674]

Dr. Howells: There are 162 secure cycle spaces on DfEE HO sites.

School Inspections

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals he has for the inspection of independent schools; what will be the role of Ofsted in such inspection; what representations he has received about the inspection of independent schools; and if he will make a statement. [22532]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 12 Janaury 1998]: Independent schools in England are currently inspected by Her Majesty's Inspectors (HMI) from Ofsted on a broadly 5-year cycle, and periodically by local fire brigades and—in the case of boarding schools—by local social services departments. Newly registered schools, or those causing concern, are inspected mor frequently and at least annually. Save in exceptional cases, these inspections do not normally lead to published reports.

Discussions are under way with the independent school organisations on proposals to develop their own inspection arrangements so as to yield regular published reports consistent with the inspection framework and standards operated by Ofsted. This would allow Ofsted to concentrate more on strengthened inspection with published reports on schools which are not covered by those arrangements and which include pupils assisted from public funds. We will announce the new arrangements when they are finalised.

Additionally our Green Paper "Excellence for all children: Meeting Special Educational Needs" proposes that all independent schools that provide specifically for children with Special Education Needs, but are not approved for this purpose under section 347(1) of the Eduction Act 1996, should be inspected at least every five years by HMI. Independent schools approved under that section are already inspected by Ofsted in the same way as maintained schools.

New Deal (South Devon)

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what budget he has agreed for the estates element of the South Devon District New Deal Delivery plan. [22541]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds does not commence in the South Devon District until 1 April 1998. At this stage no budget has been agreed for estates work in that District. The needs of the South Devon offices will be assessed in the near future and an appropriate budget agreed for any changes required.

Republic of Ireland (Educational and Cultural Co-operation)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what response he plans to make to Irish Government proposals for a Programme and Joint Management Structure for youth exchanges between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland. [22506]

Dr. Howells: A joint working party is being established to define the range and content of the youth exchange programme and to decide how it will operate. The Department will appoint representatives.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what response he plans to make to the proposal from the Irish Government for a joint forum to facilitate discussion and co-operation in educational matters. [22501]

Dr. Howells: Following the joint statement issued by the Prime Minister and the Taoiseach on 12 December, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment met the Irish Minister of Education and Science, Mr. Michael Martin TD, on 17 December. They agreed that there should be regular contact between officials of their Departments to discuss ways of enhancing teaching and learning through new technologies.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many meetings of the Anglo-Irish Inter-Governmental Council Working Group on Education and Culture have taken place in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [22565]

Dr. Howells: The Working Group on Education and Culture has met five times during the last three years, on 3 February 1995, 26 April 1996, 7 February 1997, 8 May 1997 and 14 November 1997. The Working Group provides a valuable forum for the discussion of Anglo-Irish co-operation in the fields of education and culture.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many projects his Department funds under the Leonardo vocational training programme which involve Irish organisations. [22505]

Dr. Howells: During the first three years of the Leonardo da Vinci vocational training programme, UK organisations have led 757 transnational projects of which 149 involve partners from the Republic of Ireland. The Leonardo da Vinci programme is funded by the European Community, not the DfEE, and runs from 1995–99.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many meetings his Department has had with the Irish Department of Education in relation to the National Grid for Learning and the University for Industry. [22500]

Dr. Howells: There has been one formal meeting of officials in relation to the National Grid for learning and none in relation to the University for Industry.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students from the Republic of Ireland are studying at British universities; and how many are in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland. [22503]

Dr. Howells: Data from the Higher Education Statistics Agency for the academic year 1996–97 showed that there were 14,550 students from the Republic of Ireland studying in higher education institutions in the UK, of whom 7,552 were studying in England, 1,570 in Scotland, 1,546 in Wales and 3,882 in Northern Ireland.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students from the Republic of Ireland are participating in further education in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland. [22504]

Dr. Howells: In 1995–96, the latest year for which data were available, there were 1,700 students from the Republic of Ireland studying in further education institutions in England.

The numbers of such students studying in other parts of the United Kingdom are a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, for Scotland and for Northern Ireland respectively.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures he intends to take to encourage participation by English and Welsh schools in the European Studies Project. [22502]

Dr. Howells: The Government welcome the fact that a growing number of UK schools are forming partnerships with Irish schools through their participation in initiatives such as the European Studies Project and the EC SOCRATES programme. Following a meeting between my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment and the Irish Minister of Education and Science on 17 December 1997, the Government are considering whether there is a need for additional measures to encourage co-operation between educational institutions in the UK and in Ireland.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cycle Spaces

Mr. Brake: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many secure cycling spaces there are in his Department. [22676]

Mr. Morley: Many of the Department's 240 sites now provide secure accommodation for cycles. In our London HQ buildings there are about 100 spaces (some shared with other Departments) while the Department's HQ offices at York, Tolworth and Guildford have approximately 140 spaces between them. It is the Department's policy to provide secure cycle spaces where there is a demand for them and where this is physically possible.

Dairy Industry

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much milk was (a) produced and (b) consumed in the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available. [22528]

Mr. Rooker: 1996 is the last year for which United Kingdom milk production and consumption figures are available. The figures are as follows:

United Kingdom milk production, supply and utilisation: 1996

	Million litres
Gross production of milk from the dairy and beef herds[1]	14,224
Imports of raw milk[2]	111
Exports of raw milk[3]	173
Total supply	14,162
Utilisation by dairies for drinking milk[3]	6,806
Utilisation by dairies for manufacturing dairy products[4]	6,979
Dairy wastage and stock change	76
Other uses[5]	301
Total domestic use	14,162

[1] Includes 7 million litres of milk from the beef herd. Excludes suckled milk.
[2] Milk imported or exported as packaged drinking milk is excluded.
[3] Represents consumption of drinking milk in the UK, as little is imported or exported. In 1996 imports of packaged drinking milk were 41 million litres, exports were 53 million litres.
[4] A proportion of dairy products manufactured will be exported and not consumed in the UK.
[5] Includes farmhouse consumption, milk fed to stock and on farm waste. Excludes suckled milk.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much (a) fresh and (b) UHT milk was imported into the United Kingdom in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [22529]

Mr. Rooker: A total of 153,300 tonnes of milk were imported into the United Kingdom in the 12 months to the end of September 1997. Trade statistics do not distinguish between fresh and UHT milk.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will commission research into the operation of vertically integrated co-operatives for the dairy industry. [22447]

Mr. Rooker: I have no such plans.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his policy relating to Milk Marque. [22448]

Mr. Rooker: Issues concerning Milk Marque's commercial operations and those of other companies in the dairy sector are a matter for the competition authorities.

Beef

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the total United Kingdom consumption of beef and beef products was derived from home production in (a) 1972 and (b) 1997. [22489]

Mr. Rooker: Home fed production of beef and veal as a proportion of new supplies was 78 per cent. in 1972 and 77 per cent. in the 12 months to September 1997.

New supplies of beef and veal are defined as home fed production plus imports of carcase meat plus the meat equivalent of fat animals imported for direct slaughter minus exports of carcase meat minus the meat equivalent of live exports.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the per capita consumption of beef and beef products in (a) 1972 and (b) 1997. [22488]

Mr. Rooker: Per capita consumption of beef, beef sausages and corned beef in Great Britain measured by purchases for consumption at home in the National Food Survey is given in the following table:

grams per person per week

Purchases of	1972	1996–97[1]
Beef	195	109
Beef sausages	42	15
Corned beef	13	13

[1] October 1996 to September 1997. Beef here includes a very small element of veal.

Data on the consumption of beef outside of the home and in the form of other processed products are not available. To help complete the picture, the table provides the total amount of beef available for domestic usage in 1996–97 and the nearest equivalent measure (total new supplies) for 1972–73. Domestic usage is derived as total UK production plus imports less exports and adjusted for stock changes. Total new supplies excludes the adjustment for stock changes.

United Kingdom	1972–73	1996–97[1]
Total domestic usage of beef ('000 Tonnes)	[2]1,173	840

[1] October 1996 to September 1997.
[2] Total new supplies in the period April 1972 to March 1973.

Total domestic usage and new supply figures are in carcase weight equivalent, whereas the per capita consumption estimates above relate to the actual weight purchased.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average liveweight price of steers in (a) 1972 and (b) 1997. [22490]

Mr. Rooker: The average liveweight price of steers in Great Britain in 1997 was 97.5 p/kg. An equivalent price for 1972 is not available.

However, comparable figures for the United Kingdom for 1972 and 1997 are available for all clean cattle. In 1997, the average all clean cattle price was 95.4p/kg liveweight and in 1972 the average fat cattle market price was 30.3p/kg liveweight. The 1972 price relates to animals certified under the Fatstock Guarantee Scheme.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Export Forum

15. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to the recommendations of the Export Forum, if he will make a statement on his Department's export promotion work. [20427]

Mr. Fatchett: This Department welcomes the report of the Export Forum, and supports the thrust of their proposals, which will form an important basis for a new export initiative. Supporting British business abroad helps create prosperity at home, and is one of this Department's key roles.

Small and Medium Enterprises

16. Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further measures he will take to assist small and medium enterprises in their export efforts. [20428]

Mr. Fatchett: Our new Export Initiative, based on the recommendations of the Export Forum, will have a particular focus on the needs of small and medium enterprises which are exporters, or have the potential to export.

Job Creation

19. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has taken to promote job creation in the EU. [20431]

Mr. Robin Cook: My Department has worked with other government departments to encourage EU policies which promote job creation. We supported the inclusion of an Employment Title in the Treaty of Amsterdam and at the Employment Summit in Luxembourg. We secured a text that reflected HMG's priority of bringing jobs and opportunities for the long-term unemployed. At the forthcoming Cardiff Summit we will be reviewing the Action Plans by member states drawn up under the guidelines approved at Luxembourg.

India

20. Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British relations with India. [20432]

Mr. Fatchett: We enjoy good and close relations with India and, as I made clear in a written reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Reading, East (Jane Griffiths) on 8 July 1997, Official Report, column 415, we look forward to strengthening this important relationship still further.

Middle East

21. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation in the middle east. [20433]

Mr. Robin Cook: We are concerned by the current stalemate. We attach the highest importance to full implementation of existing commitments under the Interim and Hebron Agreements, and will give that issue high priority during our conduct of the EU Presidency.

23. Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the European Union's role in the middle east peace process during the United Kingdom's presidency. [20435]

Mr. Robin Cook: Working to re-inject momentum into the peace process will be one of the most important foreign policy priorities of our Presidency. We will endeavour to keep up the pressure for progress in implementing existing agreements and ensure that EU and US efforts are complementary in moving the peace process forward.

28. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the middle east peace process. [20440]

Mr. Fatchett: Working to re-inject momentum into the peace process will be one of the most important foreign policy priorities of our Presidency. We will endeavour to keep up the pressure for progress in implementing existing agreements and ensure that EU and US efforts are complementary in moving the peace process forward.

As part of our Presidency involvement I will be visiting Israel, Gaza and the West Bank on 14 to 16 January. I will be holding meetings with, among others, the Prime Minister of Israel and the Minister of The Palestine National Authority.

33. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to visit the middle east to discuss measures to increase United Kingdom exports to that area. [20445]

Mr. Fatchett: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary hopes to visit the Middle East during the Spring. I am sure that trade issues will be discussed during his visit. I am delighted by the continuing high level of British exports to the region. Over the first ten months of 1997 there was a year on year increase of 19 per cent.

Arms Control

22. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had about arms control and if he will make a statement. [20434]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary remains firmly committed to the promises made in the Labour manifesto. He is pursuing these issues in discussions with a range of interested parties.

Turkey

24. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's relations with Turkey. [20436]

Mr. Robin Cook: We attach great importance to our relations with Turkey, and value our dialogue on a wide range of issues.

Gibraltar

25. Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to meet the Chief Minister of Gibraltar to discuss Spain. [20437]

Mr. Robin Cook: I look forward to seeing the Chief Minister of Gibraltar on 28 January in London.

Cyprus

26. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives over Cyprus he proposes for 1998. [20438]

Mr. Robin Cook: We will continue to use our influence to help ensure that the two communities resume the settlement negotiations under the aegis of the UN Secretary-General. As EU Presidency, we will open accession negotiations with Cyprus. We hope this will involve a joint Greek Cypriot/Turkish Cypriot delegation.

EU Institutions (Reform)

27. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the Government's plans for Britain's presidency of the European Union in respect of reform of EU institutions. [20439]

Mr. Robin Cook: During the course of the UK Presidency, we are determined to make as much progress as possible towards the next enlargement of the European Union. One element of this will be discussing with other Member States how and when to proceed with Protocol No. 11 to the Treaty of Amsterdam concerning institutional reform in the context of enlargement. We fully support the principle of a smaller Commission and the reweighing of votes in the Council that this Protocol provides for.

Preparation for other measures envisaged by the Treaty of Amsterdam—for example, improving the quality of European legislation and ensuring greater openness in the Union—will continue during the UK Presidency. So will a series of continuing reforms to improve the operational efficiency of the institutions, such as SEM 2000 to improve financial management in the Commission and MAP 2000 to modernise the European civil service.

EU Countries (Territorial Claims)

29. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries in the European Union which have a claim in their constitutions over the territory of another member of the Union. [20441]

Mr. Robin Cook: The only such case I know of concerns the Irish Constitution, Article 2 of which asserts that the national territory consists of the whole island of Ireland. The Irish Government have undertaken to introduce and support proposals to change the constitution, so as fully to reflect the principle of consent as part of an overall settlement in Northern Ireland.

EU Enlargement

30. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which east and central European countries he proposes to visit during 1998 to discuss the enlargement of the European Union. [20442]

Mr. Robin Cook: I visited Poland, Hungary and the Czech Republic last November. My hon. Friend the Minister of State has recently visited the other seven

Central European applicant countries. We therefore have no immediate plans to visit the region. But we will have extensive contacts with our Central European colleagues at the many events involving them during the UK Presidency of the EU in the first six months of 1998.

31. Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to use the presidency of the European Union to strengthen economic and social agreements between the European Union and those states which were formerly members of the Warsaw Pact and Soviet Union that currently have European Union association agreements. [20443]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We will work to ensure that Accession Partnerships for the 10 Central European countries that have EU Association Agreements are concluded by 15 March, as requested by the Luxembourg European Council. The Partnerships will feature a targeted programme of enhanced aid designed to help the applicants prepare for EU membership. They will, of course, be in addition to the continuing contacts within the Association Agreements for all 10.

36. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress on enlargement of the European Union. [20448]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The decisions taken at the Luxembourg European Council have taken the enlargement process into its next stage. The way is open for the EU, with the UK as Presidency, to open accession negotiations with the six applicants who are ready, this spring. Those who need more help to prepare will get it; and all will participate on an equal footing in the European Conference to be inaugurated in London on 12 March.

38. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government support the application of Lithuania for membership of the European Union in the next wave. [20450]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Yes. We support enlargement of the EU and look forward to all applicants joining as soon as they are ready. But we do not favour talk of "waves" of membership. Applicants will be treated on their own individual merits.

39. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the foreign ministers of Latvia and Lithuania about European Union enlargement following the Luxembourg European Union summit. [20451]

Mr. Doug Henderson: None.

Nigeria

32. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the progress towards democracy in Nigeria. [20444]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We and our EU, Commonwealth and UN partners agree that there has been no real progress on restoration of democracy and respect of human rights in Nigeria.

Our concerns about the transition programme include the non-inclusive nature of the process; the introduction of a decree which has enabled the Head of State to remove duly elected local council representatives from their positions; and the fact that the new Constitution of Nigeria has yet to be published and distributed.

We also continue to have serious concerns about the application of the rule of law and adherence to acceptable standards of human rights, including the failure to release political prisoners and detainees, and the limitations of freedom of speech. Since early November several more journalists and human rights activists in Nigeria have been detained without charge, and only two have been released.

Algeria

34. Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last raised the human rights situation in Algeria with the Algerian authorities. [20446]

Mr. Fatchett: I last raised human rights with the Algerian Ambassador in London in June. My officials at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office discussed our response, and that of our EU partners, to massacres in Algeria with the Algerian Ambassador in London last week. Our Ambassador in Algiers discussed the same subject with the Algerian authorities earlier this week.

Australia

35. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to visit Australia to discuss United Kingdom–Australian relations. [20447]

Mr. Fatchett: British and Australian Ministers are in regular contact but my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no plans to visit Australia at present.

Sri Lanka

37. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent assessment he has made of civil rights in Sri Lanka; and if he will make a statement. [20449]

Mr. Fatchett: As I informed the honourable Member in my written reply on 8 July 1997, Official Report, column 415, basic civil rights are enshrined in the Sri Lankan constitution. We hope that the Sri Lankan Government will continue to respect them.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Bankruptcy

Mr. White: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to review (a) the bankruptcy laws and (b) the way bankruptcy is administered. [21489]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: A working party is reviewing the current state of regulation in the insolvency profession and recently issued a consultation paper 'Insolvency Practitioner Regulation—Ten Years On'. Responses to that will inform their final report to the Secretary of State and the insolvency recognised professional bodies. Additionally, a further working party, chaired by

Mr. Justice Ferris, is currently considering the remuneration of office holders and is expected to report in early 1998. The findings and conclusions of both groups will receive very careful attention when received.

European Fusion Project

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the management performance of the Joint European Torus undertaking in respect of the European Fusion Project at Culham, with particular regard to the use of public funds and the consequences for future energy policy. [21170]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 16 December 1997]: The Joint European Torus at Culham is the European fusion programme's most important facility, and is in fact the largest of its kind operating anywhere in the world. The management achieved record results last month for fusion power and fusion energy. However, the report of the European Court of Auditors on JET's 1996 accounts raised some issues of concern. It identified a number of weaknesses in JET management's application of JET's Financial Regulations concerning the awarding of contracts, most notably in the areas of contract personnel and invitation to tender. The JET Director, Dr. Keilhacker, has responded disagreeing with the conclusions drawn by the Court in some of the specific examples quoted. He accepted some of the recommendations and rejected others.

We are concerned about the apparent weaknesses in various areas of JET management's performance, and we shall ensure that the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority pursue this issue in the JET council and other committees on which it is represented. I expect the JET Council either to satisfy itself that the JET Director's response is adequate or to ensure that he implements the audit recommendations.

JET's expenditure is around £60 million a year, and it is important that this money is spent with proper regard to propriety and the need for value for money.

Electricity Companies (Coal Purchases)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps the Government took to persuade the electricity companies to buy more coal, with special reference to regulatory and other measures. [21776]

Mrs. Beckett: This was a commercial arrangement between the parties concerned. Government acted as a facilitator only, and no regulatory or other measures were involved.

Inntrepreneur

Kate Hoey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what factors underlay her decision not to seek amendment to the decision by the Office of Fair Trading to release Inntrepreneur from its undertakings given on the recommendation of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. [21093]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: Ministers do not have the legal power to revoke the February 1997 decision of their predecessors to vary the Inntrepreneur (IPCL) undertakings. Under UK competition law, further undertakings based on the 1991 MMC report between Elders IXL Ltd. (which owned Courage Ltd.) and Grand Metropolitan could be sought from Inntrepreneur only on the basis of the adverse effects detailed in that report. The UK's competition authorities have not identified any such grounds for seeking further undertakings from IPCL.

Weapons Convention

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what work is being carried out by her Department to support the negotiations to strengthen the 1972 Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention. [22511]

Mrs. Roche: My Department is working closely with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) and the Ministry of Defence to achieve early international agreement on a legally binding protocol to establish an effective verification and compliance regime for the Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention (BTWC). My officials are members of the UK delegation, led by the FCO, which is playing a major role in the negotiations in Geneva. Responsibility for implementing an agreed protocol in the UK will fall to my Department and my officials are working with the UK pharmaceutical and biotechnology industries to secure their support for a strengthened BTWC regime.

Arms Control

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what work her Department is currently carrying out to support and implement arms control treaties in the fields of (a) chemical weapons and (b) nuclear weapons; and if she will make a statement. [22510]

Mrs. Roche: My Department is responsible for implementing the Chemical Weapons Convention (CWC) in the UK. The legislative basis for this work is the Chemical Weapons Act 1996 and the President of the Board of Trade will be submitting shortly to Parliament her annual report on the operation of the Act. My Department co-ordinates the preparation of annual UK declarations to the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW), receives teams of international inspectors from the OPCW to verify the UK declarations and licenses the possession, use, production, import and export of certain chemicals listed in the Convention. An official in my Department has been appointed as the UK Representative on the Executive Council of the OPCW and my officials also participate in bilateral meetings and training courses aimed at helping other countries with their national implementation of the CWC.

The FCO has lead responsibility in the UK for the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT). However, my Department is responsible for ensuring that the UK meets is commitments under the 1978 safeguards agreement concluded with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and Euratom in connection with the NPT under which the UK undertook to accept IAEA safeguards on all civil nuclear materials in facilities within the UK.

An official in my Department represents the UK on the Board of Governors of the IAEA and in that capacity is involved in all formal decisions of the IAEA including in the field of safeguards.

The IAEA safeguards system is now being strengthened following the agreement by the Board of Governors of the IAEA in May 1997 of a model protocol additional to existing safeguards agreements. The DTI took the lead for the UK in negotiating this model protocol. My Department is currently engaged in the negotiation of an additional protocol to the UK's existing safeguards agreement based on the model protocol and specific commitments given by the UK Governor to the IAEA when the model was adopted.

Consumer Credit

Ms Kelly: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on consumer credit monetary limits and fees. [23093]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: I am pleased to report that I have laid before Parliament today the Consumer Credit (Increase of Monetary Limits) (Amendment) Order 1998. This order is subject to the affirmative procedure and will be debated by both Houses of Parliament.

I will then lay two other associated Orders, the Consumer Credit (Further Increase of Monetary Amounts) Order 1998, and the Consumer Credit (Realisation of Pawn) (Amendment) Regulations 1998.

The main thrust of these amendments will be to increase protection for consumers and unincorporated businesses by raising the upper limit for regulated credit and hire agreements to £25,000, from the current level of £15,000, which has not been changed since 1983. This will bring under regulation most unsecured consumer loans and many loans for house purchase and other loans secured on property which are currently above the regulated level.

Because many people who borrow small amounts are among the more vulnerable consumers, I have decided not to raise the upper limit on small agreements or to change the exemption limits for connected lender liability.

The upper limit relating to the consumer's right to terminate a hire agreement after 18 months will be raised from £900 to £1,500.

The fees which consumers pay for copies of documents and other services and the exemption limit on the notice of intention to sell pawned goods will be raised to reflect inflation since the last rise.

The consumer's liability following misuse of a credit card will remain at the current level of £50.

To give the credit and hire industries time to make the necessary administrative amendments, the changes will come into force on 1 May 1998, after the Increase of Monetary Limits Order has been debated and received the approval of both Houses.

EU Acquired Rights Directive

Ms Shipley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she intends to carry out public consultation on the European Commission's proposal to amend the Acquired Rights Directive. [23092]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My Department has today published a public consultation document on this issue. A copy will be placed in the Library of the House.

Exports (South Korea)

Mr. Watts: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on her Department's export promotion work with South Korea. [20417]

Mrs. Roche: Our aims are to ensure that: British companies are fully briefed on those areas which present good commercial opportunities for them in South Korea; and South Korea is aware of our capabilities in those same areas. In carrying this out we have a responsibility to advise our companies of the practicalities of doing business in South Korea. This is particularly relevant with the present economic situation.

As a tool to achieve this, in June 1997, I launched a set of publications called "Trading with Korea"; they provide factual information on specific issues that affect British companies doing business there. These publications are available free of charge from my Department. My Department is working closely with the Business Links: to promote these publications: and to offer companies targeted briefing on doing business in South Korea.

HEALTH

Insulin

Mr. Wills: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department has taken, over the last 10 years, to monitor the effectiveness and the side effects of genetically engineered insulin in comparison with animal insulins; and what have been the results of such monitoring. [19251]

Ms Jowell: The Medicines Control Agency is responsible for the continuous monitoring of the safety of all licensed medicines and the safety of human (genetically engineered) insulin is therefore under continuous review. In addition, a considerable number of clinical studies have been performed and published comparing animal and human insulin.

The Committee on Safety of Medicines, which advises the Government on such matters, has fully reviewed the safety of human insulin on several occasions since its introduction. During the review process there has been repeated consultation with experts in the field of diabetes as well as with the British Diabetic Association. The Committee has concluded that, although some patients have experienced problems on transferring to human insulins and may be better suited to animal insulins, there is no evidence of a safety problem specific to human insulin. The Committee will continue to monitor closely the safety of insulins.

Private Health Insurance

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates he has made of the cost to the National Health Service in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99 of treating patients previously covered by private health insurance. [22464]

Mr. Milburn: No such estimates have been made. The numbers covered by private medical insurance have fallen since 1990. Any additional demand from an increase in numbers failing to renew policies will be covered by the additional resources both this year and next.

Chiropody and Podiatry

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of NHS chiropody and podiatry services were provided to ethnic minority patients in each of the last three years. [22555]

Mr. Boateng: Information about the ethnic background of patients receiving National Health Service chiropody and podiatry services is not collected.

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking to ensure ethnic minorities with non-insulin diabetes have full access to NHS chiropody and podiatry services. [22554]

Mr. Boateng: The Department of Health established a task force in 1993 to look at ways of securing better and more cost-effective chiropody services within the National Health Service. The recommendations were widely disseminated to the service with the emphasis being on the provision of services to "at risk" groups—for example diabetics and those with acute clinical need. Information about the ethnic background of patients receiving NHS chiropody and podiatry services is not collected.

It is currently the responsibility of health authorities and general practitioner fundholders to assess the health care needs of their population, and to secure a range of hospital and community health services, including chiropody services, to meet those needs. Most health authorities give priority to meeting the chiropody needs of older people, those with "at risk" conditions, and certain other groups such as children, pregnant women, and people with learning disabilities.

Under the Chronic Disease Management Programme for diabetes, participating GPs (currently 94 per cent.) are required to give patients a full review, including checks for potential complications, at least annually and to refer them promptly to other services where appropriate. Health Service Guidelines HSG(97)45 on "Key features of a good diabetes service", issued to the NHS in November 1997, gives guidance on developing a structured programme of care, including surveillance for, and management of, the risk factors and complications of diabetes. It also flags up the importance of a responsive service, sensitive to different needs and states:

"prevalence of diabetes is generally much higher in all non-Europid ethnic groups, particularly the South Asian and African-Caribbean groups. It is important that consideration is given to the language and cultural barriers that may exist between health professionals and people with diabetes".

The Department of Health has commissioned new national clinical guidelines for non-insulin dependent diabetes, and other clinical effectiveness publications, which we expect to be available by the end of 1999. Copies of Health Service Guidelines HSG(97)45 are available in the Library.

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment his Department has made of limitations on the availability of chiropody services to particular age groups; what representations he has received on the subject; and if he will make a statement; [22551]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 13 November 1997, Official Report, column 662, what assessment he has made of the extent to which health authorities' decisions to provide chiropody services are determined according to the need of the population served. [22557]

Mr. Boateng: The Department of Health established in 1993 a task force to look at ways of securing better and more cost-effective chiropody services within the National Health Service. The recommendations were widely disseminated to the service with the emphasis being on the provision of services to "at risk" groups and those with acute clinical need.

It is currently the responsibility of health authorities and general practitioner fundholders to assess the health care needs of their population, and to secure a range of hospital and community health services to meet those needs. Decisions about health care and the use of resources are best taken at local level because it is there that people's needs are best known and services can be tailored accordingly.

Ministers have received a number of representations and communications on the subject and have responded individually.

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his Department's answer of 13 November 1997, Official Report, column 662, how many health authorities have consulted with their local residents during the last 12 months over the proper priority for chiropody within purchasing priorities. [22559]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not routinely collected.

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health authorities have notified his Department of (a) reductions and (b) increases in chiropody services in the last two years; and what other sources are utilised to collate trends in the level of services. [22558]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not routinely collected. Health authorities are not required to notify the Department of changes in activity in particular services. Although the Department wishes to see health authorities and general practitioner fundholders provide the full range of National Health Service services including chiropody, detailed planning decisions on levels of provision are taken locally according to the needs of the population served.

Information from health authorities about patient contacts with their chiropody services is collected on Department of Health annual return KT23. This information is published each year and copies of the summary information booklets are available in the Library.

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the budget for each trust in England for NHS chiropody and podiatry services in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1995–96 and (d) 1994–95. [22560]

Mr. Boateng: Figures on National Health Service trust budgets are not available centrally. Expenditure on community chiropody services by health authority directly managed units and NHS trusts in England for the years 1994–95 to 1996–97 have been placed in the Library.

Expenditure figures are compiled at the end of the financial year and therefore figures for 1997–98 have not yet been collected.

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 13 November 1997, Official Report, column 662, what methods his Department employs to communicate to health authorities the requirement for chiropody to be included within the full range of NHS services. [22556]

Mr. Boateng: It is currently the responsibility of health authorities and general practitioner fundholders to assess the health care needs of their population, and to secure a range of hospital and community health services, including chiropody services, to meet those needs. Health authorities were informed, in the 1997–98 NHS Priorities and Planning Guidance, of the need to ensure, in collaboration with other local authorities and organisations, that integrated services are in place to meet needs for continuing health care for older people, people with disabilities, vulnerable people and children.

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures his Department takes to ensure that the foot health needs of the elderly population are met; and what indicators measure levels of access to chiropody and podiatry services by those aged over 65 years.[22553]

Mr. Boateng: It is currently the responsibility of health authorities and general practitioner fundholders to assess the health care needs of their population, and to secure a range of hospital and community health services, including chiropody services, to meet those needs. Most health authorities give priority to meeting the chiropody needs of older people, those with "at risk" conditions for example diabetes, and certain other groups such as children, pregnant women, and people with learning disabilities.

Information about contacts with community chiropody services by age group is collected annually on Department of Health return KT23 and is published each year. Copies are available in the Library. In 1996–97, 63 per cent. of initial contacts with the chiropody service were with patients aged 65 and over.

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the age profile of NHS chiropody and podiatry patients for (a) 1996–97, (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1994–95; and what proportion of initial contacts made by NHS chiropody and podiatry patients were self-referred in these years. [22552]

Mr. Boateng: The age profile of National Health Service chiropody and podiatry patients as defined by initial contacts in the last three years is as follows:

Thousands

Years	Total	Age
		0-4	5-15	16-54	55-64	65-74	75-84	85 and over
1994–95	975.4	17.4	75.4	137.0	109.2	268.1	256.4	111.9
1995–96	950.6	15.6	65.6	147.9	109.5	255.8	246.3	109.9
1996–97	975.4	16.5	68.9	158.2	115.7	253.7	250.0	112.4

Information about the source of referral of NHS chiropody and podiatry patients for chiropody and podiatry services has not been collected centrally since 1991–92. In 1991–92, approximately 50 per cent. of the patients seen by chiropody services were self referrals.

Falloden Private Hospital, Leeds

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions were carried out at the Falloden private hospital, Leeds, during (a) 1995 and (b) 1996. [21799]

Ms Jowell: A total of 693 abortions undertaken at the Fallodon Private Surgical Hospital were notified to the Chief Medical Officer between 1 January 1995 and 28 November 1995. On 29 November 1995, the hospital closed following withdrawal of registration under the Registered Homes Act and withdrawal of approval to carry out abortions by the then Secretary of State.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps have been taken to establish the number of female patients who did not receive a full dosage of anti-D immunoglobulin during terminations undertaken at the Falloden private hospital, Leeds; what the implications of this are for the patients concerned; what steps have been taken to warn them of the potential risks they face and provide appropriate screening; and if he will make a statement. [21800]

Ms Jowell: When the Department became aware that some women had received less than the recommended dose of anti-D immunoglobulin, at the Fallodon Private Surgical Hospital, expert medical advice was sought on the medical consequences. That advice was that it would not be possible to identify any woman who may have been affected unless and until they became pregnant again.

Establishing the number of female patients who did not receive the full dose of anti-D would not therefore guide future care, nor offer benefit to the women concerned, and might cause needless anxiety. Any attempt to contact these women indirectly, for example via their general practitioner, would have run the risk of breaching patient confidentiality.

A woman's blood group is routinely tested as part of her ante-natal care. If she is found to be Rhesus negative she would be monitored to see whether she develops Anti-D antibodies. Action necessary to protect the baby would be determined by the results of this monitoring.

Tobacco

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the relationship between the level of (a) smoking among young people and (b) smuggled tobacco products from other member states of the European Union. [22793]

Ms Jowell: No assessment of such a relationship has been made.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Winter Fuel Payments

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons she has not made the new payments for assistance with winter fuel bills available to all groups receiving cold weather payments. [20624]

Mr. Denham: In our manifesto we made a commitment to review the central areas of insecurity for older people and examine ways to deliver more automatic help to the poorest pensioners. Work is underway in both areas, but we are not prepared to allow another winter to go by when pensioners are fearful of turning up their heating because they do not know whether they will get the help they need with their fuel bills. The additional help of £400 million over this winter and next, announced by the Chancellor on 25 November 1997, demonstrates the Government's commitment to help the elderly keep warm in their homes.

We have already taken action to cut fuel costs and make homes easier to heat. So far we have: reduced VAT on domestic fuel from eight to five per cent; reduced the gas levy to zero; extended energy efficiency grants and announced a reduction on VAT on energy saving installation schemes; announced the setting up of an Environmental Task Force which is expected to include a programme of energy efficiency improvements in the homes of the elderly; and, released almost £800 million to local authorities over the next two years to help meet pressing housing needs, which is expected to feature improved energy efficiency in many areas.

Disability Allowance

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the number of claimants in (a) Sutton and (b) Greater London, who are currently claiming disability allowance for (i) mobility awards and (ii) care awards, for (1) arthritis, (2) muscle/bone/joint disease, (3) blindness, (4) stroke-related disability, (5) learning difficulties, (6) other mental health causes, (7) epilepsy, (8) deafness, (9) malignant disease, (10) chest disease, (11) back ailments, (12) heart disease, (13) Parkinson's Disease, (14) Diabetes Mellitus, (15) renal disorders, (16) AIDS, (17) skin diseases and (18) other reasons. [21670]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with further details.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 12 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question regarding what estimate she has made of the number of claimants in (a) Sutton and (b) Greater London, who are currently claiming Disability Living Allowance for (i) mobility awards and (ii) care awards, for (1) arthritis, (2) muscle/joint/bone disease, (3) blindness, (4) stroke related diseases, (5) learning difficulties, (6) other mental health causes, (7) epilepsy, (8) deafness, (9) malignant disease, (10) chest diseases, (11) back aliments, (12) heart diseases, (13) Parkinsons disease, (14) Diabetes melitus, (15) renal disorders, (16) AIDS, (17) skin diseases, (18) other reasons.

Due to the low numbers involved and high margin of error, it has not been possible to provide an accurate breakdown, by main disabling condition for Sutton. However the following figures provide the total of all the disabling conditions required, for the Sutton area.

	All disabling conditions
All awards	3,187
Awards of care	2,049
Awards of mobility	2,771

As the numbers for Greater London are higher a more accurate breakdown has been possible and this shown in the attached table.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Respiratory Diseases

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what advice she has received from the Benefits Agency Medical Services in the Yorkshire Region concerning the delay in applicants receiving medical examinations for respiratory diseases; and if she will make a statement; [21624]

(2) what was the average length of time applicants in the Normanton constituency waited for medical examinations for respiratory diseases (a) for the six months from January to June, and (b) from July to December 1997; and if she will make a statement; [21625]

(3) what action she intends to take to promote efficiency in the Yorkshire office of the Benefits Agency Medical Services; and if she will make a statement; [21626]

(4) what proposals she plans to introduce to ensure a sufficient number of trained doctors to carry out medical examinations in the Yorkshire Regions for chronic bronchitis and emphysema; and if she will make a statement. [21627]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of the Benefits Agency Medical Services is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Bill O'Brien, dated 12 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent parliamentary questions about the operation of Benefits Agency Medical Services (BAMS) in the Yorkshire area.

Performance in all areas of the Benefits Agency (BA), including the clearance of Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit referrals in respiratory disease cases, is routinely monitored. There were temporary problems with examinations in the Yorkshire region earlier this year due to recruitment of new staff and a reorganisation of boundaries within BAMS. Appropriate action has been taken by local management to deal with those problems.

Information on performance targets is available for the Leeds Medical Services Centre (MSC), which includes Normanton. BAMS are set national performance targets when dealing with claims to Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit (IIDB) from clients suffering from respiratory diseases. The performance of Leeds MSC against these national targets since January is set out on the attached table. I would like to reassure you that BAMS is fully committed to continuing this improvement.

Since July, there has been no shortage of suitably trained doctors to carry out medical examinations in the Yorkshire Regions for chronic bronchitis and emphysema.

Much of the delay in dealing with respiratory disease cases is not directly related to arrangements for the actual medical examination. Once a case is at the examination stage it normally takes only 2–3 weeks to arrange and carry out the relevant medical procedure. However, it may be necessary to obtain further medical evidence before any examination is carried out and it is here that delays can occur, many of which are outside the BA's control. There is a legal requirement, for example, to obtain original X-rays when the client has had an X-ray taken during the last 18 months. This is connected with radiation protection and avoids the necessity for further exposure. Hospital case notes, consultant's reports, etc may also be needed.

I hope this reply is helpful.

School Governors (Benefit Withdrawal)

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many benefits claimants have had benefit withdrawn as a consequence of acting as a school governor since 1990; and of these, how many have had each benefit concerned withdrawn in each year. [21811]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information requested is not available.

Council Tax

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average weekly gross council tax of family credit recipients; how many have weekly gross council tax bills of (i) up to £3.99, (ii) £4–£7.99, (iii) £8–£11.99, (iv) £12–£15.99, (v) £16–£19.99 and (vi) £20 or above; and how many in each of these categories are also receiving council tax benefit. [21787]

Mr. Keith Bradley [holding answer 19 December 1997]: According to the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey the average weekly gross Council Tax of Family Credit recipients was £11 (rounded to the nearest £1).

Information about the gross level of the Council Tax liability of Family Credit recipients is shown in Table A. Counts of Family Credit receipt derived from the Family Resources Survey do not match administrative sources. Therefore the requested figures are shown as percentages rather than grossed up counts. Percentages are also used to show those within each band that are also in receipt of Council Tax Benefit.

Table B contains details of Council Tax Benefit recipients who are also in receipt of Family Credit.

2. The figures are based on information from the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey (FRS). The 1995–96 survey is the latest for which data are available.
3. The estimates are based on sample counts which have been adjusted for non-response using multi-purpose grossing factors which control for region, Council Tax Band and a number of demographic variables. Estimates are subject to sampling error and to variability in non response.
4. The figures refer to householder benefit units where the benefit unit to which the adult belongs is in receipt of Family Credit. A benefit unit is a single adult or couple living as married and any dependent children.
5. Gross Council Tax is the amount of weekly Council Tax eligible for Council Tax Benefit.

Rented Accommodation

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average weekly gross rent of people in rented accommodation in receipt of family credit; how many have weekly gross rents of (i) up to £9.99, (ii) £10–£19.99, (iii) £20–£29.99, (iv) £30–£39.99, (v) £40–£49.99, (vi) £50–£59.99, (vii) £60–£69.99, (viii) £70–£79.99 and (ix) £80 or above; and how many in each of these categories are also receiving housing benefit. [21786]

Mr. Keith Bradley [holding answer 19 December 1997]: According to the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey the average weekly rent eligible for Housing Benefit of Family Credit recipients was £45 (rounded to nearest £1).

Information about weekly rents eligible for Housing Benefit is shown in table A. Counts of Family Credit receipt derived from the Family Resources Survey do not match administrative sources. Therefore, the requested figures are shown as percentages rather than grossed up counts. Percentages are also used to show those within each band that are also in receipt of Housing Benefit. In addition the requested rent bands resulted in counts too low to be presented with any statistical reliability. In order to provide more reliable figures it has been necessary to enlarge the rent bands used.

Table B contains details of the average weekly eligible rent for Housing Benefit recipients who also receive Family Credit.

All-work Test

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants have successfully claimed benefit by passing an all-work test in each year since that test was introduced; and what estimate she has made of the number of such claimants who have earnings from work. [22094]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

Cases allowed benefit following referral to the Benefits Agency medical services[1]

	Number
1995–96	561,502
1997–98 (to 31 October 1997)	460,640

Incapacity Benefit is only payable as long as a person remains incapable of work through sickness or disability. Recipients are permitted to undertake up to 16 hours work per week without affecting their benefit entitlement provided this work is of a therapeutic nature. It is estimated that 1 per cent. of Incapacity Benefit recipients undertake paid work on the grounds that it is therapeutic[2].

Annuities

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate how many pensioners aged between 65 and 75 years have postponed purchasing an annuity until after the age of 65 years. [22055]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available.

Therapeutic Work

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the recognition of therapeutic work was withdrawn from the benefits system; and how many claimants had established an entitlement to earnings from therapeutic work at that point. [22054]

Mr. Denham: Under current legislation Incapacity Benefit and Severe Disablement Allowance recipients are permitted to undertake work of a therapeutic nature. It is estimated that one per cent. of Incapacity Benefit recipients undertake paid work on the grounds that it is therapeutic.

Source: Lonsdale, S, Lessof C and Ferris, G (1993) "Invalidity Benefit: a survey of recipients", London: HMSO.

This survey found that two per cent. of Invalidity Benefit recipients had ever done therapeutic work and fewer still were doing it at the time of the interview. The 1995–96 Family Resources Survey shows that 1 per cent. of Incapacity Benefit recipients had done any paid work in the week before the interview. Information is not collected directly on use of the permitted work provisions.

Benefit Take-up

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the take-up rate in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Scotland of (i) jobseeker's allowance, (ii) income support, (iii) family credit, (iv) disability living allowance, (v) disability working allowance, (vi) housing benefit, (vii) council tax benefit and (viii) severe hardship allowance. [22473]

Mr. Bradley: We would encourage anyone who is entitled to a benefit to make a claim. We are addressing the particular problem of pensioners failing to claim their Income Support entitlement by commissioning research into why they do not claim, and by running a number of pilot schemes to help find out how best to get help to them.

Latest estimates show that in Great Britain in 1995–96: the take-up of Income Support was between 88 per cent. and 92 per cent. by expenditure and between 76 per cent. and 82 per cent. by caseload; take-up of Family credit was 83 per cent. by expenditure and 70 per cent. by caseload; take-up of Housing Benefit was between 93 per cent. and 96 per cent. by expenditure and between 89 per cent. and 94 per cent. by caseload; take-up of Council Tax Benefit was between 76 per cent. and 84 per cent. by expenditure and between 74 per cent. and 82 per cent. by caseload[1]. Figures for Scotland are not available in the form requested but are likely to be broadly similar to those for Great Britain as a whole.

Estimates of take-up for Jobseeker's Allowance, Disability Living Allowance, Disability Working Allowance and Severe Hardship Allowance are not available.

For estimates relating to Northern Ireland, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Source:

[1] DSS estimates from 1995–96 Family Resources Survey.

Note:

Estimates are not available for Jobseeker's Allowance because of its relatively recent introduction; for Disability Living Allowance because work on them is still in progress; and for Disability Working Allowance and Severe Hardship Allowance because of the small numbers entitled to these benefits and thus the small sample sizes involved in the surveys used to produce estimates of take-up.

Lone Parents

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the impact of the withdrawal of lone parent benefits on those fleeing domestic violence. [22374]

Mr. Keith Bradley: New lone parents, including those fleeing domestic violence, will continue to receive the same rate of Child Benefit as couples with children. Lone parents who make a new claim for Income Support, Jobseeker's Allowance, Housing Benefit of Council Tax Benefit will receive the same rate of family premium as couples with children.

A parent who has experienced domestic violence and decides to leave their partner can seek help from a variety of sources. These include the police, Women's Aid or a local refuge, Social Services and health professionals at a doctor's surgery or Hospital. The key is for agencies to work together locally to ensure that they provide effective support to those contacting them for help, and refer them on to other agencies, such a Housing or a local refuge, where necessary.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement regarding her policy on benefits for single parents in work on low wages.[22466]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Government believe that work is the best form of welfare. Our priority is to provide all families, including lone parents, with the support they need to make the transition into work and to support themselves in work. We have already undertaken a number of important steps to help achieve this.

Childcare plays a crucial role in supporting lone parents in work as they need access to affordable, good quality childcare to help balance work and family life successfully. That is why our Manifesto gave a commitment to introduce a National Childcare Strategy. That commitment is already becoming a reality.

The massive boost in childcare provision which was announced by my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his pre-Budget statement means every child will have access to out of school care in their community. We are investing an extra £300 million to provide an extra 30,000 out of school clubs—a tenfold increase on existing provision. We have guaranteed a nursery place for every four year old in Britain and provided specific help in the New Deal for Lone Parents towards the cost of childcare.

In addition, the improvements to the childcare disregard scheme in the in-work benefits from June 1998, means parents will be able to receive up to £95.50 a week towards the cost of their childcare. There will also be more help with the cost of childcare through the Working Families Tax Credit.

We are also reviewing all aspects of the Child Support Agency to ensure it provides a fair, efficient, and effective service. Maintenance is a portable income which lone mothers keep when they move into work and they need to know the Child Support Agency will take every action to ensure that it is paid.

The implementation of a National Minimum Wage will also benefit all low income families. It will provide a statutory level beneath which pay should not fall and will remove the worst excesses of low pay and exploitation of vulnerable workers.

Finally, we are also examining the interaction of the tax and benefit systems so that they can be streamlined and modernised, so as to fulfil objectives of promoting work incentives, reducing poverty and welfare dependency, and strengthening community and family life.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average (a) rent of tenants and (b) mortgage interest for homebuyers in respect of lone parents in the New Deal pilot areas. [22530]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of lone parents on income support are (a) tenants, (b) owner occupiers with mortgages, (c) owner occupiers who own outright and (d) non-householders; and what is their (i) mean and (ii) median gross weekly housing costs. [22531]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is set out in the table.

Household tenure	Proportion (per cent.)	Gross weekly housing costs for household (£s)
		Mean	Median
Tenants	82	54	47
Owner occupiers with mortgage	12	56	45

Non-householders	6	not applicable	not applicable

[1] Denotes nil or negligible.

1. The figures are based on information from the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey (FRS). The 1995–96 survey is the latest for which data are available.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the percentage of a random sample of lone parents whose youngest child was at school and who were receiving income support who would typically flow off benefit in a three month period in current economic circumstances. [14023]

Mr. Keith Bradley [Pursuant to his reply 3 November 1997, column 86–7.]

The information is not available in the format requested. there are a number of reasons why a lone parent may cease claiming Income Support. These include: re-partnering; receiving an increase in income other than earnings (for example following an award of maintenance); and either starting work or increasing their hours of work.

There were 506,000 Income Support claimants in receipt of a lone parent premium at the end of November 1996 whose youngest child was aged 5 or over. Three months later 46,000 had ceased to fit into this category: around 36,000 had ceased to claim by the end of February 1997 and a further 10,000 remained on benefit but experienced a change in their circumstances.

Notes:

1. All figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand.

2. Sample size 5 per cent.

3. Continuous claims include those who were no longer a lone parent with a youngest child aged 5 or over in February 1997.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she has considered excluding sufferers from multiple sclerosis among the categories of disabled people already excluded from the current review programme of disability living allowance claims; and if she will make a statement. [22375]

Mr. Denham: The Benefit Integrity Project (BIP) is designed to gather up-to-date information about the care and mobility needs of people receiving the higher rate mobility component of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) with either the middle or highest rate of the care component, through a programme of postal inquiries and home visits. People with certain conditions are not being contacted directly. These are disabled people receiving payments under Special Rules, quadriplegics, paraplegics, people who are both deaf and blind, double amputees and those within our definition of severe mental impairment. There are no plans to extend this list of conditions.

The level of entitlement to DLA cannot generally be predicted by the fact that an individual has a certain disabling condition. Entitlement is based on the effect of that disabling condition on the individual concerned and their need for help with personal care and/or getting around. Disabling conditions rarely remain static and as conditions improve or worsen, or the disabled person becomes more or less able to cope, the need for help changes also. Any change in the level of help needed with either personal care or getting around could affect entitlement to DLA. Where a change is gradual and occurs over time, it can be difficult for the individual to recognise exactly the point at which they should be contacting the Benefits Agency.

Lone Parents (Spelthorne)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what proportion of lone parents are receiving regular payments of child maintenance in Spelthorne. [22201]

Mr. Keith Bradley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Cunningham) on 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 465.

Housing Benefit

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for each local authority in England how many households are in receipt of housing benefit for (a) local authority homes, (b) private rented homes and (c) housing association homes; and what was the average weekly payment in each category. [22485]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information requested is provided in the table which has been placed in the Library.

Council Tax Benefit

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her policy concerning the role of investment income in the calculation of council tax benefit; and if she will make a statement. [22467]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Income derived from capital which has been invested is treated as capital but only from the date it is due to be credited to the claimant's account. This is because, to aid efficient administration, a notional (tariff) income is assumed where capital held by a claimant exceeds £3,000. To take into account both notional and actual income derived from same capital would be inequitable.

WALES

Welsh Assembly

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many civil servants are currently working on the siting of the Welsh Assembly; and what has been the cost to public funds to date of work on the siting of the assembly. [20084]

Mr. Ron Davies: There are currently no civil servants working full time on the siting on the Assembly. Eight civil servants currently devote a proportion of their time to the siting of the Assembly. The cost to date of finding a site for the Assembly is included in the running cost expenditure of my department which is published in the Welsh Office Departmental Report 1997 (Cm 3615).

Cycle Spaces

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many secure cycle spaces there are in his Department. [22682]

Mr. Ron Davies: Sixty eight.

DEFENCE

Minimum Wage

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has to seek exemptions for any of its (a) civilian and (b) military employees from the minimum wage. [22639]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing) on 12 January 1998, Official Report, column 13.

Ulster Defence Regiment

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what delays there have been in issuing those qualifying ex-members of the Ulster Defence Regiment with their Accumulated Service Medal; how many qualify for this medal; how many have been issued to date; and what has been the situation in respect of other UDR members who transferred to the Royal Irish Regiment. [22799]

Mr. Spellar: The delay in issuing the Accumulated Service Medal (ACSM) to former members of the Ulster Defence Regiment (UDR) has been caused by the large number of applications received from all sections of the Army since the medal's introduction, and the decision to afford priority of assessment and issue to serving members of the Armed Forces. In addition, the absence of detailed records of operational duties for part-time ex-UDR/Royal Irish Regiment members has presented some difficulties in establishing entitlement. There has, however, been little delay in issuing medals once an individual's entitlement has been confirmed.

A total of 12,500 successful applications for the ACSM have been processed by the Army Medals Office since the commencement of Issues in January 1995, of which 4,779 ACSM's have been made to former members of the UDR, serving and ex-members of the Royal Irish Regiment. The entitlement to the medal of some 600 former UDR and Royal Irish Regiment members has still to be established, but is being reviewed expeditiously.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Cycle Spaces

Mr. Brake: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many secure cycle spaces there are in her Department. [22675]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: There are 21 cycle racks with capacity for 158 cycles in the Department's four buildings in the Victoria area. There is room for more racks should demand increase.

Biotechnical Inventions

Mr. Alan Clark: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action the Government intend to take on the EU Directive, Legal Protection of Biotechnological Inventions; and what amendments they propose in respect of its provisions on the patentability of the human body. [22728]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government recently joined other Member States in supporting a Common Position which was reached by the Internal Market Council on 27 November 1997. The Common Position includes a provision which excludes the human body, at the various stages of its formation and development, from patentability. This provision fully reflects the views of the European Parliament, and the Government did not seek to amend the text.

The Common Position will now be sent to the European Parliament for second reading.

New Statesman and Society

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action her Department is taking to ensure accounts for the New Statesman and Society are filed. [22344]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 12 January 1998]: The Registrar of Companies has responsibility under the Companies Acts 1985 and 1989 for ensuring that up-to-date information on limited companies is available for public inspection.

In line with normal procedures, a letter was sent on 16 December to New Statesman Limited at its registered office warning of the consequences of continued default and requesting that overdue accounts be delivered within one month. Should the company not comply, formal warnings of prosecution proceedings will be sent to the directors.

Company Accounts

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in what circumstances her Department prosecutes directors of companies in respect of a failure to file accounts on time if the director for the trading period concerned has resigned. [22347]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 12 January 1998]: In line with the guidance issued by the Attorney-General in his "Code For Crown Prosecutors", Companies House institutes criminal proceedings against directors who fail to comply with the disclosure requirements of the Companies Acts 1985 and 1989.

The aim of these proceedings is to secure compliance and, as a general rule, prosecution would not normally take place against a former director who would no longer be able to influence the company's affairs and would, therefore, not be capable of remedying a default.

It is possible, however, to depart from these general rules where there is an indication that a director has resigned purely to avoid compliance or conviction.

Departmental Accounts

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in what circumstances her Department grants an extension for the filing of accounts; and what actions her Department takes to ensure that accounts are filed on time. [22348]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 12 January 1998]: Short extensions to the time allowed for the delivery of accounts to the Registrar are granted by Companies House, on a discretionary basis, where the reasons for the delay can be demonstrated to be unforeseen and outside the control of the company and its auditors. Applications for such extensions are considered on their merits.

As far as compliance is concerned, the Registrar reminds all companies of the requirement to deliver accounts to him, prior to the date when accounts fall due to be delivered. This is followed up by a further series of reminders once the accounts are overdue. Continued failure to deliver accounts may render the directors liable for prosecution. In addition, where accounts are filed late, the company is subject to a civil late filing penalty. Specific guidance is also provided to assist first time directors to become more aware of their statutory obligations to deliver accounts and adhere to their statutory filing responsibilities.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 10 December 1997, Official Report, column 548, if she will list the international experts consulted since 1988 in the review of measures to protect against terrorist activity directed at nuclear materials in transit; and if she will list the research her Department has evaluated on this subject. [22300]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 12 January 1998]: In accordance with the requirements of the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material, government security experts co-operate, exchange information and consult directly with experts in other governments so as to ensure that nuclear material in international transportation is protected adequately and effectively. All relevant available information is reviewed on a case by case basis before movements of sensitive quantities of nuclear material.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the United Kingdom representatives on the informal group on guidelines for the management of plutonium proposed that details of plutonium isotopic quality be included in section 9 on nuclear material accountancy and control in the report on the guidelines recently placed in the Library. [22285]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 12 January 1998]: In many respects the guidelines represents a reaffirmation of existing obligations and commitments. Section 9 concerning nuclear material accountancy and control is a case in point and accords with the provisions in the participating countries' respective safeguards agreements with the IAEA and, in the case of the United Kingdom, France Germany and Belgium, Euratom. The inclusion in the guidelines of details of plutonium isotopic quality would not have been consistent with these agreements which, with one minor exception, do not distinguish between plutonium of different isotopic composition.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Yeo: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she will announce the outcome of her review of Renewable Energy. [22290]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 12 January 1998]: I am expecting an interdepartmental review group to present me with a number of policy options shortly. I will then need to consult with colleagues, and perhaps with industry and other interested parties, before announcing the outcome of the review as soon as possible this year.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the current breakdown by (a) age, (b) sex and (c) socio-economic background of visitors to the (i) Victoria and Albert Museum, (ii) British Museum, (iii) National Museum of Science and Industry, (iv) Imperial War Museum, (v) National Gallery, (vi) National Maritime Museum, (vii) Natural History Museum and (viii) Tate Gallery. Figures from free institutions are more prone to error than from those which charge. Some institutions have no data available on the composition of educational groups and information on schoolchildren is frequently omitted. Figures for the National Museum of Science and Industry and the Imperial War Museum are for the principal site only. Some totals do not sum to 100 per cent. due to rounding.

Cycle Spaces

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many secure cycle spaces there are in his Department. [22679]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport has secure storage for 12 bicycles, with scope for a further eight should the need arise.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Admiralty House

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 22 December 1997, Official Report, columns 394–95, if any of the Admiralty House apartments available for Ministers have previously been allocated on the basis of security requirements. [22689]

Dr. David Clark: Yes.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the Ministers for whom accommodation in Admiralty House has been made available since 1968. [22690]

Dr. David Clark: Accommodation in Admiralty House has been made available to various holders of the following Ministerial offices since 1968:

Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions

Attorney-General

Secretary of State for Commonwealth Affairs

Secretary of State for Defence

Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster

Secretary of State for the Environment

Secretary of State for the Home Department

Secretary of State for Northern Ireland

Parliamentary Secretary to the Treasury (Chief Whip)

Paymaster General

Minister without Portfolio

Lord President of the Council

President of the Board of Trade

Lord Privy Seal

Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

In addition, Admiralty House was also occupied on a temporary basis by the Prime Minister and Chancellor of the Exchequer during the refurbishments of Numbers 10 and 11 Downing Street in 1992 and 1994 respectively.

TREASURY

Cash Planning

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the control total for cash planning for the year ahead in each year since 1987; and by what amount the outturn figure has differed from the figure previously announced. [22539]

Mr. Darling: The table gives the information requested. It shows the control aggregate for cash planning which was set before the beginning of the year and the difference between that planned figure and the final outturn. Planned figures have been amended for classification changes between the beginning of the year and the publication of outturn, but are otherwise as were published immediately preceding that financial year. Differences from outturn are calculated using data published in the following year.

Year ahead control aggregates and amount by which outturn differed (£ billion)

	Aggregate	Planned expenditure[1]	Amount by which outturn differed[2]
1987–88	Planning Total	148.7	–3.0
1988–89	Planning Total	156.9	–7.3
1989–90	Planning Total	167.1	2.1
1990–91	New Planning Total	179.0	1.0
1991–92	New Planning Total	204.2	–0.8
1992–93	New Planning Total	226.7	0.6
1993–94	Control Total	244.4	–2.5
1994–95	Control Total	250.9	–2.4
1995–96	Control Total	256.2	–1.0
1996–97	Control Total	259.5	0.4

[1] Adjusted for classification changes.
[2] For 1987–88 to 1991–92 outturns are as published in the following year's Autumn Statement or related Statistical Supplement, and for more recent years in Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses. The outturn figure used for 1996–97 is as published in the Pre-Budget Report.

Self Assessment

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what representations he has received about the filing deadline for submission of self assessment tax returns; [22499]

(2) what plans he has to extend the filing deadline for submission of self assessment tax returns; [22498]

(3) if he will make a statement on the filing deadline for self assessment tax returns; [22540]

(4) how many self assessment tax returns have been rejected by Inland Revenue staff since self assessment was introduced; [22518]

(5) what estimates he has made of the number of self assessment tax returns (a) likely to be received before the deadline date and (b) expected not to meet the deadline. [22550]

Dawn Primarolo: Self assessment tax returns are due from individuals, partnerships and trusts for the tax year 1996–97. The statutory filing date for these returns is 31 Janaury 1998. There are no plans to extend this deadline. Although representations have been received from a number of tax practitioners seeking an extension to the filing date, others have argued against an extension. The timetable for filing returns is a realistic one, details of which have been known for the last four years.

During the pilot exercises carried out to test the new system, between 85 per cent. and 90 per cent. of returns were received by the deadline despite there being no national advertising campaign or any penalties charged for late filing. The Inland Revenue expect the vast majority of taxpayers to meet this year's deadline and will continue to give as much assistance and advice as they reasonably can to help taxpayers and their agents do this.

Of the returns filed by 30 September 1997, about 6 per cent. had to be sent back to taxpayers, mainly because of basic errors—such as missing signatures or pages—which the Inland Revenue were unable to correct. However, this error rate has fallen in respect of returns received more recently. The majority of returns that were sent back to taxpayers have now been corrected and re-submitted to the Inland Revenue.

Savings

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the limit recommended by the Government for the amount of savings exposed to risk-inherent equities by poorer savers. [21344]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 17 December 1997]: There is no such Government recommended limit. Investors should make their own decisions drawing on regulated investment advice if they wish, and using information disclosed by product providers.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Officers

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what minimum educational qualifications are required of new recruits for training as prison officers in (a) the Prison Service and (b) each of the contractually managed prisons operated by the private sector; and if he will make a statement. [21572]

Ms Quin: Since 2 September 1997, the minimum educational requirement for prison officer entry to the Prison Service is a minimum of five subjects in GCSE, grades A*–C, including English, Mathematics, or their equivalent.

For each of the four companies running prisons under contracts let or extended prior to 2 September 1997, the requirement is as follows:

Group 4 (Altcourse, Buckley Hall and Wolds)

No pre-qualifications.

Premier Prison Service (Doncaster and Lowdham Grange)

Pre-qualifications of 5 GCSE passes, including English and Mathematics, at level A–E.

Securicor (Parc)

No pre-qualifications.

UKDS (Blakenhurst)

No pre-qualifications.

However, invitations to tender issued by the Prison Service after 2 September 1997 for prison contracts, or extensions of existing contracts (including Blakenhurst) after that date, require the same minimum educational qualifications for prisoner custody officers as have been introduced for prison officers.

Street Lighting

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has evaluated on the role of street lighting in deterring criminal activity. [22815]

Mr. Michael: The Home Office Crime Prevention Unit published two papers on street lighting in 1991. The first reported the results of an independent evaluation of a major street lighting programme in the London Borough of Wandsworth, which concluded there was little impact on crime. The second reviewed a number of evaluations of street lighting initiatives and concluded that there was little scope to reduce crime by improving street lighting generally. However, it did report that improved street lighting could help in local "blackspots" where lighting was particularly poor and when it was part of a package of measures. A recent report by Dr. Kate Painter, University of Cambridge, concludes that improved street lighting reduced crime on a high crime estate in Dudley, West Midlands. The Home Office is currently examining this report and will also review existing evidence and published research on the subject.

Immigration Service

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 8 December 1997, Official Report, column 433, if he will list (a) the locations in which staff of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate are based in the United Kingdom other than Croydon and (b) the number of staff based in each such location. FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Gibraltar

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made by the Government of Gibraltar to deal with illicit trafficking. [23453]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We and the Government of Gibraltar have taken decisive action to stop drugs and tobacco smuggling using Gibraltar-based boats. Effective regulatory mechanisms, including new bodies, have been established.

The Government of Gibraltar have also introduced tough legislation to UK and EC standards on an all crimes basis to deal with money laundering. This has transformed Gibraltar's international reputation in this context. EC Commissioner Gradin, for example, said in the European Parliament last year that there are no grounds for suspecting Gibraltar of tolerating money laundering.

Argentina

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many exceptions to the arms embargo on Argentina have been granted since 2 May. [23144]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have recently granted two exceptions to the embargo, one in respect of the sale of a single sporting rifle to a private individual in Argentina, another in respect of the sale of eight deactivated weapons to an Argentine collector. These represent exceptions but not changes to the embargo.

Hong Kong

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom will apply the EU arms embargo against China to the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region. [23019]

Mr. Fatchett: Following the transfer of sovereignty over Hong Kong to China on 1 July 1997, we have conducted a detailed review of the applicability to the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (HKSAR) of the European Union arms embargo against China. In view of the HKSAR's autonomy from mainland China in customs, trade and economic matters and its well-established strategic trade control system, we have concluded that its access to a broad range of strategic commodities from the UK for civil end-use should be preserved. The DTI will therefore issue a new Open General Export Licence and Open General Transhipment Licence to allow the continued export and transhipment of dual-use goods to the HKSAR for civil end-use.

As for the export of strategic goods for military end-use, we have concluded that, in order to fulfil our obligations under the EU embargo, goods which we would not approve for export to the Chinese armed forces in mainland China should not be permitted for export for military end-use in the HKSAR. Goods for military end-use will therefore be subject to individual licensing requirements.

These changes will take effect on 23 January.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Environment Act 1995

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when his Department's review of the operation of the Environment Act 1995 will be completed. [22752]

Angela Eagle: My Department is not carrying out a review of the operation of the Environment Act 1995 as a whole. However, I refer the hon. Member to the replies given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment on 17 December 1997 to my hon. Friend the Member for Normanton (Mr. O'Brien), Official Report, columns 193–94, and on 22 December 1997 to my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mrs. Ellman), Official Report, column 439. The former announced the objectives and timing of a review of the Producer Responsibility (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997, which were made under sections 93-95 of the Environment Act 1995. The latter announced the outcome of the Government's review of the proposed statutory regime for contaminated land under Part IIA of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, which was inserted by section 57 of the Environment Act 1995. The Government also announced in July last year that they intended to review by the end of 1998 the National Air Quality Strategy set in place under section 80 of the Environment Act 1995.

Energy Saving Trust

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting held on Monday 22 December to review the decision to reduce the funding of the Energy Saving Trust from £19 million to £14 million next year. [22594]

Mr. Meacher: The meeting to which the hon. Member refers was internal to my Department. I shall be making a statement shortly about the Energy Saving Trust's grant support for 1998–99. The previous Government's planned public expenditure total provided for grant support of £13.5 million for the Trust in 1998, compared to £25 million in 1996–97 and £19 million in 1997–98.

National Cycle Network

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if all trunk road crossings required by the National Cycle Network will be completed by 2000. [22671]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I will write to my hon. Friend and will place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his Department's letter (reference EE/PSO/17203/97), what analytical results he has received from the Environment Agency about the use of earthworms on contaminated sites; and if he will make a statement. [22732]

Angela Eagle: The Environment Agency has completed the field work part of this study and the process of identifying and quantifying the results has begun. A report on the findings will be published in due course and will be available to the public.

Air Traffic (Heathrow)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the (a) time of arrival, (b) aircraft type and (c) owning company of aeroplanes that landed at Heathrow Airport before 7 am on (i) 25 December 1997 and (ii) 1 January 1998. [22729]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information from Heathrow Airport Ltd. is as follows:

Sewerage

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made towards the adoption of a European standard for the manufacture and installation of plastic sewerage pipes. [22763]

Angela Eagle: Progress toward the adoption of a European standard for different types of plastic sewerage pipes is being made as follows:

Proposals for a European standard for PVC-U) Poly-Vinyl Chloride—Unplasticised) piping systems for non pressure underground drainage and sewerage (Part 1. Pipes and Fittings) have passed the formal vote stage in Europe and are awaiting publication as European standard EN 1401-1.

Proposals for a European Standard for PP (Polypropylene) piping systems for non pressure underground drainage and sewerage (Part 1. Pipes and Fittings) have passed the formal vote stage in Europe and are awaiting publication as European standard EN 1852-1.

Proposals for a European standard for PE (Polyethylene) piping systems for non pressure underground drainage and sewerage (Part 1. Pipes and Fittings) have recently been through the CEN enquiry process as prEN 12666-1. Comments are now being considered by the appropriate CEN Working Group.

Proposals for a European standard for plastics piping systems for structured wall non pressure underground drainage and sewerage (Part 1. Pipes and Fittings), PVC-U, PP and PE are about to be submitted for CEN enquiry.

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what standards for the unblocking of sewage pipes by high pressure water jet are presently in force. [22762]

Angela Eagle: A Code of Practice for removing blockages, which limits the pressure of the cleaning jet when blockages occur in plastic pipes, is currently in force. This can be used as a condition of contract for jetting contractors. I understand a new design of jet has been developed from which it is claimed that thin walled pipes cannot sustain damage.

Street Lighting

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he is taking to ensure that street lights (a) are properly maintained and (b) do not present a safety risk to the public. [22816]

Ms Glenda Jackson: It is the responsibility of the relevant highway authority to ensure that street lights are properly maintained and safe.

On the Department's roads, where the Highways Agency is the responsible authority, the inspection and maintenance requirements are set out within the Design Manual for Roads and Bridges. Additional advice was issued by the Highways Agency in 1995 on the routine and detailed inspection of lighting columns and is available for other authorities to use.

Raptors

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made to assess the impact of increasing raptor numbers on game bird and racing pigeon interests; and what future projects his Department plans. [23101]

Angela Eagle: In 1995 my Department set up a Raptor Working Group to investigate the effects of the recovery in populations of birds of prey and their impact on game bird management and racing pigeons. The Working Group is chaired jointly by DETR and the Joint Nature Conservation Committee (JNCC). Membership comprises scientific, conservation, game bird, landowning and racing pigeon interests. This Working Group has made significant progress in analysing the factors causing conflict and recently detailed its planned work for 1998 in a report to a forum of interested parties.

In 1998 the Group will concentrate on identifying integrated and practical solutions to deal with conflict situations. This will apply particularly to conflicts between the hen harrier and red grouse, where the Group will clarify the detail and legal implications of scaring techniques, supplementary feeding of raptors and possible translocation of harriers. Also the Group will consider how to raise awareness of moorland management issues and to discourage illegal persecution of raptors. The Working Group indicated its support for a national survey of hen harrier populations which is planned to take place in 1998.

Conclusions on the impact of birds of prey on racing pigeons should become clearer when the Department's sponsored research in this area reports in the late Spring of 1998. The Working Group will also assess the need for further research on the predation of pheasants at release pens.

Social Housing

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the technical report on the feasibility study into a new economic model to help estimate the demand and need for social housing in England. [23455]

Ms Armstrong: I have today placed in the Library of the House a technical report on a feasibility study to develop an economic model to help predict likely demand and need for social housing in England. The study was commissioned by the Department of the Environment in November 1995 and has been carried out by the Department of Applied Economics at Cambridge University. The study was encouraged by the work of the Select Committee on Housing Need, which also supported the potential value of economic analysis of housing need.

Previous estimates of social housing need produced by the Department were based on the extrapolation of past trends and did not take explicit account of economic variables. The economic model developed during this study projects the need for social housing in England over the period 1996 to 2006, and takes account of key economic factors such as unemployment, income growth and interest rates. Feeding these variables in to reflect a range of economic scenarios, it projects their likely impact on household formation, house prices, housing supply and housing choice. The model also analyses the cost effectiveness of different forms of support for households who might need help with their housing costs.

The model developed during the feasibility study has produced a range of projections of need for social housing but, as the report notes, these are not alternative forecasts of need. The projections are based on a range of assumptions. For example, assuming macroeconomic growth is high, unemployment low and social housing construction relatively expensive, the model projects a "low" annual average need for 22,000 lettings. Assuming low macroeconomic growth and unemployment at 9 per cent., the model predicts a "high" annual average need for 72,000 lettings.

This economic model is a significant step forward in the analysis of likely demand and need for social housing. The Department of Applied Economics have now begun further necessary research to develop and improve this national model, and to explore whether regional variants are feasible.

PRIME MINISTER

Royal Family (Gifts)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those gifts received by (a) the Queen and (b) other members of the Royal Family from heads of state during 1997 which have been given to the nation, indicating their estimated value. [20812]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 December 1997]: Official gifts received by The Queen from Heads of State in 1997 were:

Two shell baskets and wall hanging
Silver salver
Bronze sculpture of giraffes
Wooden carving of a seated man
Set of silver tray, box and bowls
Silver model of boat
Carved wooden statue
Book of antiquarian maps
A pair of carpets
Silver tea-set, marble inlay table and a carved wooden elephant
Two water colours of orchids.

It is not the normal practice to estimate the value of such gifts.

No other member of the Royal Family received gifts for the nation from Heads of State.

Ministerial Advisers

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those Ministers who have advisers paid for in whole or in part by (a) commercial and (b) charitable concerns; and if he will make a statement. [22608]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 12 January 1998]: Ministers receive advice from a variety of sources including the Civil Service, consultants, consultative committees, advisory task forces and special and unpaid advisers. Details of the names of unpaid advisers and the appointing Minister in each case were given in my answer to the hon. Member for Surrey Heath (Mr. Hawkins) on 13 November 1997, Official Report, columns 615–17. Information on appointments of other external advisers and the funding of individual salaries is not held centrally.

Disabled People

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if the request made in November by the consortium of organisations representing people with disabilities for a meeting with Ministers has been granted. [22583]

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security will be meeting representatives from the Disability Benefits Consortium.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister what instructions were given to officials involved in reviewing disability allowances, benefits and income support; when the instructions were issued; who issued them; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [22584]

The Prime Minister: Benefits paid to disabled people, their carers and people who have long-term health problems are included in the Department of Social Security's Comprehensive Spending Review. This review was announced on 11 June last year, and its terms of reference were published. A copy was placed in the Library on 24 July.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister when he decided to take charge of the policy and review of disability allowances, benefits and income support. [22580]

The Prime Minister: Responsibility for the Comprehensive Spending Review of Social Security, which includes benefits paid to disabled people and people with long-term health problems, rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security. Shortly before Christmas I established a separate group to look at the wider issues of welfare reform.

Cabinet Meetings

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister how long each main Cabinet meeting lasted since 1 May.[22597]

The Prime Minister: No record is routinely kept of how long Cabinet meetings last.

Prisons (Education and Training)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will transfer financial provision for education and training in prisons to the Department for Education and Employment. [22585]

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has no immediate plans for such a transfer, but all policy priorities and spending plans are subject to the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review. The Prison Service will continue to review how it can most effectively develop its core educational curriculum to meet the needs of all prisoners, particularly juveniles.

Civil Service

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the (a) agreed pay and (b) numbers employed by each Department in London of staff aged (i) 16, (ii) 17, (iii) 18 and (iv) 19 years. [22587]

The Prime Minister: The information centrally available, which covers about 98 per cent. of the Civil Service, shows that at 1 April 1997 the number and average gross salary of staff of each age in the London Government Office region were as follows:

Age	Number	Average salary (£)
(i) 16	3	9,552
(ii) 17	24	9,790
(iii) 18	73	9,717
(iv) 19	168	9,930

Departments employing five or more staff in the 16–19 age group were as follows:

	Number aged 16–19
Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food	18
Cabinet Office, including OPS	7
HM Customs and Excise	36
Ministry of Defence	17
Department for Education and Employment	42
Home Office, including Prison Service	34
Inland Revenue, including Valuation Office	32
Lord Chancellor's Department	17
Department of Social Security	43
Crown Prosecution Service	7
Other Departments	15

Summer Holiday (Costs)

Mr. Gale: To ask the Prime Minister what was the cost to public funds of arrangements made in respect of his civil servants and security staff, for his summer holiday in Tuscany. [22655]

The Prime Minister: The arrangements for Civil Servants accompanying me on my holiday in Tuscany were the same as for previous Prime Ministers staying abroad. Separate costs for these staff are not readily available.

The Metropolitan Police Special Branch provides protection for the Prime Minister throughout the year, whether he is in the UK or abroad, on official business or holiday. The security arrangements for my holiday in Tuscany were the same as for previous Prime Ministers staying abroad. The disaggregated costs of security during this trip are not available.

Ministerial Statements

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Prime Minister if it is his policy to require that Ministers who have misled the House make a statement correcting the record. [22279]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 12 January 1998]: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Worthing, West (Mr. Bottomley) on 26 June 1997, Official Report, column 609.

Fur Farming

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister how many letters he has received in the last three months urging him to ban fur farming in the United Kingdom. [22522]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 12 January 1998]: I have received a number of representations.

Maze Prison (Escape)

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those (a) Ministers and (b) participants in the current Northern Ireland talks process with whom he has discussed the escape of Liam Averill from HM Prison, Maze. [22792]

The Prime Minister: I have discussed with colleagues and others as appropriate.

Honours (Surcharged Councillors)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to recommend that titles be removed in cases where local councillors have been surcharged. [22569]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 12 January 1998]: Holders of honours and awards who are subsequently found to have conducted themselves in a way that would be perceived to bring the honours system into disrepute may be considered for forfeiture of their award. Each case is treated on its merits once all the relevant legal proceedings have been completed. The necessary action differs according to the honour or award. I do not propose to adopt a different system.

Strategic Communications Unit

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Prime Minister when he will establish the Strategic Communications Unit, as recommended by the report of the Working Group on the Government Information Service published in November. [23559]

The Prime Minister: I am today launching the new Strategic Communications Unit which will be based in No. 10 and answerable to me (working through the Chief Press Secretary).

The Mountfield Report, a copy of which was placed in the Library, said that more needed to be done to improve strategic communications so that the key Government messages are better communicated across Government. Departmental initiatives and events need to be presented in such a way as to show their coherence with the main themes of the Government's strategy.

To achieve this, Departments must be properly informed of Government activity, Ministers must be properly briefed on key Government issues at all times, and initiatives must be properly prepared and co-ordinated.

The Strategic Communications Unit will work to achieve that. It will be responsible for the implementation and operation of the new electronic information system which will provide a future diary of Government events (Mountfield recommendation 2.3). It will be responsible for managing strategic communications across all departments and will produce the Government's Annual Report on their performance and achievement of their objectives, as announced in August 1997.

The Strategic Communications Unit will comprise six people, two Special Advisers and four civil servants. They are:

Alun Evans (Head)

Philip Bassett (Special Adviser)

David Bradshaw (Special Adviser)

James Humphreys

Siobhan Kenny

Andrew Silverman.

The aim of the unit is to make sure events are scheduled, launched and followed through to maintain impact and to convey the central story and themes of the Government in all their communications.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what review he has carried out of the effectiveness of the National Meat Hygiene Service; and if he will make a statement. [21033]

Mr. Rooker: Since the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) was established in April 1995 as an Executive Agency of the Department, its effectiveness has been the subject of constant review. It took over responsibility from over 300 local authorities for the enforcement of hygiene controls and subsequently those for the removal of Specified Risk Material (SRM) in licensed slaughterhouses and cutting plants in Great Britain. As an Agency, it has been set demanding annual targets by Ministers in respect of its financial performance, efficiency and quality and delivery of service. These targets have all been achieved to date. Full details are set out in the MHS Annual Report and Accounts for 1995–96 and 1996–97, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

In addition, the performance of the MHS is subject to continuous audit to establish whether its operations, practices and activities comply with the instructions issued to the Service by the Ministry in the MHS Operations Manual. This audit is carried out by Veterinary Meat Hygiene Advisers from the Joint Food Safety and Standards Group in England, and by the State Veterinary Service in Scotland and Wales. The results are published. Details of MHS enforcement activity are included in the monthly Meat Hygiene Enforcement Report and BSE Enforcement Bulletin. Copies of both are available in the Library of the House.

These all demonstrate the continuing effectiveness of the MHS in driving up hygiene standards and enforcing SRM controls in licensed premises.

Livestock Industry

Sir George Young: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact of the current crisis facing the livestock industry on its medium-term future. [21375]

Mr. Rooker: The beef sector is in long-term structural surplus and this has been exacerbated by consumers' concern over BSE. The majority of UK producers have had negative returns on beef in 1997 and clearly cannot endure these for many years together. There is thus an urgent need for reform of the sector to bring supply more nearly into line with demand and for some restructuring of the sector in the UK and Europe more generally to improve competitiveness. The Government will be pressing for fundamental reform of the Beef Regime in forthcoming negotiations. Although sheep prices have fallen recently, they were firm for much of 1997. We will be seeking to ensure that the sheep sector is taken into consideration in negotiations on reform in related areas.

Specified Risk Material

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to harmonise the situation between Northern Ireland and the rest of the United Kingdom, relating to the costs incurred by farmers disposing of SRM; and if he will make a statement. [22442]

Mr. Rooker: The cost of disposal of Specified Risk Material (SRM), other than that arising under the Over Thirty Months Scheme, which is the responsibility of the Intervention Board Executive Agency, whether in Northern Ireland or the rest of the United Kingdom, is a commercial matter between the abattoir and those who collect this material. Similarly, any recovery of those costs from its farmer suppliers is a commercial matter for abattoirs in the light of their own individual circumstances. I have no plans to intervene.

SCOTLAND

Police Officers

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the number of police officers in Scotland for each year since 1978–79. [22420]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 12 January 1998]: The information is set out in the table and has been taken from strength returns supplied by forces since 1978–79.

	Number of police officers
1978–79	12,675
1979–80	13,294
1980–81	13,252

1994–95	14,323
1995–96	14,512
1996–97	14,789

Crime Clear-up Rates

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since 1978–79 the clear-up rates for crime in Scotland relative to levels of recorded crime. [22397]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 12 January 1998]: Information on the number of crimes recorded and the clear-up rate in each calendar year since 1978 is provided in the table.

Year	Total crimes recorded	Clear-up rate (per cent.)
1978	334,957	30
1979	346,680	30
1980	364,587	33
1981	408,204	31

1994	500,110	34
1995	475,697	35
1996	451,956	37

Sheltered Housing

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since 1978–79 the number of sheltered houses provided by public agencies in Scotland. [22398]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 12 January 1998]: The available information, as supplied by local authorities, is as follows:

Sheltered housing stock of public agencies in Scotland 1979 to 1997

	Number
1979	5,768
1980	6,567
1981	7,338
1982	8,651
1983	9,877
1984	10,951
1985	12,318
1986	14,220
1987	14,968
1988	16,318
1989	17,000
1990	18,463
1991	19,533
1992	19,983
1993	19,873
1994	20,053

Sheltered housing stock of public agencies in Scotland 1979 to 1997

	Number
1995	19,856
1996	19,579
1997	20,089

Information is as at end March each year. The figures refer to the housing stock owned by local authorities or Scottish Homes in 1997, and in previous years also include dwellings owned by the former New Town Development Corporations and the Scottish Special Housing Association.

Business Rates

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since 1978–79 the amount of business rates levied in Scotland in (a) cash terms and (b) current prices. [22402]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 12 January 1998]: The available data are:

Net income from business rates

£ million

Year	Cash terms	Current (1996–97) prices[1]
1978–79	386	1,187
1979–80	458	1,207
1980–81	621	1,383
1981–82	835	1,696
1982–83	929	1,761
1983–84	933	1,690

1995–96	1,258	1,293
1996–97	1,279	1,279

[1] Calculated using the Adjusted GDP deflator at market prices—Source HM Treasury. Base Year is 1996–97.
[2] Non-domestic (Business) rates were not separately identifiable until the introduction of the Community Charge in 1989–90—prior to this domestic and non-domestic rates were collected together. Data for 1978–79 to 1988–89 have been estimated and are therefore not directly comparable with later years.
The figures from 1995–96 onwards are subject to revision. The 1996–97 figure is provisional.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Mailshots (Schools)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the (a) dates and (b) numbers of pages of letters, information and booklets sent in his name to schools and chairmen of schools since 2 May; if he will place copies in the Library; and if he will estimate the costs of sending the materials to schools by (i) first and (ii) second class post. [22575]

Mr. Byers: The table gives the details of the material sent to schools from 2 May to end December. Copies of consultation papers, booklets and circulars are in the Library.

Information on the estimated costs of sending material to schools by first and second class post respectively is not available in the form requested.

1 Almost all mailings are sent to both heads and chairs of governors separately, unless clearly of interest to only one party and mainly sent by second class post.

(b) Not all schools will have received all mailings, only those relevant to a school of a given type e.g. all secondary schools, or all voluntary aided schools.

Student Fees

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of state for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his policy concerning universities charging students for (a) laboratory fees, (b) library fees, (c) photocopying fees and (d) IT and internet fees. [22368]

Dr. Howells: Under the present funding arrangements, it is for universities to decide what fees to charge students. We have, however, made it clear that top-up fees play no part in our plans for the future funding of higher education. In deciding whether or not to exercise the power to control fees charged by universities under the provisions of the Teaching and Higher Education Bill, my right hon. Friend would consider the circumstances relating to particular types of fee. In particular, he would have regard first to the amount charged and secondly to whether such fees related to an optional service for which students could choose to pay or to essential elements of their courses for which they would be obliged to pay in order to undertake and complete those courses. Small charges for services such as photocopying are entirely a matter for universities.

Departmental Budget

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what will be the total level of his Department's budget, in 1995–96 prices, in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99; if he will estimate what such figures for (i) 1997–98 and (ii) 1998–99 would be on the basis of the estimates of the GDP deflator contained in the November 1996 Budget; and if he will make a statement. [21954]

Dr. Howells: I refer the hon. Member to the reply from my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury to my hon. Friend the Member for East Ham (Mr. Timms) on 10 December 1997, Official Report, columns 568-72.

In 1995–96 prices the figures quoted in that reply for the DfEE are £13.3 billion for 1997–98 and £12.3 billion for 1998–99. On the basis of the November 1996 GDP deflators, the figures in 1995–96 prices would be £13.5 billion for 1997–98 and £12.5 billion for 1998–99. As my right hon. Friend noted, the apparent reduction for the DfEE between 1997–98 and 1998–99 principally consists of transfers to other Departments, notably the return to local government finance, following the abolition of the nursery vouchers scheme, of resources for under 5-year-olds to support local education authorities' early years development plans. As my right hon. Friend also noted, the figures for the DfEE do not include the £1 billion provided for schools in 1998–99 in the Budget. These funds have been added to support local authorities and appear in the table shown in column 569, under "DETR–local government". Nor do the figures include the expenditure supported by the windfall tax on the New Deals for the young and for the long term unemployed, and the New Deal for Schools, all of which is outside the control total shown in the table at column 569.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Peace Process

7. Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she last met Irish Government Ministers to discuss the peace process in Northern Ireland. [20857]

Marjorie Mowlam: I meet Irish Government Ministers regularly in the talks process and on other occasions—including Monday night. As my hon. Friend may have seen, the Irish Foreign Minister and I also met earlier this week and were able to make an announcement of some significance to the negotiations.

12. Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made towards a political settlement in Northern Ireland. [20862]

15. Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on progress in the peace process talks. [20865]

16. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the progress of the Stormont talks. [20827]

17. Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the progress made in the peace process talks in Northern Ireland. [20828]

28. Dr. George Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made towards a political settlement in Northern Ireland. [20874]

Marjorie Mowlam: I refer the hon. Members to the oral answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) today.

Schools (Under-achievement)

8. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action is being taken to address under-achievement in Northern Ireland schools. [20858]

Mr. Worthington: The Raising Schools Standards Initiative is one of a number of measures currently in place. I will be announcing my School Improvement Programme next month, which will set out new measures to address the quality of school leadership, literacy and numeracy, school discipline and targeted support for the weakest schools.

Employment

9. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many new jobs have been created in Northern Ireland with (a) IDB, (b) Local Enterprise Development Unit and (c) International Fund for Ireland support since 1 May. [20859]

Mr. Ingram: Since 1 May the Industrial Development Board has promoted 4,338 new jobs and the Local Enterprise Development Unit over 6,000. These jobs are expected to be created over a two to three year time period.

With regard to the International Fund for Ireland, this is administered by an independent Board appointed by the two Governments. I have asked the chairman of the fund, William McCarter, to respond to the hon. Gentleman's request for details of jobs created since 1 May.

Paramilitary Organisations (Weapons)

10. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many weapons were handed in by paramilitary organisations in 1997. [20860]

Mr. Ingram: While no paramilitary organisation voluntarily decommissioned weapons during 1997 the Government's position remains that we would like to see the decommissioning of some paramilitary arms during negotiations as progress is made in the political talks. This would be a major contribution to confidence building.

Parades

11. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to encourage agreements over disputed parades in Northern Ireland. [20861]

Mr. Ingram: As my hon. Friend will know, the Public Processions (Northern Ireland) Bill received its Second Reading in the House on 18 December and will shortly be going into Committee. The Bill is designed to tackle the difficulties that have surrounded the parades issue in recent years by encouraging local agreement, and by giving the Parades Commission the power to make determinations where local accommodation has not proved possible. Under Clause two of the Bill, the Parades Commission will also be able both to mediate directly on disputed parades and to promote mediation on parades.

Economic Development

13. Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made towards creating an economic development strategy in Northern Ireland. [20863]

23. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made towards creating an economic development strategy in Northern Ireland. [20869]

Mr. Ingram: We are already pursuing a clear economic development strategy in Northern Ireland. As in the rest of the United Kingdom, we aim to encourage investment and raise employability. We have a range of measures in place to improve skills, tackle unemployment and boost the international competitiveness of Northern Ireland firms. But what the economy needs most is lasting peace and stability.

Retail Developments (Planning Decisions)

14. Mr Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average time taken for planning decisions for major retail developments in Northern Ireland to be made. [20864]

Mr. Paul Murphy: For major retail applications decided since 1995, the average length of time taken to reach a decision was 485 days.

National Health Service

18. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the future of the NHS in Northern Ireland. [20829]

Mr. Worthington: My Department recently published "Well in 2000—A Positive Agenda for Health and Well-being", which sets out the Government's vision and strategy for health and social services in the next millennium. A major consultation paper on new arrangements to replace the internal market for health and social services in Northern Ireland will be published shortly. The paper will set out broad policy aims and objectives which parallel those in the White Paper "The New NHS, Modern, Dependable" and will seek views on how the policy should be taken forward in Northern Ireland.

Nursery Education

19. Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to expand nursery education in Northern Ireland. [20830]

29. Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to expand nursery education in Northern Ireland. [20875]

Mr. Worthington: As the first stage of an expansion programme, £1.9 million is being provided in 1998–99 to create 1,700 full-year pre-school education places—an increase of 15 per cent. on existing grant-aided pre-school provision. The additional places will be secured in the statutory, voluntary and private sectors, and will be targeted initially on children from socially disadvantaged circumstances and the oldest four-year-olds. The expansion will be planned at local level by Pre-School Education Advisory Groups, established by the five Education and Library Boards which are responsible for securing the implementation of the initiative. A paper setting out proposals for the expansion programme was issued for consultation purposes on 17 December, and a copy has been placed in the Library.

Policing

20. Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to increase confidence in policing in Northern Ireland. [20866]

Mr. Ingram: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Aberdeen, North (Mr. Savidge) today.

Inward Investment

21. Mr. Ilsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provision is made by the Industrial Development Board to monitor inward investment projects in Northern Ireland to ensure that the aims of grant aid are met. [20867]

Mr. Ingram: The implementation of all inward investment projects is monitored against key business plan targets including sales forecasts, production plan implementation, financial performance and adequacy funding. The main objectives of this monitoring process are to ensure public funds are utilised for proper purposes, that companies comply with conditions of financial assistance and that any problems are identified as early as possible so that corrective action can be taken.

IRA Activity

22. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of intelligence reports relating to the current military preparedness of the IRA to resume violence. [20868]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer I gave to the hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan) today.

Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights

24. Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what response the Government are making to the Employment Equality Review by the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights. [20870]

Mr. Worthington: The Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights has provided a major report on employment equality which includes over 160 recommendations. The Government's consideration of the recommendations is well advanced and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has already indicated certain recommendations on which the Government propose to take action—clarification of the law on direct recruitment of the long-term unemployed and firmer powers against persistent discriminators. The Government will give a response to the full range of SACHR's proposals in a paper to be published in the early part of this year, and those recommendations which are accepted by the Government will be implemented as appropriate.

Roads

25. Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums she intends to spend on major new roads in each of the next three years. [20871]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Our intention is to spend approximately £9 million, £7 million and £7 million in 1998–99, 1999–2000 and 2000–01 respectively on major new road projects.

Fishing Industry (Portavogie)

26. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals she has to develop the fishing industry at Portavogie. [20872]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Government are committed to assisting continued investment in the fishing industry at Portavogie. Over the next two years the Northern Ireland Fishing Harbour Authority in its draft Development Plan proposes to spend £835,000 covering such projects as a new automatic ice plant and ice-making machinery and slipway repairs. Further investment in the modernisation of the fishing fleet is anticipated in the order of £215,000 under the EU Vessel Modernisation Scheme.

Private Finance Initiative

27. Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the use of the Private Finance Initiative in Northern Ireland. [20873]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Private Finance Initiative (PFI) is gathering momentum in Northern Ireland. NI Departments and the Northern Ireland Office are committed to maximising Private Finance, and projects with a total capital value in excess of £350 million are currently being considered for PFI solutions.

Women in Public Life

30. Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what efforts she is making to encourage the involvement of women in public life in Northern Ireland. [20876]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I would like to assure my hon. Friend that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and her Ministers take every appropriate opportunity presented to them to promote and encourage the involvement of women in public life in Northern Ireland. We do so both publicly, including in this House and at Political Forums in Northern Ireland, and privately at suitable occasions during Northern Ireland engagements.

Electoral Registration Figures

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the latest estimates by the Registrars General of Populations of those aged 17 years and over, plus 63 per cent. of those aged 16 years, for each district council area and parliamentary constituency in Northern Ireland, together with the equivalent electoral registration figures also expressed as a percentage of these population figures and in ascending order. [22294]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Mid-year estimates of the population of Northern Ireland broken down by age are available for Health Board areas only. Consequently the population counts for district council areas and parliamentary constituencies are taken from the 1991 Census of Population. For district council areas, the most comparable figures for electoral registration relate to September 1991.

Northern Ireland parliamentary constituency boundaries were redrawn in 1996. The table details the population aged 17 and over plus 63 per cent. of the 16-year-old population at the time of the 1991 Census of Population in each of the current parliamentary constituencies, together with the most up-to-date information on their respective electorates. Information on the number of registered voters in each constituency prior to 1996 is not available. Because the two sets of data relate to different time points, it is not appropriate to determine the ratio of the number of registered voters to the population count.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Heating Cost Payments

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which groups currently receive cold weather payments; which groups will receive the additional payments towards heating costs; what is the level of these payments for each group; and if she will make a statement. [20623]

Mr. Denham: People awarded Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance who have a pensioner or disability premium or have a child under five are eligible for Cold Weather Payments. A payment of £8.50 is made when the average temperature at a specified weather station has been recorded as, or is forecast to be, zero degrees Celsius or below over 7 consecutive days.

The Government made a commitment to review the central areas of insecurity for older people and examine ways to deliver more automatic help to the poorest pensioners. Work is underway in both areas, but we are not prepared to allow another winter to go by when pensioners are fearful of turning up their heating because they do not know whether they will get the help they need with their fuel bills. We are also committed to tackling the wider problems associated with vulnerable people, especially the elderly, keeping warm during cold weather. We have already taken action to cut fuel costs and make homes easier to heat. So far we have: reduced VAT on domestic fuel from eight to five per cent.; reduced the gas levy to zero; extended energy efficiency grants and announced a reduction on VAT on energy saving installation schemes; announced the setting up of an Environmental Task Force which is expected to include a programme of energy efficiency improvements in the homes of the elderly; and, released almost £800 million to local authorities over the next two years to help meet pressing housing needs, which is expected to feature improved energy efficiency in many areas.

The additional help of £400 million over this winter and next, announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 25 November 1997, Official Report, columns 773–98, demonstrates the Government's commitment to help the elderly keep warm in their homes. Further details were announced on 5 January.

People receiving Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, during the week commencing 5 January, where their benefit includes one of the pensioner premiums, will receive a Winter Fuel payment of £50. These payments should be made by the end of January.

People over State pension age (65 for men/60 for women) receiving one of the qualifying benefits during the week commencing 5 January will also receive a payment. The qualifying benefits are as follows: Attendance Allowance: Constant Attendance Allowance; Disability Living Allowance; Graduated Retirement Benefit; Incapacity Benefit; Industrial Death Benefit; Invalid Care Allowance; Retirement Pension; Severe Disablement Allowance; Unemployability Supplement; War Disablement Pension; Widow's Benefit or War Widow's Pension. These people will receive a payment of £20 or £10. Where there is only one eligible person in a household, or the eligible person is of no fixed abode, they will receive £20, otherwise each person will receive £10. It is estimated that over 3 million payments will be issued for £20 and almost 5 million for £10.

Overall, almost 10 million payments will be made to over 7 million pensioner households.

Regulations were laid on 8 January and will come into force on 16 January. Payments will be made automatically without the need to claim. They are in addition to any Cold Weather Payments which may also be due to those receiving Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance if there is a spell of very cold weather.

A publicity campaign is also being launched involving media advertising, posters and leaflets in conjunction with Help The Aged, Age Concern and the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux so that pensioners are aware of what payments they will be receiving, how and when. This information will enable pensioners to heat their homes in confident in the knowledge that they will get extra help with their heaviest fuel bill.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals received less in benefit under incapacity benefit than they would have done under invalidity benefit in each year since 1995–96. [21575]

Mr. Denham: It is not possible to estimate with any accuracy how many individuals received less in benefit under Incapacity Benefit than they would have done under Invalidity Benefit.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of invalidity benefit there are in the Seaham and Peterlee Benefits Agency area. [21589]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Incapacity Benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. John Cummings, dated 13 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many recipients of Invalidity Benefit (IVB) there are in the Seaham and Peterlee Benefits Agency area.

The information is not available in the format requested. IVB was replaced by Incapacity Benefit (IB) on 13 April 1995.

The figures shown in the table below are for IB short term higher and IB long term, that is, cases from the 29th week of incapacity.

Peterlee Benefit Agency Office: 7,400

Seaham Benefit Agency Office: 2,760

Figures are provisional and subject to change.

The figures quoted are as at 31 May 1997, and are taken from a 5% sample of the IB computer system and exclude a small number of clerically processed cases.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her estimate of the total amounts received by persons resident in Wales for the latest available year in respect of (a) disability living allowance, (b) incapacity benefit and (c) industrial injuries disablement benefit; and what these are as a percentage of the total UK amounts in each case. [21615]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

[2] Figures are estimated out-turn published in the Social Security Departmental Report 1997–98 to 1999–2000.

[3] Figures for Northern Ireland are from Social Security's Annual Report and Accounts 1996–97.

[4] Figures relate to 1996–97.

[5] Figures relate to 1995–96.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many benefit claims have been reviewed under the remit of the Benefits Integrity Unit since its formation; and how many claims have been (a) reduced, (b) left unaltered and (c) up-rated. [21509]

Mr. Denham: One of our key aims is to rebuild integrity in, and public support for, the Social Security system and the way in which public money is spent. We need to focus on those who are properly entitled to benefit. This is why we have set up the Benefit Integrity Project.

The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Dr. Phyllis Starkey, dated 13 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question regarding the number of benefit claims that have been reviewed under the remit of the Benefits Integrity Unit since its formation, and the number of claims that have been reduced, left unaltered and uprated.

As at 30 November 1997, the Benefit Integrity Project has looked at 27,511 DLA awards. Of the awards that were looked at again 2339 were reduced, 1152 were disallowed entirely, 23,363 left unaltered and 657 increased. In addition staff working on the Benefit Integrity Project have dealt with 5979 renewal claims of which 1080 have been disallowed, 1541 renewed at a lower rate, 3174 renewed at the same rate and 184 renewed at a higher rate.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims have so far been assessed under the Disability Benefits Integrity Review; and how many claims have been (a) set aside, (b) reduced and (c) increased (i) in total and (ii) by region. [22053]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Social Security benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 13 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to respond to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many claims has so far been assessed under the Disability Benefits Integrity Review; and how many claims have been (a) set aside, (b) reduced and (c) increased (i) in total and (ii) by region.

As at 30 November 1997, the Benefit Integrity Project (BIP) has looked at 27,511 DLA awards. Of these awards 2339 were reduced and 1152 were disallowed entirely, a total of 3491. 657 awards have been increased. The balance, 23,363 remained unchanged. In addition, staff working on the BIP have dealt with 5979 renewal claims of which 1080 have been disallowed, 1541 renewed at a lower rate, 3174 renewed at the same rate and 184 renewed at a higher rate. Information about the regional distribution of awards is not available.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases have been reviewed to date as part of the Disability Living Allowance Integrity Project by (a) personal interview and (b) written assessment. [21101]

Mr. Denham: The administration of the Benefit Integrity Project is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with further details.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mrs. Angela Browning, dated 13 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning how many cases have been reviewed to date as part of Disability Living Allowance Integrity Project by personal interview and written assessment.

As at 30 November 1997, the number of cases on which action taken by the Benefit Integrity Project had been completed following a personal interview was 5348 and following a postal enquiry was 22,163, a total of 27,511. Of these, the number of awards changed following a visit was 571 and the number changed following a postal enquiry was 3577, a total of 4148. In addition staff working on the Benefit Integrity Project have dealt with 5979 renewal claims of which 1080 have been disallowed, 1541 renewed at a lower rate, 3174 renewed at the same rate and 184 renewed at a higher rate.

Industrial Disablement Benefit

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much was recouped from accident victims' compensation in respect of industrial disablement benefit in each of the last three years. [16396]

Mr. Denham [pursuant to his reply, 26 November 1997, c. 665–66]: I am writing to advise that Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, is writing again to clarify his reply of 26 November 1997.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Andrew Dismore, dated 13 January 1998:

You recently asked the Secretary of State for Social Security how much was recouped from accident victims' compensation in respect of Industrial Disablement benefit in each of the last three years. I am writing to clarify the information provided in my letter of 26 November 1997.

I regret that the figure I quoted for 1996/97 was incorrect. The figure should have been £19.1m. This figure is provisional and subject to change.

I apologise for any inconvenience this may have caused you.

Benefit Claimants (Spelthorne)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are claiming (a) disability benefit and (b) lone parent benefit in Spelthorne. [22202]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Disability Benefits and Lone Parents Benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Wilshire, dated 13 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many people are claiming (a) disability benefit and (b) lone parent benefit in Spelthorne.

Information is not available for all relevant benefits in the format requested.

The number of people in receipt of Attendance Allowance (AA), Disability Living Allowance (DLA), Incapacity Benefit (IB) and Severe Disablement Benefit (SDA) is set out below—

AA: 1,300

DLA: 1,900

IB: 1,900

SDA: 600

The figures are based on a 5% extract of the caseload at the end of August 1997 rounded to the nearest hundred.

The information for Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit (IIDB) is not available in the format requested. The nearest breakdown is for the South East. The number in receipt of IIDB for that area is 3,000. This figure is based on a 10 per cent. extract of the caseload at the end of March 1996 rounded to the nearest hundred.

The information for lone parent benefits could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

WALES

Referendum

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what checks were made to ensure that all counting areas involved in the Welsh referendum were following the same procedure in relation to new guidance provided following representations from Denbighshire on the night of 18 September; and if he will make a statement. [23133]

Mr. Ron Davies: Decisions as to what regard should be had to the advice given by the Chief Counting Officer on the night of 18 September were for individual Counting Officers to take at their discretion; it would not have been appropriate for my officials to make inquiries on that matter during the course of the various counts.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice he sought, and from whom, following representations received relating to the conduct of the count of the Welsh referendum. [23157]

Mr. Ron Davies: I became aware of concerns in my constituency capacity in respect of the count in Caerphilly County Borough. I asked the Counting Officer to consider these and advise me of the outcome. He replied on 29 September. A copy of his letter has been placed in the Library of the House. I have received no other representations on this matter.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with Labour Party officials in his official capacity concerning the Welsh devolution referendum count in Caerphilly; on what dates these discussions took place; and if he will make a statement on the content of these discussions. [23166]

Mr. Ron Davies: None.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales who gave the instructions for guidance to counting officers to be changed during the counting of the Welsh referendum votes; when this instruction was given; and what action was taken to ensure that the new guidance was followed. [23159]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Chief Counting Officer decided to issue supplementary advice in response to the representations received from Denbighshire Counting Officer; this decision was made at approximately 11 pm on the night of 18 September. The advice was telephoned to Counting Officers. It was for them to decide what regard should be had to it, and it would not have been appropriate for officials to make further inquiries during the course of the counts as to how Counting Officers were exercising their discretion.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he was first notified of allegations of irregularities in the count of the Welsh devolution referendum count at Caerphilly. [23171]

Mr. Ron Davies: I received verbal representations in my constituency capacity shortly after the referendum on 18 September.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what input into guidance to counting officers in the Welsh referendum (a) he and (b) his officials provided. [23267]

Mr. Ron Davies: I made no input. My officials prepared draft guidance for the Chief Counting Officer to issue, drawing on guidance issued by the Home Office for the 1997 General Election.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what (a) correspondence an (b) discussions his special adviser has had relating to the Welsh devolution referendum count at Caerphilly. [23135]

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what (a) correspondence and (b) discussions his special adviser has had relating to the Welsh devolution referendum count at Caerphilly. [23169]

Mr. Ron Davies: Neither of my advisers either corresponded about, or discussed, the count before Tuesday 6 January.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales at what hour the chief counting officer gave new guidance to counting officers in relation to the counting of votes during the Welsh referendum count. [23151]

Mr. Ron Davies: At approximately 11pm.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Clwyd, West (Mr. Thomas) of 12 January 1997, Official Report, columns 39–41, by what means he became aware of complaints made by Caerphilly County Borough Council relating to aspects of the Welsh referendum count; and which representatives of his Department attended meetings at which such irregularities were discussed. [23168]

Mr. Ron Davies: I am not aware of any complaints made by Caerphilly County Borough Council.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his discussions with the chief counting officer during the counting of the referendum votes in Wales. [23156]

Mr. Ron Davies: I had no discussions with the Chief Counting Officer during the counting of the referendum votes in Wales.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance his Department gave to returning officers relating to the Welsh devolution referendum counts in Wales; and if he will publish this guidance. [23163]

Mr. Ron Davies: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Clwyd, West (Mr. Thomas) on 12 January 1997, Official Report, columns 39–41, and to the supplementary letter I sent the hon. Member on the same day. Copies of that letter, and of the guidance issued to Counting Officers, are in the Libraries.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with his Department's officials since the result of the referendum was made known relating to the Welsh devolution referendum count at Caerphilly; and what was the date of such discussions. [23155]

Mr. Ron Davies: I had no discussions with officials on this matter before 6 January, the date of publication of articles in The Scotsman newspaper referring to the count at Caerphilly. In light of that publication, I sought information from officials as to whether they had received any complaints or correspondence relating to that count, and I informed them of action I had taken in my constituency capacity on the matter.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with his officials relating to irregularities during referendum counts in Wales. [23161]

Mr. Ron Davies: Following publication of press articles in The Scotsman and the Western Mail, I have discussed with my officials the various allegations made, and the terms of my answer to the hon. Member for Clwyd, West (Mr. Thomas), on 12 January 1997, Official Report, columns 39–41.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he made relating to the count of the votes at Caerphilly to the Chief Counting Officer for Wales (a) prior to and (b) after 1 January. [23152]

Mr. Ron Davies: (a) None. (b) None.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions (a) he and (b) his officials have had with the Chief Executive of Caerphilly County Council since 1 January; and if he will make a statement. [23158]

Mr. Ron Davies: (a) In my constituency capacity, I telephoned the Chief Executive on 6 January, following publication in The Scotsman of articles about the Caerphilly count. The purpose of my inquiry was to seek information about any outstanding complaints or concerns relating to the count. I was informed that there were no such complaints or concerns outstanding, all matters having been answered to the complainants' satisfaction in a letter from the Chief Executive dated 28 October 1997.

(b) None.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the training and guidance advice given to counting officers conducting counts during the Welsh referendum. [23162]

Mr. Ron Davies: I have made no such assessment, but I consider the counting procedures to have complied fully with the Parliamentary Election Rules which Parliament stipulated should apply to the referendum.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the representations he has received relating to errors that were made during the Welsh referendum count. [23153]

Mr. Ron Davies: As at 12 January, I had received no representations and I am unaware of any errors that may have been made.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the correspondence between the Welsh Office and other bodies relating to the Welsh devolution referendum count at Caerphilly; and if he will make public this correspondence. [23160]

Mr. Ron Davies: There has been no such correspondence.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what representations he has received in relation to the count of the votes in the Welsh referendum in Caerphilly; [23129]

(2) what reports he has received in relation to the counting of votes in the Welsh referendum in Caerphilly. [23173]

Mr. Ron Davies: I received verbal representations in my constituency capacity shortly after the referendum on 18 September. I requested the Chief Executive to consider them, and he wrote to me again in my constituency capacity, on 29 September. That letter is the only report I have received. A copy of it, and of my reply of 20 October, are in the Libraries.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales for how long his Department proposes to retain the ballot papers relating to the Welsh referendum; and for what purpose. [23154]

Mr. Ron Davies: The papers will be retained for one year from 18 September 1997. It is considered appropriate to follow the practice adopted in respect of ballot papers at parliamentary elections.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had in his official capacity with outside bodies relating to the Welsh referendum count at Caerphilly; and if he will make a statement. [23165]

Mr. Ron Davies: None.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice his officials issued relating to the counting of spoilt ballot papers during the Welsh devolution referendum count. [23270]

Mr. Ron Davies: Following the Chief Counting Officer's decision, in response to a request from the Denbighshire Counting Officer, to issue further advice on the treatment of ballot papers with the word "No" written opposite the "I do not agree" box, officials telephoned other Counting Officers to inform them that this advice had been given. The officials were acting in support of the Chief Counting Officer, and not on my behalf or with my knowledge.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what verbal advice was given during the Welsh devolution referendum count to returning officers seeking clarification on the counting of spoilt ballot papers. [23150]

Mr. Ron Davies: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Clwyd, West (Mr. Thomas) on 12 January 1997, Official Report, columns 39–41.

Ministerial Travel (Trains)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [22932]

Mr. Ron Davies: Today.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all overseas visits made since 1 May 1997 on which he or any other Minister in his Department has been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code, indicating (a) who accompanied him or her (b) the cost to public funds of each such visit. [23248]

Mr. Ron Davies: No overseas visits have been made since 1 May 1997 by myself or either Minister in my Department on which I or they have been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code.

National Health Service

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish the White Paper on the future of the NHS in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [23782]

Mr. Ron Davies: Our White Paper on the future of the NHS in Wales, "Putting Patients First", is published today. The White Paper has been laid before Parliament and copies are also available in the Library of the House and in the Vote Office.

"Putting Patients First" fulfils the undertakings we made before coming into office. It abolishes the divisive internal market in the NHS and charts a course for NHS Wales which will restore it as a truly national service of quality, responsive to the needs of its patients.

Our objectives are clear. An NHS which is people centred; an NHS which is delivering quality services in a seamless and collaborative way; an NHS which makes full use of new technologies and makes best practice common practice. "Putting Patients First" provides the framework within which these objectives will be pursued. Fragmentation, inequality and bureaucracy will be replaced by integrated services, collaboration and improved efficiency, saving £50 million over the lifetime of this Parliament for reinvesting in patient care.

Health Authorities and NHS trusts will be retained with new duties and responsibilities for improving health and for working co-operatively with others. We will honour our commitment to reinforce the place of primary care through the creation of Local Health Groups. These will allow professionals to take the lead, in co-operation with others, in planning and providing services locally for the benefit of their patients. They will have budgets and new freedoms to use the available resources in the best interests of their patients. Through these Groups, all primary care professionals, social services departments and others will be able to address the needs of their patients, without the divisions and inequalities of the GP fundholding scheme.

"Putting Patients First" sets out our vision for the NHS in Wales with measures suited to Welsh needs. It lays the foundations for the work of the National Assembly and gives NHS Wales a clear framework within which to address the health of our people and improve the health services they are due.

Government Residential Property

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how his Department has performed against last year's targets for reducing empty government residential property; and what new targets have been set for 1997–98. [23783]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I am pleased to announce that my Department was successful in meeting the target set for disposal of empty government homes in 1996–97.

We are continuing to set challenging targets for disposal or bringing back into use those properties which become empty and hope to be able to maintain our success over the coming year.

Details of achievements against targets for 1996–97 and new targets for 1997–98 are set out as follows:

Empty Government residential property
Welsh Office achievements 1996–97

Total stock 1 April 1996	Empty stock 1 April 1996	1996–97 target for disposal or bringing back into use	Achievement against target

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Investment Decisions

Mr. Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners what account he takes of scripture in making investment decisions. [22940]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The Commissioners' ethical investment policy is exercised in the context of their duty to manage their inherited assets to provide financial support for the clergy of the Church of England, especially in areas of need and opportunity.

Reconciling their legal duty to achieve the best return for their beneficiaries with their Christian heritage and with the views of Church people is central to the Commissioners' mission.

The Ethical Investment Working Group set up in October 1994 as a joint venture between the Commissioners and the other central Church investing bodies keeps their ethical investment policy under constant review.

PRIME MINISTER

Paymaster General (Letter)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister when he and the law officers approved the threat of legal action in a letter on behalf of the Paymaster General to newspapers. [22586]

The Prime Minister: The main purpose of the letters sent to the Sunday Times and The Observer on 8 December on behalf of the Paymaster General was to set the facts straight following the publication the previous day of inaccurate and misleading reports. Neither I nor the Law Officers approved these letters before they were sent. However, the Law Officers were consulted subsequently on the issues relating to possible future legal proceedings.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Trans-European Transport Network

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which United Kingdom ports on the East Coast have been excluded from the list for the Trans-European Transport Network proposed by the EU Commission; and if he will obtain from the Commission its reasons for excluding any of the United Kingdom ports on the East Coast. [22733]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I understand that the EU Commission's proposal includes all ports with a total annual freight turnover of 1 million tonnes or 200,000 international passengers or which provide connections between land links of the Trans-European Network (TEN).

The following English east coast ports are included under the new criteria:

Folkestone
Dover
Ramsgate
Medway
London
Harwich
Ipswich
Felixstowe
Great Yarmouth
King's Lynn
Boston
Grimsby/Immingham
Goole
Hull
Tees and Hartlepool
Sunderland
Tyne.

My officials will be discussing the proposal further with the Commission. If the hon. Member has any particular concerns, we would be pleased to know of them.

Road Accidents (Diabetic Drivers)

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions in respect of how many fatal vehicular accidents in England and Wales during each of the past 10 years there was evidence that the major contributory factor lay with drivers who were insulin-dependent diabetes sufferers. [22802]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We do not have comprehensive figures as information on the medical circumstances of drivers involved in accidents cannot be readily collected. Studies have shown, however, that a significant proportion of collapses at the wheel have been the result of hypoglycaemia, and there have been a number of accidents involving collapses over the years.

Roadside Drainage Pipes

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what video material relating to damage to plastic roadside drainage pipes has been collated by the Department of Transport; and if it is available for public examination. [22759]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Dr. Alan Whitehead, dated 15 January 1998:

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State to reply to your recent question about what video material relating to damage to plastic roadside drainage pipes has been collated by the Department of Transport, and if it is available for public examination.

Video surveys of roadside drainage pipes have been undertaken for the Highways Agency by it's Maintaining Agents on certain sections of the trunk road network to assist with the maintenance of the network drainage. A sample of the surveys has been analysed by the Transport Research Laboratory for the Agency as part of an ongoing research project to investigate the performance of all types of drainage pipes. Statistical information identifying defects for all types of pipes, including plastic pipes, have been produced from these data.

This research information is as yet unpublished but it can be made available on request. To view this information please contact Santi Santhalingam on 0171 921 2215.

Rail Passengers and Freight

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will revise passenger and freight access charges to stimulate greater use of the rail network. [22840]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The setting of access charges is the responsibility of the Rail Regulator. He has recently published a consultation document about the key issues and proposed framework for future access arrangements to assist in determining revised charges which will come into effect on 1 April 2001.

Channel Tunnel

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will seek to negotiate an amendment to the Channel Tunnel Treaty allowing for the annual publication of a comprehensive safety report. [22825]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No. The Channel Tunnel Safety Authority already publishes an Annual Report on its activities, which covers all aspects of Channel Tunnel safety.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library a copy of the report into the evacuation exercise carried out recently in the channel tunnel. [23207]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A report on the binational emergency exercise which took place on 10–11 January in the Channel Tunnel will be incorporated in the Annual Report of the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority for 1997–98. A copy of this Report will be placed in the Library of the House on its publication.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions whether he intends to seek the renegotiation of Clause 33.3 of the channel tunnel treaty which prevents the publication of safety information relating to the tunnel. [23206]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No. Clause 33.3 of the Channel Tunnel Concession Agreement requires the parties to the Agreement, and the Intergovernmental Commission and Safety Authority, to hold in confidence material provided to them. However, Eurotunnel is free to publish the safety information which it produces, and the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority publishes an annual report on its activities, covering all aspects of Channel Tunnel safety. Copies of this report are placed in the Library.

Railtrack

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of Railtrack's performance in fulfilling its statutory obligations with respect to (a) maintenance of the rail infrastructure and (b) upgrading the system; and if he will list the figures for expenditure on both items. [22823]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Railtrack's statutory obligations are reflected in its network licence, which is monitored by the Rail Regulator. Modifications to that licence now require the company to publish detailed information on the level of expenditure for both the maintenance and enhancement of the rail network. Railtrack's next Network Management Statement is to be published in March 1998.

Railtrack's core investment in the first half of 1997–98 had increased by 38 per cent.—to £520 million—compared to the first half of 1996–97. We have made it clear that we expect to see further improvements in investments levels.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will discuss with Railtrack the present and future access charges to the Railtrack system. [22824]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Access charges are a matter for the Rail Regulator. The Regulator has recently invited comments from consultees, including Railtrack, on the issues which might inform his decisions on revised charges, which will come into effect on 1 April 2001.

Ministerial Travel (Trains)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what date (a) he and (b) The Minister for Transport last used a train in the course of their officials duties. [22927]

Mr. Prescott: I last used the train on Monday 12 January and my right hon. Friend the Minister for Transport on Tuesday 6 January.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of heavy goods vehicles that have evaded excise duty in the last 12 months. [21081]

Ms Glenda Jackson: It is estimated that, at any one time, some 13,000 heavy goods vehicles are evading vehicle excise duty. This represents around 3 per cent. of these vehicles.

Road Traffic Reduction Act

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends issuing guidance to local authorities on the implementation of the Road Traffic Reduction Act 1997. [23367]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Draft Guidance to local authorities on implementing the provisions of the Road Traffic Reduction Act is being issued for public consultation today. Comments on the draft guidance are being sought by 20 April 1998. I am arranging for copies of the consultation documents to be placed in the library.

Town and Country Planning

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will announce his policy for the future of town and country planning in England; and if he will make a statement. [23787]

Mr. Caborn: I have today placed copies of my Policy Statement in the Library of the House. This Statement confirms that we shall retain the principles of the town and country planning system established by the post-war Labour Government. For 50 years, these have demonstrated their flexibility and served us well. There are, however, a number of missing dimensions that this Government will put in place to cope with the challenges they now face.

These are:

- the European context for planning in this country;
- clearer statements of national policy for the small number of projects where decentralisation of decision-making is not possible;
- effective arrangements for regional planning so that more issues can be resolved at this level;
- a continuous search for improvements in local efficiency; and
- a willingness to consider economic instruments and other modern tools to help meet the objectives of positive planning.

My Policy Statement on Modernising Planning describes how we will fill these gaps. As part of this package, I am also today placing in the Library and publishing a consultation paper on the future of Regional Planning Guidance in England.

Roads and Rail (East Sussex)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what (a) representations have been received from and (b) meetings have taken place with representatives of East Sussex County Council since 2 May in respect of (i) the proposal to reinstate the Lewes–Uckfield railway line, (ii) the A27 Lewes–Polegate trunk road and (iii) the proposed A27 Polegate bypass. [22944]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Since 2 May 1997, there have been no representations made by East Sussex County Council to the Department, nor meetings held, regarding proposals to reinstate the Lewes–Uckfield railway line.

Representations on the A27 Lewes–Polegate schemes, and the A27 Polegate Bypass scheme, has been received from East Sussex County Council in the form of a documented response to the Roads Review. We are currently considering the comments made by the County Council alongside the many other we have received. East Sussex County Council participated in a Regional Roads Review Seminar, held last October, which covered these schemes. In addition, as part of our consideration of the Accelerated Roads Review, Ministers met local MPs to discuss the proposed Weald and Downland DBFO project. Representatives of East Sussex County Council were part of the delegations accompanying Members at these meetings.

Car-free Cities Project

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will encourage more major authorities in the United Kingdom to participate in the European Union Car-Free Cities project as part of his policy to reduce urban congestion, pollution and environmentally damaging emissions. [23125]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are always interested in effective and innovative approaches to tackling congestion and pollution. Local authorities may well benefit from participating in the Car Free Cities project, or other similar schemes. A number already do, and the Government would certainly encourage others to consider following suit. But such decisions are best taken at the local level, as authorities consider how best to meet their statutory duties under the National Air Quality Strategy and the Road Traffic Reduction Act 1997.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on how many occasions information has been withheld on the grounds of commercial confidentiality from reports placed on the public register on the effects of the release of genetically modified organisms. [22877]

Mr. Meacher: To date, no information contained in reports on the release of genetically modified organisms has been withheld from the public register on grounds of commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which advisory bodies are consulted in advance of a decision to withhold information from the public register of applications for consents to release genetically modified organisms on the grounds of national security. [22882]

Mr. Meacher: We cannot envisage any circumstances where it would be necessary to withhold information from the public register on the grounds of national security.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on how many occasions following consent to release new information has been made available under section 111 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 regarding risks of damage to the environment by the release of genetically modified organisms. [22879]

Mr. Meacher: The relevant section of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 for the provision of new information regarding risks of releases is section 112. To date, no new information has been notified by a consent holder.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on how many occasions information has been withheld from the public register for reasons of prevention to damage to the environment in respect of (a) commercial and (b) other applications for consent to release genetically modified organisms. [22880]

Mr. Meacher: On no occasion has information been withheld from the public register for reasons of prevention of damage to the environment in respect of (a) commercial and (b) other applications to release genetically modified organisms.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many reports on the effects of release have been received in respect of consents to release genetically modified organisms. [22876]

Mr. Meacher: To date, there have been 133 consents granted for the release of genetically modified organisms in Great Britain. Under section 112 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, consent holders are required to notify the Secretary of State of the effects of any release on the environment. For every consent, a report must be submitted at the end of the release and for many consents a period of post-release monitoring is required for which a report must also be submitted. These reports are placed on my Department's public register and in the regional offices of the Environment Agency, and are freely available to the general public on request.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on how many occasions information has been withheld from the public register for reasons of national security in respect of (a) commercial and (b) other applications for consent to release genetically modified organisms. [22883]

Mr. Meacher: On no occasion has information been withheld from the public register for reasons of national security in respect of (a) commercial and, (b) other applications to release genetically modified organisms.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on how many occasions reports on the release of genetically modified organisms have revealed new risks of damage to the environment. [22878]

Mr. Meacher: To date, reports on the release of genetically modified organisms (GMOs) have not revealed any new information regarding risks to human health or the environment.

In addition to these reports, my Department funds a research programme to identify possible new risks of the release of genetically modified organisms to human health and the environment.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list all overseas visits made since 1 May 1997 on which he or any other Minister in his Department has been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code, indicating (a) who accompanied him or her and (b) the cost to public funds of each such visit. [23257]

Mr. Prescott: My wife accompanied me to The Hague on 26 May 1997 when I represented the Government at the Marshall Plan Commemoration. The travel costs to public funds were £649.04 and we stayed at the Ambassador's Residence.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Sport

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the advantages of the award of sports lottery funds to state primary schools in those areas of social and economic deprivation identified by the Sports Council in its priority areas initiative scheme. [21392]

Mr. Banks: We have not made a formal assessment but we are aware that there is potential for good schemes of this kind.

The English Sports Council is, of course, the distributor in England of Lottery funds for good causes on, or connected with, sport. While it has no specific policies pertaining solely to primary schools, I understand that all educational establishments are eligible to apply for support from the Lottery Sports Fund (LSF). Under the School Community Sports Initiative (SCSI), the LSF may provide up to 80 per cent. support where applicants can meet the Community Use criteria. Schemes within the Council's Priority Areas Initiative can apply for up to 90 per cent. award.

Primary Schools will also be eligible to apply for funding from the New Opportunities Fund for out of school hours projects. The target is for at least a quarter of all primary schools to be undertaking such projects by 2001.

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proportion of National Lottery funding for sport has been distributed to (a) areas of social and economic deprivation as defined by the Sports Council in its priority areas initiative and (b) severely deprived areas as defined by the Sports Council in its document Eighty Five Priority Area-designated Wards since November 1994. [21394]

Mr. Banks: I am advised by the English Sports Council that there have been 344 awards (14 per cent.), totalling £253,529,941 (39 per cent.) in the Priority Areas. Information on successful applications by Wards is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proportion of National Lottery funding for sport has been distributed to priority areas as designated by the Rural Development Commission; and how much has been distributed to (a) local public sports clubs with open membership, (b) state secondary schools and colleges, (c) state primary schools, (d) private secondary schools and colleges, (e) private primary schools, (f) Oxford and Cambridge colleges, (g) other universities and colleges, (g) other universities and colleges, (h) local sports clubs with limited public access, (i) other projects and (j) individuals since November 1994. [21395]

Mr. Banks: Information on awards specifically to Rural Development Areas (RDAs) is not available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost. However, the English Sports Council have made a total of 823 awards (33 per cent.) to District Councils containing RDAs totalling £126,679,596 (19 per cent.). The other information requested is as follows:

(a) It is a requirement for every successful Lottery award to have public access. Separate information on sports clubs is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

(b) State secondary schools and colleges: 143 awards totalling £48,260,814.

(c) State primary schools: 8 awards totalling £8,478,080.

(d) Private secondary schools and colleges: 6 awards totalling £2,869,572.

(e) None.

(f) None.

(g) Other universities and colleges: Higher Education: 16 awards totalling £28,981,052. Further Education: 14 awards totalling £9,990,236.

(h) See (a) above.

(i) Other projects:

Capital projects: 2,282 awards totalling £566,882,972.

World Class Events revenue awards: 9 events totalling £4,361,984.

(j) World Class Performance revenue awards: £23,000,000 has been distributed among 1,640 individuals.

Ministerial Travel (Trains)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [22938]

Mr. Chris Smith: I last used a train in the course of official duties on Sunday 30 November to travel to Birmingham for the Competition Climbing World Cup Final at the National Indoor Arena.

Lottery Applications (Basildon)

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many applications have been made to the National Lottery distributing bodies from organisations in the Basildon constituency; how many have been (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful in their applications; and what has been the total value of successful applications in each year. [22626]

Mr. Banks: To date, 15 awards totalling £1,018,513 have been made to organisations in the Basildon constituency. Eighty-four applications have been unsuccessful. A breakdown of successful applications by calendar year is set out in the table.

Information on successful Lottery applicants can be found on the Department's website www.lottery.culture.gov.uk.

Year	Total award amount £	Total number of awards
1995	170,000	4
1996	555,477	5
1997	293,036	6
Grand totals	1,018,513	15

Historic Royal Palaces

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what his plans are for the future management of the historic royal palaces; and if he will make a statement. [23684]

Mr. Chris Smith: The historic royal palaces are currently managed by an Executive Agency of my Department, which has progressively reduced its call on Exchequer support since its establishment in 1989. I have given careful consideration to ways of building on that performance and bringing an end to Exchequer support, while safeguarding the fabric of the Palaces and maintaining the quality of visitors' experience. I have concluded that these benefits will best be realised through establishing the historic royal Palaces as a Non-Departmental Public Body.

I therefore propose to apply for the grant by Her Majesty the Queen of a Charter establishing the new body and to seek Parliamentary approval of an Order under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 to enter into a contract for it to carry out my day to day responsibilities for the management of the historic royal palaces. An application for charitable status will be made to the Charity Commission.

The new body would be established under a Board of Trustees to bring a wider range of expertise to the running of the historic royal palaces. I propose that the Board comprise three members appointed by Her Majesty the Queen and five appointed by me. The Chairman would be appointed by The Queen on my advice.

I can reassure the current staff of the Agency, who have done so much to secure its success, that their terms and conditions of service will be protected on their transfer to the new body. New pension arrangements, broadly comparable to those under the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme, will be put in place. The Chief Executive of the Agency will now take forward discussions with staff representatives on the detailed implications of the proposed arrangements.

Exchequer funding is set to reduce to some £4 million in 1998–99, but I expect the new body to continue the Agency's success in increasing income and that its new status will give greater financial flexibility and open up fresh sources of income, so that the need for Exchequer funds can be brought rapidly to an end.

I should emphasise that the new arrangements would apply only to the historic royal palaces, which are currently managed by the Agency, and do not affect the palaces which remain in use and are managed on my behalf by the Royal Household. The changes would not alter the ownership of the historic royal palaces or my responsibility for their management. I shall remain answerable to Parliament for their care and presentation.

The new body would operate on the basis of an annual plan and agreed performance targets. The National Audit Office would continue to have full rights of access, both to carry out the annual audit of the accounts and to undertake value for money studies. Annual Reports and Accounts will be presented to Parliament and the Chief Executive will be liable to be summoned to appear before the Committee of Public Accounts and other Select Committees of this House.

Subject to the approvals to which I have referred, the new body would be established to take over the management of the historic royal palaces from 1 April this year.

The Historic Royal Palaces agency has been a highly successful Executive Agency. It has achieved major improvements in the conservation and presentation of the palaces, while reducing the call on taxpayers' support. I want to build on that success, bringing in new skills and resources to enhance the palaces and their attractions still further for millions of future visitors.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Ministerial Travel (Trains)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development on what date she last used a train in the course of her official duties. [22937]

Clare Short: I last used a train in the course of my official duties on 17 December 1997.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list all overseas visits made since 1 May 1997 on which she or any other Minister in her Department has been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code, indicating (a) who accompanied him or her and (b) the cost to public funds of each such visit. [23255]

Clare Short: Neither I nor the Under-Secretary have been accompanied on overseas visits under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list all overseas visits made since 1 May 1997 on which he has been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code, indicating (a) who accompanied him (b) the cost to public funds of each such visit. [23262]

The Attorney-General: I was accompanied on my visit to Dublin on 17–18 September 1997 by my wife and an official. The total cost to public funds was £1,212.50.

Ministerial Travel (Trains)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Attorney-General on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [22930]

The Attorney-General: I travelled to Cardiff by train on 12 December 1997 to visit the Crown Prosecution Service office there.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Low Pay Commission

Mr. Baldry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what evidence the Government have submitted to the Low Pay Commission; and if it will make such evidence public. [23045]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government will be submitting written evidence to the Low Pay Commission shortly. The evidence will be placed in the Library of the House.

Launch Aid

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the projects on which launch aid had been granted before, and on which payment was outstanding on, 1 May 1997, the total sum granted in each case and the payments (i) received in (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97 and (ii) projected for 1997–98. [22980]

Mr. Battle: The following table details all the projects on which launch aid was outstanding at 1 May 1997 (all figures in £ million), together with amounts received by the Government in the form of levy payments for years 1995–96 and 1996–97. Forecast receipts are not disclosed in advance of the end of the financial year for reasons of commercial confidentiality; such information may be market sensitive in cases where the Companies concerned have not published their financial results for the relevant period.

£ million

Project	Total sum granted	Payments received
		1995–96	1996–97
A320 Family of Aircraft	249.3	29.3	42.7
A330/340 Aircraft	447.1	Nil	Nil
RB211-535 Aeroengine	261.8	13.5	15.2
RB211-524 Aeroengine	177.6	1.5	2.4
V2500 Aeroengine	60.0	2.0	3.7
EH101 Helicopter	60.0	Nil	Nil
Lear 45 Executive Jet	17.7	Nil	Nil

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the projects which have been granted launch aid since 1 May 1997, the sum granted and the number of jobs secured. [22981]

Mr. Battle: On the 12 November 1997, the Government announced a long term investment of up to £200 million in Rolls-Royce plc's large engine programme. The investment is expected to secure 16,000 jobs in the Company and its UK suppliers.

No other projects have been granted Launch Aid since 1 May 1997.

Enemy Property

Mr. McNulty: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to publish the report on British policy towards enemy property during and after the Second World War; and what action she will take.[23908]

Mrs. Beckett: My hon. Friend the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs announced on 31 July 1997, Official Report, column 641 that the Government had commissioned a research project, to examine papers relevant to the Trading with the Enemy legislation under which the property of residents of enemy countries was confiscated during the Second World War. The project which has been co-ordinated by the FCO in close partnership with the DTI is nearing completion. The Government are considering the project's findings and will publish their response together with the report soon.

The Government, however, recognise that some of the information currently held at the Public Record Office will be of particular interest to Holocaust survivors or their families who may wish to check their family history. The Government therefore intend to publish a list of the names and other details of those who had their property seized under the Trading with the Enemy legislation. This cannot be a complete list as many individual case records have not been retained. However officials are examining the remaining records to see what information can be provided and it is estimated that the list will cover some 25,000 names. It is intended to publish the list on the Internet as soon as possible but the size and complexity of the task makes it difficult to be specific on the timing at this stage. The Government are committed to openness on this issue and believe that the publication of the report and of the list of names should make a large contribution to the public's understanding of this complex subject and help the relatives of holocaust victims to research their family history.

Biotechnology

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms Walley) of 18 December 1997, Official Report, column 308, concerning public consultation on the proposed European Biotechnology Patent Directive, if she will ensure that representatives from (a) other political parties and (b) groups ethically opposed to biotechnology, will be invited to the events he plans to host. [22914]

Mr. Battle: The purpose of the discussion meeting I shall be hosting next month is to determine how best to develop a public consultation activity with a view to develop a consensus. The focus will therefore be on the process associated with this type of activity, rather than a discussion of the issues raised by biotechnology as this would pre-judge the public attitudes, which we are seeking to understand.

I shall be inviting people based upon their relevant experience and ability to contribute to the stated purpose of the meeting rather than on the basis of their views of the biological sciences.

The public activity to be held in the summer will of course have no value unless there is access to a wide range of informed opinion to draw on as providers of evidence to the exercise.

Nuclear Fusion Research

Dr. Tonge: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to commission further research into nuclear fusion; and if she will make a statement on progress. [23463]

Mr. Battle: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA) carry out an on-going programme of research into nuclear fusion. This is supported by my Department, and it forms part of the European Union's fusion programme. Later this year, the UKAEA will complete and commission an important new experimental device—the mega-amp spherical tokamak (MAST).

Both the European and UK programmes have made progress in the last year. The Joint European Torus achieved world-record values for fusion power and fusion energy. On a smaller scale, the UKAEA's small tight aspect ratio tokamak (START) achieved world record values for the efficiency of plasma confinement. Although the research is meeting and exceeding its targets, it is still thought to be at least 50 years before we could build commercial fusion power stations.

Science Budget

Mr. Roy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the allocation of the science budget. [23909]

Mr. Battle: I have discussed the allocations with the Director General of Research Councils and have decided that, subject to Parliamentary approval of the Supply Estimates in due course, the Science Budget of £1,338.326 million should be allocated as follows:

Science Budget allocations

£ million

	Allocation 1997–98	Allocation 1998–99
BBSRC	183.300	185.739
ESRC	64.896	65.990
EPSRC	386.373	382.982
MRC	289.070	290.208
NERC	165.116	171.771
PPARC	191.850	191.268
International Subscription Reserve	8.800	3.028
CCLRC	1.450	1.462
Pensions	11.530	12.298
Royal Society	22.271	22.621
Royal Academy	3.370	3.436
OST Initiatives	2.302	2.376
Joint Research Equipment Initiative	—	4.147
LINK/Foresight	—	1.000
Total	1,330.327	1,338.326

An additional £4.2 million has been made available for the Joint Research Equipment Initiative to increase the £5.4 million already set aside by the Research Councils for the third round of the initiative.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

British Embassies (Fraud)

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he will be taking in response to the recent National Audit Office report relating to fraud at British embassies. [22751]

Mr. Fatchett: We continuously reappraise the adequacy of our financial management systems and staff resources at British Embassies to minimise the risk of fraud. The lessons learnt from the recent National Audit Office report forms part of this process. We have a dedicated Financial Compliance Unit to do this, as well as the full normal Internal Audit arrangements.

European Committee of the Regions

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whom the United Kingdom has nominated for the second term of the European Committee of the Regions; and if he will make a statement. [23785]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The following nominations have been forwarded to the Council of Ministers:

Mr. Robin Cook: I travelled to Coventry by train on Friday 11 July 1997 to attend a half day seminar on the Strategic Defence Review.

India

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the authorities in India about the position of Peter Bleach, facing a charge subject to the death penalty; and if he will make a statement. [23211]

Mr. Fatchett: Foreign Office Ministers have discussed Mr. Bleach's position with the Indian authorities on four occasions in the past year. We are doing all we properly can for Mr. Bleach. His trial will begin on 27 January; the case remains sub judice.

Mrs. Regan

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make a statement on the cost to public funds of the proposed overseas visits to be undertaken by Mrs. Regan; [23132]

(2) if he will make a statement on the duties and the role of Mrs. Regan in the forthcoming visits of the Foreign Secretary to (a) the United States and (b) other overseas locations. [23131]

Mr. Robin Cook: Ms Regan does not currently propose to undertake any overseas visit.

DEFENCE

Arms Sales

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the value to Britain of arms sales (a) to Indonesia and (b) to Turkey in each year since 1990. [22810]

Mr. Spellar: The estimated value of UK defence sales (including services) to Indonesia and Turkey in each year since 1990 is as follows:

£ million

	Indonesia	Turkey
1990	3	63
1991	34	32
1992	15	36
1993	457	6
1994	77	68
1995	95	19
1996	443	107
1997	18	2

It should be noted that the figures quoted are based on voluntary returns from industry and are expressed in current prices and relate to new contracts signed rather than financial receipts or actual deliveries.

RAF Menwith Hill

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the rolling programme of improvements relating to environmental remedial action in connection with Menwith Hill, referred to in the answer of 10 June 1996, Official Report, column 46, has now been completed; and what recent environmental assessment of Menwith Hill Station has been carried out. [21416]

Mr. Spellar: The programme of improvements at RAF Menwith Hill reflecting the recommendations contained in previous environmental surveys is due to be completed in the first half of 1998. The most recent environmental assessment was carried out in 1996.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Health and Safety Executive last visited RAF Menwith Hill; and what was the outcome of that visit. [21418]

Mr. Spellar: The Health and Safety Executive last visited the site in June 1996 following allegations that equipment at the site caused cancer. It concurred with North Yorkshire Health Authority's findings that the incidence of cancer within the area was no higher than the national average.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has full access to US environmental compliance status surveys in respect of RAF Menwith Hill; and when the last such survey was carried out. [21419]

Mr. Spellar: MoD personnel are fully involved in the environmental audit processes at all USVF facilities in the United Kingdom and are routinely made aware of the contents of Environmental Compliance Status Surveys. The last such survey at RAF Menwith Hill was conducted in 1994.

Nuclear Bunkers

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on expenditure on the maintenance and building of nuclear bunkers in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom for each of the last 10 year; [22919]

(2) what assessment his Department has made of the use of nuclear bunkers sold by the Government; [22920]

(3) how many nuclear bunkers in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom were maintained by Her Majesty's Government in each of the past 10 years; [22917]

(4) what use Her Majesty's Government currently make of nuclear bunkers; [22921]

(5) how many nuclear bunkers were located on (a) Government owned land and (b) his Department's land in each of the last 10 years. [22918]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Defence Animal Centre

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the agency review of the Defence Animal Centre. [23788]

Dr. Reid: A review of the agency status of the Defence Animal Centre (DAC) has begun. The performance of the DAC has been evaluated and its activities will shortly be subjected to the normal "prior options" tests.

Comments and contributions form those with an interest in the work of the Agency would be welcome and should be sent by 31 January 1998 to Major General W. R. Short, Director General Army Medical Services (DGAMS), Building 21, Keogh Barracks, Ash Vale, Aldershot, Hampshire GU12 5RR.

Prospective contributors to the Agency Review should note that the DAC is proceeding with a PFI project to rebuild its accommodation and provide associated support services.

Heavy Lift Transport Aircraft

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the future for the CI30J in the RAF's transport fleet; and if he will make a statement. [23127]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Armed Forces to the hon. Member for Ruislip-Northwood (Mr. Wilkinson) on 1 December 1997, Official Report, column 11.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all overseas visits made since 1 May 1997 on which he or any other Minister in his Department has been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code, indicating (a) who accompanied him and (b) the cost to public funds of each such visit. [23260]

Mr. George Robertson: There has been one such visit. Details are as follows:

Date	Event	Minister accompanied by spouse	Total cost
22–23 November 1997	80th Anniversary of the Battle of Cambrai	Minister for the Armed Forces	£3,839.74

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list all overseas visits made since 1 May 1997 on which he or any other Minister in his Department has been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code, indicating (a) who accompanied him (b) the cost to public funds of each such visit. [23252]

Mr. Hoon: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor was accompanied by Lady Irvine at the 14th Conference of Commonwealth Speakers and Presiding Officers, held in Trinidad and Tobago on 4–11 January 1998. The total cost of the trip from public funds for the Lord Chancellor, Lady Irvine and an official was £13,487.74.

Ministerial Travel (Trains)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on what date (a) he and (b) the Lord Chancellor last used a train in the course of their official duties. [22929]

Mr. Hoon: (a) I have not used a train for official duties since my appointment. (b) The Lord Chancellor last used a train in the course of his official duties on 11 December 1997.

Queen's Counsel (Applications)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many applications there were for silk in (a) 1996 and (b) 1997; and how many were successful. [21855]

Mr. Hoon: In 1995, 488 practitioners applied for silk, of whom 66 were awarded silk in 1996. In 1996, 500 practitioners applied, of whom 68 were awarded silk in 1997.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many visits he has made to legal aid practices in England and Wales since his appointment. [21856]

Mr. Hoon: Between 1 May 1997 and 15 January 1998, I have visited nine legal aid practices.

Judges (Education and Training)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which judges are responsible for education and training in each of the circuits. [21854]

Mr. Hoon: Training on circuits is organised by Presiding Judges and Family Division Liaison Judges with the assistance of the Judicial Studies Board (JSB). It is mainly delivered through supervising and tutor district judges in the case of deputy district judges and pupil master judges in the case of assistance recorders.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young Remand Prisoners

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of 15 and 16-year-olds on remand who will be held in prison service accommodation over (a) the next five years and (b) the next 10 years. [22700]

Ms Quin: No projection is made of the numbers of 15 and 16-year-old remand prisoners in the years ahead. However, the Government would expect that their policies to reform the youth justice system will have a positive effect in reducing these numbers.

Coroners

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to simplify responsibility for the Coroner Service and assess the advantages of establishing a Coroner Agency for this purpose; and if he will make a statement. [23181]

Mr. George Howarth: The coroner service is a locally provided service. We have no plans to reduce local authority responsibilities or to create a new agency.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many (a) coroners, (b) deputy coroners and (c) assistant deputy coroners there are; and how many in each group are (i) full-time, (ii) part-time, (iii) women and (iv) from ethnic minority communities; [23103]

(2) how many coroners have (a) previous judicial experience and (b) medical experience. [23104]

Mr. George Howarth: According to the latest available information, there are some 146 coroners and a similar number of deputy coroners. Most coroners also have one assistant deputy coroner. Twenty-six coroners are full-time appointments; all the rest are part-time. Twenty-seven of all appointments are women. No information is held centrally on the number of appointments from within the ethnic minority communities.

Under the Coroners Act 1988, all coroners must have relevant legal or medical qualifications, but information on the extent of judicial or medical experience is not held centrally.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his functions in relation to the Coroners Service; how many civil servants in his Department have specific responsibility for it; and what other functions those civil servants have responsibility for. [23002]

Mr. George Howarth: The Home Secretary's statutory functions include the approval of coroner appointments in London and the metropolitan areas, changes to coroner districts, the setting of certain fees and determination of applications to hold an inquest in the absence of a body. There is also power to collect statistics and to arbitrate on disputes between coroners regarding jurisdiction, or between coroners and their local authorities in respect of their remuneration and pensions. The Home Office is responsible for coroner legislation, deals with correspondence and inquiries from the public and supports study and training events.

The work is undertaken by seven officials who also have responsibilities for burial, cremation, exhumation and other matters.

Lunar House Staff

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 4 December 1997, Official Report, column 296, what were the costs in the last year for which figures are available of running Lunar House, Croydon, specifying staff costs separately. [22080]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 14 January 1998]: The non staff costs of running Lunar House in 1996–97 were £5.8 million. This included £3.4 million rent,

£1.1 million (Contribution in Lieu of Rates), £650,000 maintenance and building works, £250,000 cleaning and £330,000 fuel and utilities. In addition, the security guarding of Lunar House cost £600,000 and the staff responsible for running the building cost £380,000, although they were also responsible for a wider range of building and office services.

Animal Procedures Committee

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whom he proposes to appoint as successor to Professor Margaret Brazier OBE as Chairman of the Animal Procedures Committee. [23789]

Mr. George Howarth: I am pleased to be able to announce that the Reverend Professor Michael Banner has been appointed as the new Chairman of the Animal Procedures Committee. His period of office will begin on 1 February 1998.

Professor Banner was Chairman of the Committee which considered the ethical implications of emerging technologies in the breeding of farm animals, and is the F. D. Maurice Professor of Moral and Social Theology at King's College, London.

Immigration

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the entry requirements for holders of travel documents issued by the so-called Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus. [23790]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Under the Immigration Rules, holders of travel documents which are not issued by a recognised national authority are required to obtain a visa if they wish to come to the United Kingdom. Despite this, while not recognising the authorities of the so-called "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" (TRNC) we have in the past accepted TRNC travel documents as proof of identity. This has meant that holders of TRNC documents were up till now not required to obtain a visa if visiting the United Kingdom for a short period. This operated under a concession.

We are today bringing the arrangements concerning holders of these documents into line with our standard practice by withdrawing this concession. There have been significant numbers of asylum claims by passengers travelling with this document which, when determined, have all been unfounded. With effect from midnight tonight, holders of documents issued by the authorities of the so-called "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" will be required to obtain visas to the United Kingdom, regardless of the purpose of their journey.

We have also today laid an amendment to the Immigration (Transit Visa) Order 1993, requiring holders of such documents to obtain a visa when in transit through the United Kingdom. This requirement will apply from 5 February.

CS Gas

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have been injured as a consequence of (a) using and (b) being exposed to CS gas. [21417]

Mr. Michael: This information is not held centrally. During police trials of CS spray, between 1 March and 31 August 1996, it was found that 78 per cent. (588) of officers who sprayed CS suffered some cross-contamination effects, such as a burning sensation to the skin or pain to the eyes. The report of the evaluation of the trials, which was published by the Home Office Police Research Group in December 1996, noted that, in some cases, officers appeared to have reported their experience of CS cross-contamination as minor injury. The officers who took part in the trials generally felt that the disadvantages of cross-contamination were outweighed by the advantages of CS spray as an item of defensive equipment.

Ministerial Travel (Trains)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [22925]

Mr. Straw: On Tuesday 6 January 1998, when I travelled by the 7.45 am train from London Euston to Wolverhampton in order to visit Her Majesty's Young Offenders Institution Brinsford, the West Midlands Probation Service and the West Midlands Fire Service.

Firearms Compensation

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the average length of time taken for firearms compensation under options A and B; and what is the expected time for claims submitted now under (a) options A and B and (b) option C. [23583]

Mr. Michael: As at 1 January 1998, the average length of time to process claims under Options A and B was 19 weeks. Regular processing of Option C claims is expected to begin later this month.

Drug Treatment and Testing Programmes

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the cost of commissioning additional drug treatment and testing programmes as provisionally estimated in the Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords] to fall upon the Probation Service. [23126]

Mr. George Howarth: During the pilot stage of the new order, the relevant probation service(s) will be directly funded by the Home Office to Purchase drug treatment and testing services. Funding arrangements for the period of national implementation will be decided on in the light of experience in the pilot stage.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many local pilot projects for drug treatment and testing orders he intends to undertake; and how long he expects them to last. [23122]

Mr. George Howarth: The drug treatment and testing order will be piloted before national implementation, but a final decision on the length and number of the pilots has yet to be taken.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide an analysis of his estimate of the cost of the local pilot projects for the Drug Treatment and Testing Order. [23120]

Mr. George Howarth: The Home Office will provide direct funding of £1 million for the pilot project(s), which will include the cost of evaluation. It has been broadly estimated that the average cost per order could be around £6,400, but the validity of this estimate will of course be tested during the pilot phase.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects drug treatment and testing orders to be available as sentences for courts throughout England and Wales. [23119]

Mr. George Howarth: No firm date has yet been set, but I would expect it to fall in the financial year 2000/2001.

Illegal Drugs

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new initiatives Her Majesty's Government propose to put forward to address the problem of illegal drugs during the UK presidency of the European Union. [23117]

Mr. George Howarth: The United Kingdom Presidency will continue to give priority to action against drug trafficking and drugs misuse, in particular by building on the wide range of work already under-way across the three Pillars of the European Union. Our main objectives are to progress further implementation of the European Union strategy against drugs, with a focus on practical action; to begin consideration of a post-1999 European Union drugs strategy; to ensure effective European Union co-ordination for the United Nations General Assembly Special Session on Drugs, being held in New York in June; and to promote effective implementation of the European Union/Caribbean and European Union/Central Asia drugs initiatives. This will include taking forward implementation of the Joint Action on the approximation of drugs laws and practices and continuing work on practical measures to tackle drug trafficking from Latin America and heroin trafficking along the Balkan route.

Firearms Controls

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State of the Home Department, pursuant to the letter of 22 November 1997 from the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael), to the hon. Member for Hertsmere, when and in what respects, he proposes to consider extension of firearms controls. [23114]

Mr. Michael: The Government have undertaken, once the complete ban on all handguns is in place, to take a wider look at the effectiveness of all firearms controls. No specific timescale has been set. The Government have an open mind on the question of further controls and have no preconceived ideas of any specific category of firearms. We propose to consult widely with all interested parties if further steps are considered necessary.

Asylum Seekers

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes he proposes to the policy governing the use of imprisonment for asylum seekers. [21296]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: People are not detained merely because they have sought asylum. However, it is sometimes necessary to detain a small proportion of those liable to detention under powers conferred by the Immigration Act, some of whom may at some stage also have sought asylum in the United Kingdom, because it is felt that they might otherwise abscond.

The use of prisons for immigration detainees is one of the areas included in the review of detention policy which is under consideration. We expect to make the results available in the near future.

Prison Visits

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisons (a) he and (b) the Minister with responsibility for prisons visited in the course of the Christmas adjournment. [21297]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend visited Brinsford and Grendon prisons on 6 January. I visited Castington and Acklington prisons on 2 January.

Prison Site (Heysham)

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the use of a former holiday camp at Heysham as a future prison. [21299]

Ms Quin: The Prison Service is interested in developing the site at Middleton Tower, Heysham for use as a temporary prison for lower security, Category C prisoners. However, the outcome of the appeal against the refusal of planning clearance for a temporary prison on the site will not be known until February 1998.

Prison Officers Association

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes he proposes to the powers of the Prison Officers Association. [21301]

Ms Quin: We have no plans to change the powers of the Prison Officers Association (POA). However, we have regular meetings with representatives of the Association at which a variety of issues including the powers and responsibilities of the Prison Officer Association are discussed.

High Intensity Training Regimes

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the future of the High Intensity Training regimes at Colchester and Thorn Cross Young Offenders Institutions. [21302]

Ms Quin: In response to a Question from the hon. Member for Colchester (Mr. Russell) on 9 June 1997, Official Report, column 786, my hon. Friend reiterated the Government's commitment to find out what works with offenders. We decided to run the Colchester experiment for a year, as had originally been planned. We are currently considering the contribution it can continue to make to the "what works" debate. The High Intensity Training regime at Thorn Cross, established separately from Colchester, will continue to operate.

Young Offenders Institutions

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he visited or plans to visit (a) Thorn Cross Young Offenders Institution and (b) Colchester Young Offenders Institution. [21303]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend has no current plans to visit either Thorn Cross or Colchester Young Offender Institutions. As part of our delegated responsibilities. I visited Colchester on 2 July and the Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Knowsley, North and Sefton, East (Mr. Howarth) visited Thorn Cross on 6 November. I will be visiting Thorn Cross on Tuesday 20 January.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Young Offender Institutions he has visited since 1 May. [21304]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend visited Brinsford Young Offenders Institution on 6 January. As part of our delegated responsibilities, I have visited four Young Offenders Institutions and my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary has visited five.

Prisons (Visitor Searches)

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes he proposes to the guidance governing searching of visitors to Her Majesty's Prisons. [21306]

Ms Quin: There are no current plans to issue guidance on the searching of visitors. However, it is possible that the Prison Service's review of searching, which will touch on the searching of visitors, may recommend some further changes. The review is due to be completed by the end of January.

Prisons (Drug Use)

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives have been introduced since 1 May to combat the use of drugs in Her Majesty's Prisons. [21262]

Mr. George Howarth: The Prison Service is currently developing plans to fulfil this Government's commitment to provide access to voluntary testing for all prisoners. This work is being taken forward as part of a review of the Prison Service Drug Strategy which Ministers have commissioned.

Prisoners (In-cell Television)

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 27 October 1997, Official Report, column 741, what progress has been made in formulating policy with respect to in-cell television for prisoners. [21261]

Ms Quin: The Government are still reconsidering policy in this area, and we will make an announcement when we have taken final decisions.

CABINET OFFICE

Social Exclusion Unit

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will answer questions relating to his role with the Social Exclusion Unit. [23232]

Mr. Mandelson: The unit is responsible to the Prime Minister in its work.

Government Policy (Implementation)

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will answer questions relating to the strategic implementation of Government policy. [23233]

Mr. Mandelson: I always do my best to answer questions from hon. Members on my responsibilities but will not myself answer questions on policies where other colleagues have lead responsibility.

Ministerial Travel (Trains and Buses)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will list the occasions since 1 May 1997 when he has used, in the course of his official duties, (a) a train and (b) a bus. [22922]

Mr. Mandelson: I use the train regularly in the course of my official duties. I have not used a bus for this purpose.

Rome Lecture

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will place in the Library a copy of his lecture delivered at the Institute of International Affairs in Rome in October 1997. [22913]

Mr. Mandelson: I have today placed a copy of the lecture in the Libraries of the House.

Millennium Experience

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what specific aspects of the Millennium Experience will directly relate to Norfolk. [23049]

Mr. Mandelson: I expect the content of the Millennium Experience at Greenwich to appeal to, and be relevant to, people of all ages and interests from all over the UK, including Norfolk. The Experience will be divided into different zones looking at who we are, what we do, and where we live, in a way that will engage, inspire, and educate all visitors.

In addition, there will be a national programme associated with the Experience. This has the same overarching theme of "Time to make a Difference" and will encourage participation by individuals from all areas of the country. The New Millennium Experience Company is currently in the process of setting up teams in the nine regions of England (Norfolk is included in the Eastern region) and in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. Further details of the national programme will be announced in due course.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Ministerial Travel (Trains)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [22933]

Dr. David Clark: I last used a train for official duties on 7 January 1998.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all overseas visits made since 1 May 1997 on which he or any other Minister in his Department has been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code, indicating (a) who accompanied him (b) the cost to public funds of each such visit. [23259]

Dr. David Clark: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary and I have been accompanied solely by departmental officials on the overseas visits which we have undertaken. The provisions of paragraph 83 of the Ministerial Code therefore do not apply.

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list by make, engine size and fuel consumption the official cars made available to those holding the post of Deputy Prime Minister since 1994. [22946]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated under the terms of the Framework Document to the Government Car and Despatch Agency. I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. Nick Matheson, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Nick Matheson to Mr. Norman Baker, dated January 1998:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking for a list by make, engine size, and fuel consumption, of official cars made available to those holding the post of Deputy Prime Minister since 1994. I am responding as the Chief Executive of the Government Car and Despatch Agency (GCDA) which is responsible for the operation of the Government Car Service (GCS).

Since 1994 GCS has provided one car, a Jaguar Sovereign, to the Right Honourable John Prescott MP. The engine size of the car is 4.0 litres, and has an official combined fuel consumption figure of 26.8 miles per gallon.

Under the last administration, GCS did not provide the Deputy Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Michael Heseltine MP, with a car or driver. However, he used a car, together with driver, on cost terms to the public service fully equivalent to the usual ministerial transport arrangements provided by GCS, which were at the time of the agreement £43,628 per annum excluding VAT.

The full terms of that arrangement were set out in a letter dated 16 March 1995, agreed when Mr. Heseltine was President of the Board of Trade, a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans the Department of Education has to end the GCSE provision in colleges of further and higher education. [21378]

Mr. Worthington: There are no plans to end GCSE provision in further education colleges.

Animal Health Computer System

Mr. Walter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been (a) the annual cost since its introduction of the Animal Health Computer System in Northern Ireland and (b) the approximate cost per movement in the latest financial year. [21761]

Mr. Paul Murphy: (a) the annual cost of the system since its introduction in 1988–89 is as follows:

1988–89	133,871
1989–90	368,156
1990–91	477,797
1991–92	522,856
1992–93	540,295
1993–94	560,559
1994–95	556,142
1995–96	568,814
1996–97	565,187

The figures comprise staff costs of the central computer unit, the maintenance of the system by external contractors and the rental of data circuits.

(b) the approximate cost per movement in the latest financial year (1996–97) is £0.32 based on 1,750,000 movements at a cost of £565,187.

Mr. Walter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate she has made of the savings to the Veterinary Service of the Department of Agriculture by the introduction of the Animal Health Computer System. [21762]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Net Present Value of the investment in the Animal Health Computer System is estimated at £7 million in 1997–98. The on-going savings are currently estimated at £7 million in 1997–98. The on-going savings are currently estimated at £2.7 million per annum. These savings include significant notional elements in that the increased efficiencies arising from the computer facility enabled the Department to redeploy a number of typing, clerical and field staff to other activities.

Mr. Walter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the (a) capital cost and (b) annual cost of the Animal and Public Health Information System and the approximate cost per livestock movement. [21763]

Mr. Paul Murphy: (a) the capital cost of the Animal and Public Health Information System (APHIS) is estimated at £2.25 million.

(b) the estimated annual cost of APHIS is as follows:

1998–99	473,000
1999–2000	537,000
2000–01	577,000
2001–02	458,000
2002–03	462,000
2003–04	465,000

The figures comprise staff costs of the central computer unit, the maintenance of the system by external contractors and the rental of data circuits.

(c) the approximate cost per movement based upon 1,750,000 movements is estimated at around £0.30.

Mr. Walter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she plans to introduce charges to farmers, auctioneers or abattoirs for the Animal and Public Health Information System; and what the scale of those charges will be. [21764]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The question of charging will be considered later this year in parallel with the introduction of the Animal and Public Health Information System.

Public Appointments

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps she will take to ensure that persons she appoints to public bodies reflect the various communities, political parties and religious denominations in Northern Ireland; to how many such bodies she makes appointments; and what is the statutory basis which requires her to ensure that her appointments reflect different groups and bodies. [22218]

Mr. Paul Murphy: All the Northern Ireland Departments, including the Northern Ireland Office, fully endorse the Guidance issued by the Commissioner for Public Appointments, Sir Leonard Peach, that all public appointments should be governed by the overriding principle of selection based on merit, and on the basis of merit, to ensure that their bodies, as far as possible, reflect the composition of the population of Northern Ireland. There are 148 bodies featured in the cabinet office publication "Public Bodies 1997" to which the Departments make appointments. None of the bodies have a statutory base which requires appointments to reflect various communities, political party and religious denominations.

HEALTH

Lariam

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department is currently supporting into the possible side effects of the use of Lariam; and if he will make a statement. [18270]

Ms Jowell: None. The recommendations of the Malaria Advisory Committee on the prevention of malaria for United Kingdom travellers were published by the Public Health Laboratory Service in the Communicable Disease Report on 19 September. Copies are available in the Library.

As for all marketed medicines, the available research into the side effects of melfloquine was assessed at the time of granting the Marketing Authorisation and continues to be evaluated by the Medicines Control Agency whenever new information emerges. Recognised side effects for mefloquine are included in the authorised product information and the British National Formulary. The current produce information for doctors and patients for Lariam is consistent with the newly published guidelines and the product information advises doctors to refer to these, for current advice on geographical resistance patterns and appropriate chemoprophylaxis.

In-patients

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the average length of in-patient stay in each hospital trust in each of the last five years; how many patients treated as in-patients were re-admitted to each hospital trust within six months; and what proportion of the total number of patients so treated this represents. [19802]

Mr. Boateng: Information on average length of stay for each National Health Service trust for the years 1991–92 to 1995–96 has been placed in the Library. Information on six-month readmission rates for individual trusts is not collected centrally, but my noble Friend, the Baroness Jay, will write to my hon. Friend with the information that is available.

Dental Services

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on free dental check-ups within the NHS. [22564]

Mr. Milburn: Dental charges are being examined as part of the comprehensive spending review, which is looking at all aspects of the Department's spending in the context of the Government's election manifesto commitment

"if you are ill or injured there will be a national health service there to help; and access to it will be based on need and need alone—not on your ability to pay, or on who your general practitioner happens to be or on where you live".

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met representatives of the dental profession to discuss improvements in the dental services within the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [22562]

Mr. Milburn: There are frequent meetings to discuss different aspects of dentistry between Departmental Ministers or officials and the representatives of the dental profession. Most recently, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met representatives of the General Dental Council on 24 November, and I met representatives of the General Dental Services Committee from the British Dental Association on 19 November 1997.

Mental Health

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has formally responded to the Mental Health Act Commission's seventh biennial report. [23784]

Mr. Boateng: Yes. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Ministerial Travel (Trains)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [22935]

Mr. Dobson: Today.

Norfolk and Norwich NHS Trust

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of staffed acute beds at the Norfolk and Norwich NHS Trust (a) at the latest available date, (b) proposed under the public sector route, as set out in the outline business case and (c) under the PFI proposals. [23128]

Mr. Milburn: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 18 December 1997, Official Report, column 330.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all overseas visits made since 1 May 1997 on which he or any other Minister in his Department has been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code, indicating (a) who accompanied him or her (b) the cost to public funds of each such visit. [23254]

Ms Jowell: None.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beef

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what circumstances it is permissible to offer as food, beef products which are derived from animals which are over 30 months of age; and if he will make a statement. [20312]

Mr. Rooker: The Fresh Meat (Beef Controls) Regulations 1996 permit meat and any products derived from bovine animals which are over 30 months to be offered as food under the following circumstances.

Firstly, meat derived from a bovine animal which was born, reared and slaughtered in any of the countries specified in the Schedule to the Regulations i.e.,

Argentina
Australia
Botswana
Brazil
Mauritius
Namibia
New Zealand
Paraguay
Poland
South Africa
Swaziland
Uruguay
United States of America
Zimbabwe.

Secondly, meat derived from a bovine animal which was accompanied at the time of slaughter by a slaughter certificate issued under the Beef Assurance Scheme, slaughtered in accordance with the hygiene requirements of the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995 and processed in accordance with the Meat Products (Hygiene) Regulations 1994.

These exemptions from the over thirty months rule are under continual review.

BSE

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the quantities of incinerated waste arising from the burning of cattle suspected of having BSE; at what sites this waste is located; and what are his Department's plans for final disposal of this waste. [20761]

Mr. Rooker: A typical BSE suspect carcase of about 480kg produces about 33kg of ash following incineration. Since records began in 1988, 189,812 carcases have been incinerated in Great Britain by MAFF Veterinary Investigation Centres and by commercial companies contracted by the Department, resulting in an estimated 6,264 tonnes of ash. It is normal practice for this ash to be landfilled in appropriately licensed sites. Records of these sites are not kept centrally within the Department. The policing and monitoring of such sites is the responsibility of the Environment Agency.

Genetically Modified Food

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the studies undertaken or commissioned by the Government into genetically modified foods listing the organisations involved. [22189]

Mr. Rooker: A list of current and recently completed studies on genetically modified foods is given in the table.

Study	Organisation
Tagging genetically engineered organisms	IFR, Norwich Laboratory
Development of new methods for safety evaluation of transgenic crops	BIBRA Toxicology International
Honey from genetically modified plants: integrity of pollen DNA, and expression of promoters in floral organs	Laboratory of the Government Chemist
Genetically modified organisms in food-evaluation of in vitro and in vivo models for assessing DNA transfer in gut	BIBRA Toxicology International
Detection of genetically modified organisms in foods	Laboratory of the Government Chemist
A model system for the quantitative analysis of horizontal spread of DNA from genetically engineered microorganisms GIT	IFR, Norwich Laboratory
Potential for gene transfer between manipulated bacteria and the resident microflora of the human gut	Rowett Research Institute
A model system for the quantitative analysis of horizontal spread of DNA from genetically engineered microorganisms	Surrey University
Regulation and targeting of transgene expression in fruit crops	HRI, East Malling
Causes of instability of transgenic plants	John Innes Centre
Safety of recombinant DNA technology: gene location, marker elimination and secondary effect	IFR, Norwich Laboratory
Compilation of a database of oil compositions from new varieties of oilseeds	Leatherhead Food Research Association
A database of novel foods and food products cleared in countries other than the UK	AEA Technology, Consultancy Services
Genes that have been introduced by genetic modification into crop plants intended for food use	AEA Technology, Consultancy Services
Persistence and potential infectivity of live bacteria in foods	IFR, Norwich Laboratory

Study	Organisation
Development of a strategy to promote the public's understanding of biotechnology	Sheffield University
The effect of agriculturally-relevant environmental factors on the expression and stability of genes affecting wheat lipases	University College Wales, Cardiff
Survival of DNA in the gut and the potential for genetic transformation of resident bacteria	Rowett Research Institute
Evaluating the risks associated with using GMOs in human foods	Newcastle University
Impact of transformation methods, construct and gene cassette architecture on the stability and expression of transgenes	John Innes Centre
Assessment of the risks of transferring antibiotic resistance determinants from transgenic plants to micro-organisms	Leeds University
Dissemination of GM DNA and antibiotic resistance genes via rumen microorganisms	Rowett Research Institute
Risk of gene transfer from genetically modified crop plants to gut bacteria	IFR, Norwich Laboratory
Gene expression in anthers and nectaries of transgenic plants	Leicester University
The stability of expression and inheritance of transgenes in brassica	John Innes Centre
Risk assessment of genetically engineered avian probiotics	Newcastle University
Possibility of Agrobacterium as a vehicle for gene escape	Mylnefield Research Services Ltd.
Do protein sequences imply inter-species gene transfer?	Manchester University
The effect of background genotype on transgenes	John Innes Centre
Investigation of novel viruses created by growing viral coat protein transgenic sugar beet plants	Central Science Laboratory/IACR, Brooms Barn
Mobile genetic elements and lateral gene transfer events in crop species	Manchester University

Spongiform Encephalopathies

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what investigations his Department has undertaken into spongiform type symptoms in dogs held in (a) kennels and (b) quarantine. [22727]

Mr. Rooker: Brains from culled hounds in packs throughout Great Britain, which are traditionally fed fallen livestock and so may be considered a high risk population exposed to tissues potentially infected with transmissible spongiform encephalopathies before controls were introduced in September 1990, have been examined and the results considered by SEAC in August 1994. The results were re-evaluated in June 1995. SEAC concluded that the results were inconclusive because there were certain limitations in the protocol of the study. However, it was recognised that the study established that in the dogs studied there was no evidence of a pathologically overt spongiform encephalopathy. It has to be stressed that the hounds were being culled for a variety of reasons and the vast majority were showing no evidence of suffering from neurological disease.

The brains of dogs which die in quarantine are routinely examined for the presence of rabies. Depending on the clinical signs presented before death, some may also be examined for evidence of spongiform encephalopathy if the rabies diagnosis is negative. No TSE has been identified by these examinations.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of SEAC funding was devoted to (a) the BSE/CJD link, (b) the BSE/organophosphate link and (c) evidence relating to the incidence of spongiform diseases in humans before the BSE outbreak in the last year for which figures are available. [22726]

Mr. Rooker: SEAC funding covers the cost of arranging meetings, members' fees and their travel costs. It is not broken down by subject.

Pesticides

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food from which pesticides he has withdrawn clearance for use since 1 May; and from which specific permitted uses of pesticides he has withdrawn clearance for use since 1 May. [22945]

Mr. Rooker: Since 1 May 1997, the approvals for all of the uses of 218 pesticide products have been revoked. Of these, eight were revoked for safety reasons or for failure to support the pesticide following a review, and no use is now permitted. A further 84 approved pesticides were also revoked for safety reasons or failure to support the pesticide following a review, but use continues to be approved for a further two years as the safest means of disposing stocks already distributed.

Twenty-seven approved pesticides have been revoked for commercial reasons with no use now permitted. Ninety-nine approved pesticides were revoked for commercial reasons, but where uses continue to be approved for a further two years.

I have placed a list of all these pesticide products in the Library of the House.

A number of specific pesticide uses have also been withdrawn since 1 May. Details of these could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, they are reported in the monthly Pesticides Register published by the Stationary Office.

Cattle Cull

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Department's preferred option for the disposal of animals culled under the over-30-months scheme. [23167]

Mr. Rooker: The Intervention Board Executive Agency (IBEA) has responsibility for the day to day running of the over-thirty-months scheme. After careful consideration, it has concluded that none of the bids received for incineration under its 1997 tender exercise are capable of meeting its requirements of energy recovery, proven technology, early deliverability, high volumes and reasonable costs. IBEA has therefore terminated the restricted stage of the tender so far as the incineration only element is concerned and is actively investigating other options which may be able to meet its requirements. The Government will announce their decision when these investigations are complete.

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the risks to nearby communities from the incineration of (a) meat and bone meal and (b) carcasses from animals culled under the over-30-months scheme. [23170]

Mr. Rooker: In June 1997, the Environment Agency published a number of studies on the risks from BSE to human health via different environmental pathways. In relation to incineration of BSE suspects, the risk calculation showed that the likelihood of the most exposed individual ingesting in one year sufficient material to cause infection to be less than one in 1,000 million. The Agency pointed out that, in reality, the real risk to the general public is way below that of the most exposed individual. The risks of incinerating over-thirty-months Scheme cattle carcases will be lower still. Incinerators burning carcases and meat and bone meal (MBM) will require consents under the Environment Protection Act 1990.

The risk assessments gave similar results for burning meat and bone meal derived from OTMS carcases in coal fired power stations. All of the risk assessments carried out showed the risks to be very low and negligible compared to other risks in daily life.

Rendering

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the risks to nearby communities from the burning of tallow to power animal rendering processes. [23164]

Mr. Rooker: Studies to assess the effectiveness of the rendering processes to inactivate BSE and scrapie infectivity (Taylor et al 1995, Taylor et al 1997) failed to detect any infectivity in tallow. The majority of tallow produced under the Over Thirty Months Scheme is being safely and securely stored pending a final decision being taken on the disposal options. Small amounts of tallow are being burned in some rendering plants to power the rendering process subject to the consent of the local authority.

Rabies

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1997, Official Report, column 231, what plans he has to ask the Kennedy Committee to assess possible risks from the vertical transmission of rabies virus. [23188]

Mr. Rooker: The Advisory Group on Quarantine, under the Chairmanship of Professor Kennedy, are already considering this as part of their work.

Cloning

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 18 November 1997, Official Report, columns 119, if he will implement recommendation 2 of the Banner Committee. [22757]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 12 January 1998]: I have been asked to reply.

The second recommendation of the Banner Committee calls for a new Committee with responsibility for advising on the ethical questions associated with scientific advances in the field of genetics.

The Human Genetics Advisory Commission already has a remit to advise on the ethical issues arising from advances in human genetics. Additionally, on 24 November last year, I announced a public consultation on the wider issues arising from developments in the biosciences. The Banner Committee's second recommendation will be considered in this context.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

School Standards

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what assessment he has made of the value for money of the work of OFSTED in seeking to raise secondary pupils' standards of educational achievement since September 1993; [22849]

(2) what independent assessment his Department has made of OFSTED's effectiveness in improving the standards of GCSE achievement by 15 year old maintained pupils' nationally between September 1993 and 1997; and by what criteria in terms of pupils' educational achievements and welfare his Department assesses OFSTED's performance. [22854]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 14 January 1998]: OFSTED continues to play an essential part in the drive to achieve higher standards. Regular inspection of all schools by OFSTED contributes to public accountability and to the improvement of the education service through the comparative data which is then made available. It is not possible to separate the work of OFSTED from the other factors that have contributed to these improvements.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what estimate his Department has made of (a) the total cost, (b) the average total cost per maintained secondary pupil and (c) the average total cost per secondary school of the first four-year cycle of OFSTED secondary school inspections (i) excluding and (ii) including private training costs to inspectors; [22851]

(2) what estimate his Department has made of (a) the total cost, (b) the average total cost per maintained primary pupil and (c) the average total cost per secondary school, of the first three-year cycle of OFSTED primary school inspections (i) excluding and (ii) including private training costs to inspectors; [22852]

(3) what estimate his Department has made of (a) the total projected cost per annum, (b) the projected average cost per pupil per annum and (c) the average total cost per LEA of OFSTED's inspections, (i) excluding and (ii) including private training costs to inspectors. [22853]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 14 January 1998]: I am seeking this information from Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools, Chris Woodhead, and will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Dorrell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish his latest estimate of the revenue savings he expects to accrue as a result of the abolition of the assisted places scheme in the years (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000, (c) 2000–01 and (d) 2001–02; and if he will list the assumptions underlying his estimates. [23172]

Mr. Byers: Our latest estimate of savings against the previous Government's published expenditure plans is £22 million in 1998–99 and £61 million in 1999–2000, with £80 million in 2000–01 and £100 million in 2001–02 assuming that the original baseline figure of £180 million for 1999–2000 is rolled forward. The estimates assume falling numbers of assisted place holders over the years in question while continuing the present arrangements for means-testing and fee-setting.

Early Years Education

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list in respect of each local education authority area in England the number of (a) application forms received by his Department for certificates of eligibility for early years education for the current term, (b) certificates despatched to parents and (c) applications in respect of certificates which have not yet been despatched by his Department; and if he will make a statement. [23269]

Ms Estelle Morris: Certificates of eligibility are used in only 53 local education authorities, the others having put in place interim early years education plans covering the autumn term 1997 and the spring term 1998. Certificates of eligibility are normally despatched within five working days of receipt of a valid application. On Friday 15 January, I expect the position to be:

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list all overseas visits made since 1 May 1997 on which he or any other Minister in his Department has been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code, indicating (a) who accompanied him or her (b) the cost to public funds of each such visit. [23258]

Dr. Howells: Of the overseas trips taken since 1 May 1997, none of the Ministers from the Department for Education and Employment were accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code.

SCOTLAND

Residential Homes

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he plans to approve the decision by Dumfries and Galloway Council to externalise all of its residential homes for the elderly. [20616]

Mr. Galbraith: If the Secretary of State receives a request to approve the decision, careful consideration will be given to all relevant factors. However, as I indicated to my hon. Friend when we met in August, local authorities are best placed to determine what services are required to respond to the needs and circumstances of their areas.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning the exemption of the fishing industry from the Working Time Directive; and if he will make a statement. [20652]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 15 December 1997]: The Scottish Office has received a copy of a paper submitted by the Scottish Fishermen's Federation to the Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions in response to the EC White Paper on Sectors and Activities excluded from the Working Time Directive; and has been kept fully aware, in discussions, of the fishing industry's position on this matter.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of state for Scotland what role he will have on fisheries matters during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Union. [22045]

Mr. Dewar: Scottish Office Ministers will play a full part in EU business during the UK Presidency.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what involvement he has had in determining the United Kingdom's priorities in fisheries during the United kingdom presidency of the European Union in the first half of 1998. [22044]

Mr. Dewar: The Scottish Office Agriculture, Environment and Fisheries Department has been closely involved in preparations for the UK's presidency and in advising Ministers on the determination of the UK's priorities.

Fisheries Council

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland at how many meetings of the EU Fisheries Council he has (a) spoken for and (b) been lead Minister on behalf of Her Majesty's Government since 2 May. [22025]

Mr. Dewar: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State responsible for agriculture, environment and fisheries has attended both meetings (30 October and 18–19 December) of the Fisheries Council as a member of the UK Ministerial team.

Water Authorities

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria determined the appointment of the chairpersons of the three Scottish water authorities. [22042]

Mr. Dewar: The new Chairmen of the East and North water authorities, who take up those positions on 1 April 1998, were appointed to the respective authorities in accordance with the procedures laid down by the Commissioner for Public Appointments' Code of Practice. All candidates were firstly assessed against a list of the knowledge, experience and personal qualities desirable for a Board member. In selecting Chairmen from the membership, I then considered the field in the light of the following desirable attributes:

substantial public or private sector experience, preferably at Chairman level; effective ambassadorial skills;

ability to develop a clear vision of the future of the public utilities;

proven leadership qualities; ability to command respect, inspire and motivate both within the Board and within the organisation as a whole; possess knowledge of management practices in the public sector.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will establish a further education funding council to help to decide the allocation of grants to further education colleges. [22269]

Mr. Wilson: The establishment of a Further Education Funding Council was one of the recommendations of the Scottish Committee of the National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education. There have been extensive consultations on the Committee's recommendations but final decisions have not yet been taken.

Cycle Spaces

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many secure cycle spaces there are in his Department. [22677]

Mr. Dewar: My Department has 164 secure cycle spaces in buildings where The Scottish Office is the major occupier.

Nursery Provision

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what meetings he has had with the Scottish Pre-School Play Association to discuss (a) nursery provision and (b) the Nursery Voucher Scheme. [22382]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 12 January 1998]: There has so far been one Ministerial meeting with the Scottish Pre-School Play Association (SPPA): I met them on 11 July 1997, when we discussed pre-school education generally and the abolition of the pre-school voucher system in particular. I have also met Comhairle nan Sgoiltean Araich, another voluntary organisation concerned with pre-school education provision.

There is also regular contact between SPPA and officials. SPPA is part of a standing liaison group between officials and pre-school education providers in all the sectors. It is also a member of the National Child Care Forum, on which The Scottish Office is represented. In addition, SPPA is amongst the organisations which have been invited to respond, by 6 February, to a major consultation paper on the future of pre-school education, which I published last November.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many meetings he has had with representatives of private nursery providers to discuss (a) the abolition of the Nursery Voucher Scheme and (b) alternative means of making nursery provision. [22383]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 12 January 1998]: There has so far been one Ministerial meeting with the Scottish Independent Nurseries Association (SINA): I met them on 24 September 1997 to discuss a wide range of issues, including the abolition of the pre-school voucher system and the way ahead for pre-school education thereafter.

There is also regular contact between SINA and officials. Together with the Scottish Council for Independent Schools (SCIS), SINA is part of a standing liaison group between officials and pre-school education providers in all the sectors. In addition, SINA and SCIS are amongst the organisations which have been invited to respond, by 6 February, to a major consultation paper on the future of pre-school education, which I published last November.

Owner-occupiers

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since 1978–79 the number of owner-occupiers within Scotland as a percentage of the overall housing stock. [22395]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 12 January 1998]: Information about the number of owner occupied dwellings in Scotland is collected as part of the decennial Population Census. For intervening years the Scottish Office estimates the number of owner occupied dwellings on the basis of information from local authorities and Scottish Homes. The figures for each year from 1979 to 1996 are set out below.

Year	Owner occupied dwellings in Scotland as a percentage of the total housing stock
1979	35.3
1980	36.1
1981	[1]36.4
1982	37.7
1983	39.1
1984	40.5
1985	41.8
1986	43.1
1987	44.6
1988	46.7
1989	49.1
1990	51.2
1991	[1]52.4
1992	54.1
1993	55.5
1994	56.9
1995	58.4
1996	59.2

[1] Census figures. Remaining figures are estimates.

Expenditure Statistics

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, in (a) cash terms and (b) 1997–98 prices, the amount of money allocated in each financial year since 1978–79 and 1997–98 to each area of expenditure currently within his responsibility. [22417]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 12 January 1998]: Fully consistent information in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Relevant information can be found in the following publications:

Public Expenditure to 1985–86—A Commentary on the Scotland Programme

Public Expenditure to 1986–87—A Commentary on the Scotland Programme

Hospital Beds

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps have been taken to avert a shortage of hospital beds during the winter of 1997–98. [22747]

Mr. Galbraith: The Government have provided an additional £25 million to the NHS in Scotland to deal with the expected increase in emergency admissions over the winter period. In addition, I have required Health Boards in Scotland to use their share of £10 million saved from reductions in bureaucracy to reduce waiting times and to ensure that effective contingency plans are in place.

Ministerial Travel (Trains)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [22931]

Mr. Dewar: On Sunday 11 January 1998.

Referendum

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of the returning officers of the unitary authorities in Scotland, or staff acting on their behalf, contacted the Scottish Office Devolution Unit by phone between 10pm on 11 September 1997 and the conclusion of the count for Scotland, to request guidance on the interpretation of the answers given to the questions in the referendum, where the voters had written yes or no in the ballot paper; and if he will make a statement. [23234]

Mr. McLeish: The Chief Counting Officer for Scotland who had responsibility for the count did not receive any requests for further guidance on the adjudication of ballot papers in the period in question.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those unitary authorities in Scotland which, during the course of the referendum count on 11 September changed the basis of interpretation as to whether a ballot paper was to be accepted as valid, or to be declared spoilt; and how many of these changed their interpretation on the specific advice of his Department. [23274]

Mr. McLeish: I am not aware that any area changed the basis of its interpretation of the adjudication of ballot papers or changed its interpretation of the guidance issued by the Chief Counting Office for Scotland.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance he gave to returning officers in each of the unitary authority areas in Scotland, for the referendum count on 11 September 1997, with regard to deciding whether or not a vote was to be regarded as valid if the voter wrote "No" in the box adjacent to the statement "I do not agree that there should be a Scottish Parliament"; in what circumstances such a vote, in the absence of any other mark made by the voter on the ballot paper, was taken as (a) a "No" vote, (b) a "Yes" vote or (c) spoilt vote; and what additional guidance was given to returning officers during the course of the count on that evening. [23268]

Mr. McLeish: The advice given in the guidance issued by the Chief Counting Officer about a ballot paper marked with "No" in the box adjacent to the statement "I do not agree that there should be a Scottish Parliament" was that the ballot paper was to be treated as a "No"vote. No additional guidance was issued by the Chief Counting Officer during the course of the count.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the guidance which he circulated to returning officers in each of the unitary authority areas in Scotland for the counting procedure for the referendum which took place on 11 September 1997, together with a copy of supplementary guidance issued after and clarification guidance faxed to such officers during the course of the count. [23275]

Mr. McLeish: Responsibility for the conduct of the count lay with the Chief Counting Officer for Scotland. A copy of his guidance in connection with the count has been placed in the Library. No supplementary guidance was issued.

Students

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on changes in the student support and tuition fee arrangements for Scottish domiciled students in session 1989–99. [23983]

Mr. Wilson: I am publishing today the main rates of loans and maintenance grants payable in 1998–99 to continuing students and new students in full-time higher education. I am also publishing the rates for those postgraduate courses which do not attract students loans, together with the rates for the various supplementary allowances payable to both undergraduate and vocational postgraduate award holders.

The total support available to undergraduate students in 1998–99 through the main rates of maintenance grant and loan, taken together, will be 3 per cent higher than in 1997–98, thus maintaining its value in real terms. Postgraduate maintenance grants and supplementary allowances will be increased by a similar amount.

These changes are consistent with those for England and Wales announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment. Details have been placed in the Library.

TREASURY

Environment

16. Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to use fiscal measures to encourage good environmental practice. [21067]

Mrs. Liddell: On Budget day in July, we issued a statement of intent on the use of environmental taxes, which said that we will aim to reform the tax system to increase incentives to reduce environmental damage. The Pre-Budget Report outlined specific areas where we are taking this forward as a priority.

Local Government Finance

17. Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next plans to meet leaders of the Local Government Association to discuss the control total for local government for 1998–99. [21068]

Mr. Darling: The Government have already announced for consultation their proposals for the local authority finance settlement for 1998–99. In his statement to the House on 2 December 1997, Official Report, columns 157-64 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions explained that the arrangements would be finalised after a period of consultation with local authorities and others. He also referred to the establishment of a new central-local partnership which will provide an ongoing forum for discussion of all major issues of concern between the government and the Local Government Association.

PEPs and Individual Savings Accounts

18. Mr. Day: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding PEPs. [21069]

21. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding his proposals for individual savings accounts. [21072]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: PEPs and TESSAs will be superseded from 1999 by the new individual savings account (ISA). We announced our proposals and published a consultative document on the ISA on 2 December. Responses were invited by 31 January. We have received so far, and continue to receive, large numbers of representations on these proposals.

37. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what basis he calculated that there would be an additional six million savers under his proposals in the Green Paper on ISAs. [21089]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Bognor Regis and Littlehampton (Mr. Gibb) on 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 473.

Economic and Monetary Union

19. Mr. Healey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the steps he is taking to encourage greater public awareness of the implications of EMU. [21070]

Mr. Gordon Brown: We have already published booklets to help people and businesses understand what EMU means. This year, we will hold conferences to inform all regions and sectors of the economy about the need to prepare. We will apply for Community funding for an information service and we will produce information packs for schools, and we plan to make all EMU information available on-line through links to libraries and information centres across the country.

26. Helen Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from trade unions on his EMU policy. [21077]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I have regular contact with the Trades Union Congress to discuss a range of issues, including economic and monetary union. I have also received representations from the TUC through the Business Advisory Group, which I set up in September 1997. I will shortly be publishing a report summarising the recommendations from the Advisory Group.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list each current statutory duty of the Bank of England, indicating how each is affected by (a) current obligations under Stage 2 of Economic and Monetary Union, (b) future obligations entered into by the United Kingdom after adherence to Stage 3 of Economic and Monetary Union and (c) the commencement of Stage 3 by other member states, not including the United Kingdom. [22195]

Mrs. Liddell: The main existing statutory duties of the Bank of England are prescribed by the Currency and Bank Notes Acts 1928 and 1954 (in relation to notes and coin) and by the Banking Act 1987 as amended (in relation to banking supervision). These duties are unaffected by stage 2 of economic and monetary union and would remain unaffected by the participation in stage 3 of other Member States. The 1928 and 1954 Acts would require amendment were the United Kingdom to participate in stage 3.

Windfall Tax

20. Ms Keeble: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with employers' groups on his policy to spend the proceeds of the windfall tax on a welfare-to-work programme. [21071]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: I am pleased to tell the House that we had widespread positive acceptance of the welfare to work programme from employers, employees representatives and the voluntary sector as well. In particular, I am most encouraged by the firm support from British industry and I am pleased also to say many Members of this House have been involved as ambassadors for the programme, and that is having a very good effect.

29. Mr. McCabe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representation she has received from employers' groups on his policy to spend the proceeds of the windfall tax on a welfare-to-work programme. [21080]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Gedling (Mr. Coaker) today.

Tax Avoidance

22. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding his plans for a general provision against tax avoidance. [21073]

Mr. Gordon Brown: Since I asked the Inland Revenue to look at the possibility of a General Anti-Avoidance Rule (GAAR) in my last Budget, a number of representations have been received expressing a variety of views. The Revenue have also held informal discussions with several representative bodies and other groups. Given the informal and exploratory nature of these talks, I do not think it would be right to disclose details at this early stage. There will be formal, public consultation before any General Anti-Avoidance Rule is introduced.

32. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with other Governments regarding measures to tackle tax avoidance. [21084]

Mr. Gordon Brown: The Government have had a number of discussions with other Governments about various aspects of tax avoidance.

Fuel (Value Added Tax)

23. Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from pensioner groups on his policy to reduce VAT on fuel. [21074]

25. Mr. Goggins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from pensioner groups on his policy to reduce the VAT rate on fuel. [21076]

Dawn Primarolo: Our prompt action to bring down the VAT rate on domestic fuel in the Summer Budget has been widely welcomed. The reduction will be of particular benefit to Pensioners as a proportion of their average income.

38. Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from trade unions on his policy to reduce the VAT rate on fuel. [21090]

Dawn Primarolo: Our prompt action to bring down the VAT rate on domestic fuel in the Summer Budget has been widely welcomed. There have been no specific representations from trade unions.

Tax Competition

24. Mr. Heald: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will meet the Belgian Finance Minister to discuss harmful tax competition. [21075]

Dawn Primarolo: No such meeting is scheduled, but the Chancellor does of course see all EU Finance Ministers regularly at meetings of the Ecofin Council.

Hypothecated Taxation

27. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received on the effect of hypothecated taxation on service provision. [21078]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government receive a number of representations on both the Budget and the Comprehensive Spending Reviews. A variety of representations on hypothecated taxation have been received.

Offshore Trusts

28. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which of his ministerial colleagues receive papers on the development of policy for the taxation of offshore trusts. [21079]

33. Mr. Green: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which of his ministerial colleagues receive papers on the development of policy for the taxation of offshore trusts. [21085]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Hitchen and Harpenden (Mr. Lilley) on the 10 December 1997, Official Report, column 576.

35. Mr. Brady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the annual cost to the Treasury of tax avoidance through the use of offshore trusts. [21087]

Mr. Gordon Brown: The last Government failed to put in place any comprehensive mechanism accurately to assess or estimate the cost to the Treasury of tax avoidance. The question of assessment is part of the review announced in the Pre-Budget Report.

National Insurance

31. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received recently concerning national insurance contributions; and if he will make a statement. [21082]

Mr. Darling: My ministerial colleagues and I receive numerous representations regarding national insurance contributions.

Sterling

31. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about the current level of sterling. [21083]

Mrs. Liddell: The Chancellor has received a number of representations concerning the exchange rate. The Government want a stable and competitive pound over the medium term, consistent with the objective of price stability. The focus of policy will be on achieving the low inflation and sound public finances which are the necessary conditions for sustained exchange rate stability.

Income Tax (Self-assessment)

34. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to simplify the calculation of income tax for the purposes of self-assessment. [21086]

Dawn Primarolo: The self-assessment legislation included a number of measures to simplify the calculation of income tax. These measures were considered in depth by the Self Assessment Consultative Committee which has representatives from all the main organisations representing business and industry bodies and the accountancy and legal professions. The Inland Revenue is listening closely to any practical concerns raised by taxpayers and accountants about self assessment.

Budget Forecast

36. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his current forecast of the Budget surplus or deficit for 1998–99. [21088]

Mr. Darling: Table B1 in Appendix B of the November 1997 Pre-Budget Report gives current forecasts of the budget surplus or deficit on various definitions.

Channel Islands

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the economic benefits to the UK from the constitutional position of the Channel Islands in respect of their arrangements for determining their own tax laws. [22240]

Dawn Primarolo: The constitutional relationship between the Channel Islands and the United Kingdom was examined by the Royal Commission on the Constitution 1969–1973. The Government have conducted no specific assessment of the economic benefits to the UK of the constitutional position of the Channel Islands in respect of their arrangements for determining their own tax laws.

Art Market (VAT)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reason an interim VAT band was established for the United Kingdom art market; what effect the VAT raise has had on turnover; and what representations he is making to the Commission on the subject. [22616]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 12 January 1998]: Goods imported into the UK normally bear VAT at the Standard rate (17.5 per cent.). Under the terms of EC law introduced in 1995 certain works of art, antiques and collectors' pieces imported into the UK are eligible until 30 June 1999 for an effective rate of VAT at importation of 2.5 per cent.

The fine art trade's published overseas trade statistics indicate that, since 1995, there has been a reduction in the annual values of UK imports of works of art, antiques and collectors' pieces from non-EC countries. It is readily acknowledged by representatives of the fine art trade that, in such a highly competitive global market, a variety of factors may have contributed to the apparent decline in imports.

During 1998, the EC Commission is expected to review the effects of the relevant EC legislation on the competitiveness of the Community art markets compared to third countries' art markets. The relevant Government departments are working closely with art trade bodies to evaluate those effects, and to try to ensure that the position of the UK's fine art market will be properly represented in that review.

Association for the Monetary Union of Europe

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what finance the Association for the Monetary Union of Europe receives from the European Community. [22617]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 12 January 1998]: The information requested is not held by the Government. The question should be addressed to Directorate General XIX of the European Commission.

Valuation Office Agency

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reasons the Chief Executive of the Valuation Office Agency resigned in December 1997 and on what terms; whether she was on fully-paid sick leave between January and September 1997; and at what cost. [22812]

Dawn Primarolo: The reasons for the previous Chief Executive's resignation and her sick leave record whilst she was employed are confidential information concerning public employment. Mrs. Lowe received £54,000 on her resignation. The normal rules concerning sick leave and pensions in the Civil Service were applied to Mrs. Lowe during her employment.

Private Health Insurance

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the estimated saving to public funds in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99 of the abolition of tax relief on private health insurance. [22463]

Dawn Primarolo: Tax relief on private medical insurance contracts for individuals aged 60 or over was withdrawn in the July 1997 Budget. The savings in relief are estimated at £25 million in 1997–98 and £120 million in 1998–99.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchquer what revenue the Exchequer received in 1997 from the removal of tax relief on pensions' private medical insurance. [22827]

Dawn Primarolo: Tax relief on private medical insurance contracts for individuals aged 60 or over was withdrawn in the July 1997 Budget. The saving in relief is estimated at 25 milion in 1997–98.

Charities

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultation he had with charitable organisations prior to phasing out charities' tax credit compensation; and if he will make a statement. [22461]

Dawn Primarolo: The abolition of paid tax credits applies to all non-taxpayers and is part of a wider reform. We did, however, consider the position of charities carefully and so included a special seven year transitional provision for them which has been generally welcomed.

Oil Terminals

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review arrangements relating to the rebonding of oil terminals in order to encourage seaborne transport of domestic oil supplies. [22761]

Dawn Primarolo: No. These arrangements have been the subject of discussion with the oil industry for some time but the cost to the Exchequer of returning to rebonding is too expensive. It also has resource costs for Customs. The industry was compensated for debonding by the current duty deferment system, which allows monthly, rather than daily, payment of duty.

Agriculture (Compensatory Payments)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding compensatory payments to agriculture consequent upon the strength of sterling in relation to other EU currencies. [21062]

Mr. Darling: Treasury Ministers have received several such representations. I refer to the statement which my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food made to the House on 22 December, 1997, Official Report, columns 677–79.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all overseas visits made since 1 May 1997 on which he or any other Minister in his Department has been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code, indicating (a) who accompanied him or her (b) the cost to public funds of each such visit. [23249]

Mr. Gordon Brown: There have been no such visits.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many public appointments she has made since 1 May; and how many and what percentage of these (a) receive remuneration and (b) are of (i) Afro-Caribbean and (ii) Asian origin; [16785]

(2) if she will publish the names of all those people whom she has appointed to public bodies since 1 May, indicating the positions to which they have been appointed, and whether they receive remuneration. [19978]

Mr. Field: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security has made 35 public appointments since 1 May. Of those: (a) eight appointments (23 per cent.) are remunerated, on a fee paid sessional basis; (b) No appointments are of Afro-Caribbean or Asian Origin.

The information regarding the names of those people who have been appointed and the position to which they have been appointed is set out in the table.

1. The Retail Prices Index (All items) (RPI) and the Average Earnings Index (Whole Economy) as supplied by The Office for National Statistics were used in this calculation.
2. The figures have been rounded to the nearest 5 pence at each uprating.
3. The rate of Basic Retirement Pension was increased in the April 1994 uprating by 50 pence for a single pensioner and 70 pence for a couple on account of VAT on fuel. This increase has not been added in to these illustrative figures.

State Pensions

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the rate of state pensions for each year since 1980 for (a) a single pensioner and (b) a couple if the increase had been linked to earnings rather than prices. [17365]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 25 November 1997]: The information requested is in the table.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the impact of Welfare to Work proposals on the number of people claiming invalid care allowance. [20674]

Mr. Denham: The Government have recently launched the New Deal for people with a disability or long-term illness. Under the New Deal up to £195 million, set aside from the Windfall Tax, will be used to finance a range of options aimed at helping participants, in the most effective way possible, to move into or stay in work, Whilst the programme is primarily aimed at helping people with a disability or long-term illness who want to work, it also aims to help carers to balance their responsibilities with work, or to take up work when their caring responsibilities come to and end.

One key element of the New Deal will involve funding a number of innovative schemes to test ways of helping people who want to work, and the bidding process for this part of the programme was launched on 9 December. Up to 20 schemes will be selected, and we anticipate that some of the bids will focus on the needs of carers. In addition we also plan to introduce personal advisers, initially on a modest basis, to help people with a disability on long-term illness to overcome barriers to work. Carers receiving invalid care allowance will also be eligible for help from these personal advisers.

No estimate has been made of the impact of the New Deal on the number of people claiming Invalid Care Allowance.

Child Care

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the criteria for eligibility for claims under the family credit childcare disregard; and for each of the last three years (a) how many families made claims against the disregard, (b) what was the total expenditure, (c) what were the average and the median claims, (d) how many claims were made for care of children aged (i) under one year, (ii) between one and four years and (iii) of school age, (e) how many families claimed for help with child care costs for more than one child and (f) what was the average proportion of total family expenditure on childcare which was offset by family credit childcare disregard. [21835]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The eligibility criteria for the Family Credit childcare disregard are set out in Regulation 13A of the Family Credit (General) Regulations 1987.

The disregard provides help with certain childcare charges for lone parents working 16 hours or more, couples where both are working 16 hours or more and couples where one partner is working (16 hours or more) and the other is incapacitated. It applies in respect of childcare charges of up to £60 per week for children until the September after the child's 11th birthday. The child must be cared for by a registered childminder, nursery/playscheme, out-of-school club, a childcare scheme operating on Crown Property and schools or establishments exempt from registration under section 71 of the Children Act 1989.

From June 1998 the disregard will be enhanced by increasing the maximum childcare costs allowed to £100 for families who incur childcare costs for two or more children of qualifying age and extending the age limit by one year to the September following the child's 12th birthday.

All other information requested is set out in the table below.

Table 1: Family Credit claims for help with childcare

	May 1995	May 1996	May 1997
(a) Number of claims made	33,200	38,800	46,900

Maternity Pay

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women earning above the average income for full-time women workers claimed maternity benefit in 1996–97; and if she will make a statement. [23024]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the form requested.

The Government aim to ensure that the maternity pay arrangements for working women are modern, fair, easy to understand and administer.

The latest information available is for 1995–96. In that year the average income for full-time woman workers was £13,423. 58,000 women earning over that figure received some Statutory Maternity Pay in that year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the savings to public funds if maternity pay were restricted to a maximum of (a) £20,000 and (b) £10,000 a claim. [23048]

Mr. Denham: The information on which to base a reliable estimate is not available. A reliable estimate could be made only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of statutory maternity pay is received by those earning (a) under £100, (b) £100 to £199, (c) £200 to £299, (d) £300 to £399, (e) £400 to £499, (f) £500 to £599 and (g) £600 per week or more. [23215]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

1. Figures are for Great Britain and are rounded to the nearest whole per cent.
2. Weekly earnings are estimated from the amount of Statutory Maternity Pay during the tax year 1995–96 by the amount of statutory maternity pay received as a proportion of all statutory maternity pay paid. This estimate is based on the SMP being paid for 6 weeks at 90 per cent. of pay and for 12 further weeks at the flat rate of SMP, and the whole period of statutory maternity pay falling in one tax year.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the percentage and total number of those who received weekly sums above (a) £5,000, (b) £7,500, (c) £10,000, (d) £15,000 and (e) £20,000 in maternity benefits for the first six weeks in (i) 1994, (ii) 1995, (iii) 1996 and (iv) 1997. [22873]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the form requested and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the average weekly payment in (a) 1994, (b) 1995, (c) 1996 and (d) 1997 for maternity benefits in the first six weeks. [22874]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Average weekly statutory maternity pay inthe first six weeks to those in receipt of statutory maternity pay during each tax year

Notes:
1. Figures are for Great Britain and are rounded to the nearest whole pound.
2. Weekly amounts of SMP are estimated from the amount of SMP during the tax year. This estimate is based on the SMP being paid for 6 weeks at 90 per cent. of pay and for 12 further weeks at the flat rate of SMP, and the whole period of SMP falling in one tax year. This may lead to weekly amounts of SMP being underestimated for people whose claim spans two tax years.

Vaccine-damaged Children

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions his officials have had with the Association of Parents of Vaccine Damaged Children; and if he will make a statement. [22846]

Mr. Denham: Officials have had informal discussions with representatives of the Association of Parents of Vaccine Damaged Children and others with an interest in provision for vaccine damaged people. The Government are committed to considering the Vaccine Damage Payments Scheme in detail in the light of long standing concerns about the scheme.

Ministerial Travel (Trains)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what date she last used a train in the course of her official duties. [22934]

Ms Harman: On 17 September 1997, when I travelled to Cardiff to address a conference entitled "Welfare to Work and Women in Wales" held by Chwarae Teg and the National Council of One Parent Families.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for disability living allowance were made during 1997; and how many were (a) refused on first application, (b) granted after tribunal and (c) granted after appeal. [23214]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the form requested because Disability Living Allowance statistics do not distinguish between reviews and appeals of first applications and reviews and appeals of existing awards. A claim may be successful on review or appeal for a variety of reasons, for example, because additional information has been received or the claimant's condition has deteriorated. Such information as is available is in the table.

Claims for disability allowance during 1997

	Number
Claims received	488,253
Claims refused on first application[1]	66,338
Review decisions[2]	374,494
Reviews that are successful[3]	140,245
Appeal decisions[4]	35,696
Appeals that are successful[5]	19,335

[3] Includes both successful reviews of first applications which were refused and existing awards where the award was increased.
[4] Includes both decisions about first applications which were refused after review and decisions about existing awards.
[5] Includes both first awards of benefit and existing awards where the award was increased.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to how many claimants of disability living allowance payments are made in respect of children under the age of (a) 18 years and (b) 16 years. [23209]

Mr. Denham: On the basis of the latest available information, which relates to November 1997, the numbers are (a) 213,700 and (b) 196,500.

Pensioners (Income Support)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the most recent completed research evaluated by her Department in respect of the take up of income support by pensioners. [23118]

Mr. Denham: As part of our commitment to find the best ways of encouraging take-up of Income Support amongst pensioners, we are currently reviewing relevant research and initiatives completed up to this year, or in progress.

The Department is now commissioning research to identify the most important barriers to pensioners not claiming the Income Support to which they are entitled.

An estimated one million pensioners are not taking up their entitlement to Income Support, and we will be running a number of pilot schemes from April this year to find the best way to help them to claim their entitlement.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her Department's letter of 16 December in respect of her Department's research into the take up of income support by pensioners, who is carrying out the research, which organisations were invited to tender for it and what are her Department's (a) terms of reference and (b) budget for such research. [23116]

Mr. Denham: Research has been commissioned comprising in-depth interviews with pensioners currently claiming and not claiming, but potentially eligible for, Income Support. It will also include focus groups with pensioners and advice agencies. The terms of reference are to explore the reasons for not claiming Income Support and identify possible means of increasing take-up. Exploring the views of those who are already claiming (as well as those who are not) will give an insight into what encourages, as well as discourages, claims for Income Support.

Research commissioned by the Department is usually competitively tendered. In this case, the sample was drawn from existing data, so only the organisations involved in the original survey—the Office for National Statistics (ONS) and Social and Community Planning Research (SCPR)—were invited to tender. A contract worth £66,000 was awarded to Social and Community Planning Research.

A quantitative survey of pensioners potentially eligible for, but not claiming, Income Support is currently being negotiated; details are not yet finalised.

An estimated one million pensioners are not taking up their entitlement to Income Support, and we will be running a number of pilot schemes from April this year to find the best way to help them to claim their entitlement.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the meetings between ministers in her Department and disabled people's organisations to discuss proposals to reform the social security system. [22916]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Although benefits for sickness and disability are included in my Department's Comprehensive Spending Review, no proposals have yet been brought forward. Since the beginning of July 1997, the Secretary of State and Ministers in the Department have had 14 seminars and meetings with organisations representing disabled people. A range of issues were discussed in these meetings.

Date	Meeting
22 July 1997	Meeting with MIND.
29 July 1997	Meeting with Deaf/Blind liaison group.
29 July 1997	Disability Reception with over 40 organisations representing the interests of disabled people.
30 July 1997	Seminar hosted by MENCAP, other organisations also in attendance.
31 July 1997	Meeting with Carer's National Association.
22 October 1997	Seminar hosted by MENCAP, other organisations also in attendance.
23 October 1997	Meeting with the National Federation of the Blind of the UK.
29 October 1997	Seminar hosted by MENCAP, other organisations also in attendance.
10 November 1997	Seminar with over 40 organisations representing the interests of disabled people.
26 November 1997	Meeting with the Disabled Drivers Association.
26 November 1997	Meeting with Rights Now!
9 December 1997	Meeting with Labour Party Disabled Members Group.
17 December 1997	Joint Department of Social Security and Department for Education and Employment awayday including representatives of six organisations.
18 December 1997	Meeting with the All Party Disablement Group.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she expects to table regulations implementing the introduction of cold weather payments; what provisions she intends to make to enable those elderly people using key meters to pay their heating bill; and if she will make a statement. [23210]

Mr. Denham: The Social Fund Winter Fuel Payments Regulations were laid before the House on 8 January and will come into force on 16 January.

Publication of the Regulations followed an announcement on 5 January, which outlined the detail of the scheme. A publicity campaign has now been launched involving media advertising, posters and leaflets in conjunction with Help The Aged, Age Concern and the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux. It is designed to ensure that pensioners are aware of what payments they will receiving, how and when. This information will enable pensioners to heat their homes confident in the knowledge that they will get extra help with their heaviest fuel bill.

People receiving Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, and where their benefit includes one of the pensioner premiums, will receive a payment of £50. Around 1.5 million payments should be made by the end of January.

Other eligible pensioners will receive a payment of £20 or £10. Where there is only one eligible person in a household, or the eligible person is of no fixed abode, they will receive £20; otherwise, each person will receive £10. It is estimated that nearly three and a half million payments will be issued for £20 and almost five million for £10.

Overall, almost ten million payments will be made to over seven million pensioner households this winter, at a cost of around £200 million. The great majority of payments will be made by the end of March.

Information is not held on the method of payment used for heating costs by eligible pensioners, but the announcement that a payment will be made provides certainty that money is coming. Many of the poorest pensioners receive Income Support, or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, and could receive a Cold Weather Payment should there be a spell of very cold weather in their locality.

Disability Benefit

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations she has received from housing associations and related bodies about the proposed changes in disability benefit eligibility; what were the terms of such representations; and if she will make a statement. [22875]

Mr. Denham: We have sought responses from relevant organisations on the best means to translate our objectives for the long-term funding of supported accommodation into a modern, practical and sustainable funding system. Two hundred and six responses were received including 89 from organisations resenting themselves as housing associations or related bodies. The respondents made a number of different observations, which we are considering.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list all overseas visits made since 1 May 1997 on which she or any other Minister in her Department has been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code, indicating (a) who accompanied him or her and (b) the cost to public funds of each such visit. [23264]

Ms Harman: No such visits have been made.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 16 January 1998

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Rabies

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress of Professor Ian Kennedy's review relating to the risks of importing rabies. [22794]

Mr. Rooker: The Advisory Group on Quarantine, under the Chairmanship of Professor Kennedy, has so far met on three occasions.

TREASURY

TESSAs and PEPs

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made on the impact of the limiting of tax relief to £50,000 on investments in TESSAs and PEPs on retirement incomes. [21914]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 22 December 1997]: The impact on retirement income of capping ISAs at £50,000 will depend on the way in which people decide to invest the balance of their investments and their other sources of income.

Tax Avoidance

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements exist for the exchange of information on tax avoidance between the Belgian tax authorities and the Inland Revenue. [22280]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 12 January 1998]: Exchanges of information between the Belgian tax authorities and the Inland Revenue are made under the EC Mutual Assistance Directive (No. 77/799/EEC) and the UK Double Taxation Agreement with Belgium (Statutory Instrument 1987 No. 2053).

Early and Medical Retirement

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to withdraw enhancement benefits for early or medical retirement from members of public sector superannuation schemes later found guilty of, or responsible for, improper activities that involved costs to the relevant employer. [23021]

Mrs. Liddell: Legislation exists to enable public service schemes to forfeit the pension rights of public servants who are convicted of serious offences committed in connection with their employment, or for treason or offences under the Official Secrets Act. Schemes may also have rules or regulations, or rely upon DSS regulations, to use pension rights to recover moneys owed to the employer.

It is a matter for those who run the schemes to determine when and how to apply the relevant legislation and regulations in individual cases.

Correspondence

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 18 December 1997, Official Report, column 246. for what reasons a breakdown of replies signed by his private secretary and himself is not available. [23051]

Dawn Primarolo: The breakdown could have been provided only at disproportionate cost.

Orion Trust

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the relationship between the Orion Trust and the Robinson Family No. 1 Trust. [23655]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I refer the right hon. Member to the first of the answers I gave on 10 December 1997, Official Report, column 575.

Pensions Mis-selling

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of progress made by pension firms in providing redress to the victims of mis-selling. [24328]

Mrs. Liddell: The table shows what progress has been made in the period up to the end of December 1997 by the 41 firms I have been monitoring. Since November, most of these firms have made continuing progress, and between them the firms concerned have now resolved over half of the cases identified for review.

For 29 of these firms, the Personal Investment Authority (PIA) set a deadline of 31 December for 90 per cent. of the most urgent cases to be resolved. It made clear that failure to take all reasonable steps to meet the deadline would be grounds for disciplinary action. The PIA announced today that the initial indications are that while most the firms concerned had indeed made their best endeavours to meet this first deadline, five appear to have failed to do so. It also announced its intention to make further investigations to see what further action is warranted.

The first deadline has now passed and most of the large firms appear to have met it. Those who have not must face the consequences. The PIA is considering what the consequences should be. The 41 firms still have a huge task ahead of them: none of them have yet resolved all their priority cases. For most firms, including the many that are not included in the table, a deadline of 31 December 1998 has been set for completion of this task—for some firms it is as early as 30 April 1998. There will be no let up—from the Government or from the regulators—until it has been achieved, and I will continue to monitor progress month by month.

These deadlines must be met fairly and effectively. The regulators will be monitoring firms' case processing to see that there is no cutting of corners at investors' expense. Failure to conduct the reviews properly is as serious an omission as failure to process cases quickly.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Sport and Schools

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures he is taking to attract private sector money into school sporting activity. [19493]

Mr. Banks: Sportsmatch, the Government-funded business incentive scheme for sport, offers pound for pound matching funding for sponsorship of grass roots sport. One million pound out of the annual Sportsmatch budget of £3.2 million is reserved for schools and schools-related activities. I announced recently that the minimum award for schools has been reduced to £500 to increase the opportunities for securing private sector sponsorship. In addition, the Lottery Sports Fund School Community Sports Initiative is designed to help schools find matching funding, including private sector investment, having already supported 24 projects with awards totalling over £10 million.

Higher Education

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of students who dropped out of higher education courses in (a) 1995–96, and (b) 1996–97; and what estimate he has made of the cost of each such drop out. [21896]

Mr. Hain: The information requested is not yet available centrally. I will write to the hon. Member when the figures for Wales become available in the Spring.

The latest available figures for drop-out among full-time and sandwich first-degree students in former Universities Funding Council institutions in the UK and former polytechnics in England are shown in the following table.

Full-time and sandwich first degree drop-out rates in former UFC universities in the UK and former polytechnics in England[1]

Notes:
[1]Drop-out covers all those leaving degree courses because of exam failure, ill health, personal and other reasons. It includes those switching to a lower level course but it excludes students transferring between degree courses or subjects. The rate for each academic year reflects the progression of students through the whole length of the course. The rate is a weighted sum of the separate university and former polytechnic figures based upon graduate numbers. It therefore excludes first degree students in other UK HE institutions. The calculation for the polytechnic drop-out rate is necessarily approximate because of significant limitations in the underlying data. In practice it has been necessary to estimate drop-out in 1991–92 to 1994–95 from the change in two successive years for a sample of around half of the 29 English former polytechnics.
[2]A range is given because the introduction of a new data source has made it difficult to measure drop-out accurately.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Mentally Ill Offenders

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the guidelines whereby victims of crimes committed by perpetrators diagnosed as being mentally ill are not informed about the release or rehabilitation of those perpetrators. [22859]

Mr. Michael: Both the Home Office and the Department of Health are committed to improving the level of information provided to the victims of crimes committed by people with mental disorders. The issue is complicated by consideration of confidentiality of personal information, but we are undertaking work on this issue and I hope it will be possible to make real progress in the next few months.

Deaths in Police Custody

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the report by the Home Office Police Research Group into deaths in police custody will be published. [23041]

Mr. Michael: Due to unavoidable personnel changes, completion of the report has been delayed and it is not now expected to be published before early summer.

Cannabis

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 18 December 1997, Official Report, column 255, in respect of each of the licences granted for research into the medical use of cannabis, if he will list the publications containing the results indicating the date of publication. [23219]

Mr. George Howarth: This information is not collected.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 18 December 1997, Official Report, column 255, what are the rules which determine when a licence to research and trial the medical use of cannabis will lapse. [23149]

Mr. George Howarth: Research licences are valid for three years in accordance with administrative policy; they may be extended as necessary.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 18 December 1997, Official Report, column 255, where the researchers examining the medical use of cannabis obtain their cannabis. [23221]

Mr. George Howarth: Supplies have been obtained under licence from the Laboratory of the Government Chemist and the University of London.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 18 December 1997, Official Report, column 255, if he will list the licences granted for research, other than medical research, into cannabis, indicating in each case the purpose of the research, the result and if the licence is still valid. [23220]

Mr. George Howarth: There are sixteen licences currently valid for cannabis research not directly related to medical research. They are all held for academic purposes. Information on results is not collected. The licence holders are:

Dr. C. Hunter, University of the West of England;
Dr. G. Hall, De Montfort University;
Professor D. Cowan, Kings College London;
Dr. D. Harvey, University of Oxford;
Professor F. Evans, University of London;
Dr. M. Cole, University of Strathclyde;
Professor M. Rubenstein, Liverpool John Moores University;
Professor P. Redfern, University of Bath;
Dr. R. Morgan, University of Sunderland;
Dr. K. Brain, University of Wales;
Dr. J. Smart, University of Portsmouth;
Dr. P. Dewick, University of Nottingham;

Dr. G. Lockwood, University of Manchester;

Mr. M. Aitken, University of Brighton;

Dr. P. Houghton, Kings College London;

Professor R. Richards, The Robert Gordon University.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 18 December 1997, Official Report, column 255, if all the doctors researching the medical use of cannabis are qualified in pharmacology. [23222]

Mr. George Howarth: This information is not held, as a qualification in pharmacology is not a licensing requirement.

Probation Orders (Drug Dependency)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many probation orders with a requirement of treatment for drug dependency were (a) made and (b) subject to breach proceedings in each of the last 10 years. [23121]

Ms Quin [holding answer 15 January 1998]: Requirements for drug treatment are not identified separately from alcohol treatment in the national probation statistics. The information below was published in "Probation Statistics England and Wales 1996" in September 1997 (table 3.10).

Table: Number of persons commencing probation service supervision by type of additional requirement (England and Wales)[1]

	Residential drugs/alcohol treatment	Non-residential drugs/alcohol treatment	Drugs/alcohol by or under a qualified medical person
1992	50	99	70
1993	269	444	375
1994	338	601	420
1995	374	769	564
1996[2]	334	887	538

[1]New requirements added from 1 October 1992 under the Criminal Justice Act 1991.
[2]Provisional

Crime (Witnesses and Victims)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the review of the treatment of victims and vulnerable witnesses by the criminal justice system which he announced on 13 June 1997 to be completed. [23115]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 15 January 1998]: We hope that the review will be completed shortly and a final report submitted to Ministers in the spring. We will consider the report as quickly as possible thereafter.

Sex Offenders

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements are in place for notification of the UK authorities by other countries of sex offences committed by UK citizens within their jurisdiction. [23113]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 15 January 1998]: While there is no formal requirement for other countries to notify us of convictions of British citizens, I understand that existing arrangements via the International Criminal Police Organisation (Interpol) work well. These allow Interpol member countries, of which there are 178 throughout the world, to use the Interpol Notice system to notify criminal activities of citizens to national authorities.

Interpol International Notices are circulated to all member countries via the Automated Search Facility (ASF) and give the identity particulars, physical description and, where possible, the fingerprints and photograph of an individual.

The Interpol Green Notice is used to seek information on people who have committed or are likely to commit offences affecting several countries and are often used to exchange information on travelling paedophiles. With 178 Interpol member countries, including the principal sex-tourism destinations, this offers an effective and efficient method of information exchange.

It is our policy to encourage the use of the system to inform preventive strategies for the protection of children and vulnerable adults. It is also out intention to use this system to ensure that the proposed Sex Offenders Orders can be used to maximum effect against sex offenders convicted abroad.

Electors

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average number of electors per constituency in the UK; and what effect the application of that United Kingdom population average would have on the numbers of hon. Members in (a) Great Britain, (b) England, (c) Scotland, (d) Wales and (e) Northern Ireland. [23022]

Mr. George Howarth: The average number of electors per constituency in the United Kingdom is 67,077.

The effect of the application of that United Kingdom population average on the number of hon. Members for the component parts of the United Kingdom would be as follows:

	Number
(a) Great Britain	641 (no change)
(b) England	549 (+20)
(c) Scotland	59 (–13)
(d) Wales	33 (–7)
(e) Northern Ireland	18 (no change)

Police (Complaints)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce an independent body to investigate complaints against the Police. [23492]

Mr. Michael: We are committed to finding ways of increasing public confidence in the investigation of complaints against the police, including examining the scope for introducing a greater degree of independence into the system. We are currently considering these issues in the light of the Home Affairs Committee's recently published report on the police complaints and discipline system.

Women Prisoners

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for improving the conditions of women prisoners. [21298]

Ms Quin [holding answer 15 January 1998]: The Prison Service is planning to build a purpose-built women's prison. The preferred location should serve East Midlands, East Anglia and North London.

Additional prison places for women have already been made available by changing the role of existing accommodation at Brockhill, Foston Hall and Highpoint North and by providing new accommodation at New Hall and Eastwood Park.

At six women's prisons, building projects are in progress to maintain or upgrade existing services and facilities. A further 17 projects at these prisons are under consideration.

As part of the Prison Service Review, the Government ensured that the appointment of an Assistant Director for Women Prisoners will focus particularly on the needs of women. This will include the need for offending behaviour programmes for women and special regimes for young female offenders.

The Government are also examining the recommendations of the Chief Inspector's Thematic review.

HMP Weare

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future of HMP Weare. [21300]

Ms Quin [holding answer 15 January 1998]: Her Majesty's Prison Weare was commissioned by the previous administration for an initial period of three years to help the Prison Service accommodate the very high number of prisoners. Its occupation and location will continue to be reviewed on a regular basis.

Prisons (Education Spending)

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about education spending in prisons. [21305]

Ms Quin [holding answer 15 January 1998]: Prison Service expenditure on prisoner education was £36,956,000 in 1995–96, £34,481,000 in 1996–97; and the Service estimates that in 1997–98 it will have spent £36,266,000.

The very high numbers of prisoners combined with the need for financial restraint have placed education budgets under pressure. However, we are committed to the provision of constructive regimes for prisoners and wish to see prison education making a positive and cost-effective contribution to the overall aim of protecting the public from crime. The £43 million which the Government have made available to the Prison Service over this year and next is intended not only to help it house the higher than expected population, but also to maintain quality of regimes.

The Prison Service is helping governors get better value for money by: encouraging them, through the core curriculum and in other ways to focus on what will be effective in reducing crime and recidivism; and integrating education with other regime activities, such as work and offending behaviour courses.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all overseas visits made since 1 May 1997 on which he or any other Minister in his Department has been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code, indicating (a) who accompanied him or her (b) the cost to public funds of each such visit. [23253]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 15 January 1998]: Travelling expenses have been paid in accordance with Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code in respect of visits to the following Crown Dependencies:

Jersey, 11-12 July 1997

My noble Friend Lord Williams accompanied, at public expense, by Lady Williams and two officials. The total cost incurred for this visit was £1,087.

Isle of Man, 15-16 August 1997

My noble Friend Lord Williams accompanied, at public expense, by Lady Williams and two officials. The total cost incurred for this visit was £1,101.

Racial Attacks

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many racial attacks were recorded in each of the past 10 years where the attacker was a white person. [22206]

(2) how many racial attacks were recorded in each of the past 10 years where the victim was a white person. [22207]

Mr. Michael [holding answers 12 January 1998]: The number of racial incidents recorded by the police is submitted by each police force to Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary at the end of each financial year. The figures show racial incidents recorded by the police under the Association of Chief Police Officers' definition of a racial incident:

"any incident in which it appears to the reporting or investigating officer that the complaint involves an element of racial motivation, or any incident which includes an allegation of racial motivation made by any person".

This definition covers all racial incidents, not only racial attacks.

These figures do not include a breakdown, by ethnicity, of either the victim or the offender in a racial incident. However, data on the ethnic classification of victims and offenders involved in racial incidents were collected by the Home Office's Police Research Group for the financial year 1996–97 in connection with a research project on policing racial incidents which was published in November 1997. These data are incomplete because data were not available from all police forces, but the available figures are set out in the table.

Ethnic breakdown of victims/offenders involved in racial incidents recorded by the police in 1996—97[1]

	Number
Victims[2]
White	2,044
Non-white	7,185
Not recorded	262
Total	9,491
Offenders[3]
White	6,180
Non-white	2,613
Not recorded	781
Total	9,574

Notes:
[1] In 4 forces the data relate to the calendar year 1996; in 1 force data relate to a 4 month period from 1 January 1997 to 1 May 1997 and in another data relate to a 6 month period 1 October 1996 to 31 March 1997.
[2] Data available for 36 out of 43 forces in England and Wales.
[3] Data available for 32 out of 43 forces in England and Wales.
For the Metropolitan Police Service the data available relates to suspects rather than offenders.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Cycle Spaces

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many secure cycle spaces there are in her Department. [22681]

Mr. Paul Murphy: There are no separate records maintained on the number of secure cycle spaces at Government premises in Northern Ireland and this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Cyclists are able to leave their bicycles in all Government-owned car parks with the same level of security as for motor vehicles.

Local Enterprise and Development Unit

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the progress of the Local Enterprise and Development Unit in generating self-employment and small business development in the last year. [22741]

Mr. Ingram: LEDU, the Small Business Agency for Northern Ireland, measures the performance of its client companies by way of an annual survey, of which the most recent was completed in March 1997. Its findings reveal that LEDU assisted 1,543 new businesses to start-up during 1996–97, 136 of which represented businesses with potential to engage in future export-led growth (an increase of 72 per cent. over the previous two years).

Jobs created through new business starts were at an all time high of 3,425 and losses due to business closures were at their lowest level since 1991. In overall terms, a net 3,525 increase in full-time employment was recorded in LEDU's client bank; an increase of 15 per cent. over the previous year.

LEDU's growth category businesses have an estimated aggregate annual turnover of £750 million (8.5 per cent. increase from the previous year) and support the employment of 11,670 people (6 per cent. up on the previous year). Overall, LEDU's growth companies increased their sales to external markets by nearly 14 per cent. to an annual value of £300 million and improved their sales per employee by 2 per cent.

European Structural Funds

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on her strategy for re-negotiating European Union Structural Funds after the year 2000. [22745]

Mr. Paul Murphy: A number of key issues regarding the European Union Structural Funds after 1999 have still to be decided by the Member States. Every effort will be made to secure the best deal possible for Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland strategy to achieve this will be developed and implemented in consultation with other interested Whitehall Departments.

Inward Investment

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the progress made by the Industrial Development Board in promoting inward investment since July 1997. [22740]

Mr. Ingram: The Industrial Development Board continues to make steady progress in promoting inward investment in Northern Ireland. Since the beginning of July 1997, 16 projects offering 2,144 jobs and representing promised investment of some £266 million, have been announced by externally owned companies. The climate for investment remains strong and the consolidation of the peace process through a political settlement will have significant impact on the promotion of Northern Ireland as an investment location.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she proposes to announce the results of the Comprehensive Spending Review in respect of (a) Departmental and (b) spending priorities; and if she will make a statement. [22742]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The outcome of the Northern Ireland spending review will not be available until after the national review has been completed. The national review is expected to be concluded in the summer.

Constituency Boundaries

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when her Department will be able to provide statistical information based on the constituency boundaries in force at the General Election in 1997. [22807]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Data from the 1991 Census of Population have been re-worked to the new Parliamentary Constituencies and published in the "1991 Census Monitor for New Parliamentary Constituencies in Northern Ireland," a copy of which has been placed in the House of Commons library. The Department of Economic Development also provides Claimant Unemployment and Census of Employment statistics by Parliamentary Constituency. Certain other socio-economic data are held at postcode level which can be amalgamated to approximate Parliamentary Constituency boundaries as necessary.

Bangor Market Parking Area

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many penalty tickets have been issued and what was the amount paid in relation to those tickets in respect of the Bangor Market parking area now suspended; and what steps her Department is taking to cancel outstanding proceedings and return monies to those who have paid penalties and fines; [22803]

(2) what assessment her Department made of the effect on numbers using public transport to travel to work in Belfast of the introduction of parking charges in Bangor Market; and if she will make a statement. [22804]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Roads Service under its chief executive, Mr. W.J. McCoubrey. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from G.P. Fraser to Mr. Robert McCartney, dated 14 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked the Chief Executive to respond to your recently tabled Parliamentary Questions in connection with the introduction of car parking charges at the Castle Street and Castle Square (Bangor Market) car parks in Bangor, In his absence, I am replying.

Roads Service fully appreciates the need to encourage increased use of public transport and when car parking charges were introduced in the above-mentioned car parks 123 spaces remained free of charge (in the Castle Square car park) for use by all-day parkers. In addition, there are 270 free spaces available in 2 other car parks close to the bus and railway stations. This number is considered adequate to cater for the volume of commuter parking. There is no evidence to suggest that the number of commuters using public transport to travel to Belfast was affected when these charges were in place.

During the period the charges were in place, 1,538 notices were issued in respect of unpaid charges, 792 of which were returned by customers enclosing the appropriate payment. These amounted to a total of £409. No penalty enforcement action is proposed as regard those who have failed to respond to the notices.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Mr. W. J. Allen

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will review the decision by the Department of Finance and Personnel not to exercise its discretion to allow a late transfer of the superannuation rights of Mr. W. J. Allen to the Department of Education; and if she will make a statement about the types of extenuating circumstances which have applied to such transfers. [22806]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Department of Education for Northern Ireland and the Department of Finance and Personnel are examining the issues raised in this matter. It is not possible to respond fully within the specified timescale but a Ministerial reply will be issued as soon as possible.

Maze Prison

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what operating procedures were issued to prison officers dealing with the prisoners' children's Christmas 1997 parties at HM Prison Maze; in what order prisoners and visitors left after the party; and if this procedure was based on previous practice. [22785]

Mr. Ingram: It would not be appropriate for me to answer this now because the security arrangements for the parties are among the matters currently being investigated by a special inquiry team. Their report will be published in due course.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many operators have been trained to use the Rapiscan equipment at HM Prison Maze; and by whom operating instruction is provided. [22783]

Mr. Ingram: A total of 83 staff at HM Prison Maze have been trained in the use of Rapiscan equipment. Training is provided locally by the Training Department.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what use is made of the Rapiscan baggage scanner installed at the main gate staff search area at HM Prison Maze; and if every item of (a) staff and (b) official visitors' baggage and property is scanned. [22782]

Mr. Ingram: All staff and official visitors' baggage must go through the Rapiscan located at the staff search area.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of the provision of new cutlery and crockery at HM Prison Maze; and if she will make a statement. [22791]

Mr. Ingram: The total cost of supplying the metal cutlery and crockery to inmates was £2,800.00. This produces significant savings against the polycarbonate items previously issued as the annual cost of replacement of these was £4,200.00.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what refresher courses in the use of Rapiscan baggage scanner equipment have been provided at HM Prison Maze during the three-year period ending 30 November 1997. [22784]

Mr. Ingram: Once staff have completed the initial Rapiscan training course, their skills in the use of the equipment are kept up to date through frequent use of it and it is considered that refresher training is not required.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what risk assessment was conducted by her Department prior to the introduction of metal cutlery in HM Prison Maze. [22813]

Mr. Ingram: A full risk assessment was carried out jointly by the Health and Safety Officer and Security Governor prior to the issue of metal cutlery in HMP Maze.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prison officers in HM Prison Maze are fully trained in the operation of walk-through metal detection scanners; and how often refresher training courses have taken place during the past three years. [22779]

Mr. Ingram: Records are not available to confirm the numbers of officers trained in the use of this equipment, however walk-through metal detection scanners are no longer in use as there are more efficient and effective detection systems now in place.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for how long the two walk-through metal detection scanners in the prisoner search area at the rear of Visits in HM Prison Maze have been inoperative. [22778]

Mr. Ingram: The two walk-through metal detection scanners referred to have been inoperative for three years. However, staff were issued with hand-held metal detectors from that date.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if there was a full search of HM Prison Maze carried out during the 17 days between the Averill escape and the murder of Mr. Wright. [22789]

Mr. Ingram: A search of HMP Maze was carried out immediately following the Averill escape to ensure that he was not hiding or being hidden. In addition to the search of the residential blocks, all other areas of the prison were searched using trained search dogs, and the external areas were searched by the RUC and Army.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations were made to the Governor of HM Prison Maze on 6 August 1996 concerning difficulties arising from large numbers of prisoners being returned from recreational areas who failed to co-operate with the returning of numbers procedures; and whether action was taken to deal with this problem. [22786]

Mr. Ingram: There is no record of any complaint being made to the Governor in relation to this matter.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many PTZ spy-in-the-sky cameras are installed at HM Prison Maze; if that which gave coverage of H Block 6 where Mr. Wright was murdered was in full working order at the time of the killing; and if she will make a full statement. [22788]

Mr. Ingram: It would not be appropriate for me to answer this now as security arrangements are among the matters currently being investigated by a special inquiry team. Their report will be published in due course.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if Key Function 1.6 of the Business and Corporate Plan relating to HM Prison Maze has been fully implemented, taking account of the 1994 Woodcock Report and the RUC Review; and if she will indicate the number and description of unauthorised articles found during searches of (a) Loyalist and (b) Republican residential areas during the year to 30 November 1997. [22790]

Mr. Ingram: The Northern Ireland Prison Service Corporate and Business Plan does not contain a Key Function 1.6. However, the hon. Member may be referring to the Governor/Headquarters establishment contract of which key function 1.6 refers to searching. An effective searching programme is now in place. The information about the seizure of unauthorised articles in the format requested could not be extracted in time to answer this question. However, I will write separately when the information is available.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what use is made of the Rapiscan baggage scanner installed at the visitors' reception area at HM Prison Maze; and if every item of prisoner visitors' baggage and property is scanned. [22781]

Mr. Ingram: There are standing instructions that all parcels clothing and property entering the prison go through the Rapiscan baggage scanner at visitors' reception.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if there are walk-through metal detection scanners installed and in use at the visitors' reception area at HM Prison Maze. [22780]

Mr. Ingram: There are no walk-through metal detection scanners installed at the visitors' reception area. Staff use hand held metal detectors.

Steele Report

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will now make available to hon. Members the Steele Report on the tunnel escape attempt inquiry. [22787]

Mr. Ingram: No. The Steele report will not be made available.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in what respect the implementation of the best value regime is intended to lead to more responsibility being devolved to local authorities in Northern Ireland. [22777]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The question of greater responsibilities for local authorities will be a matter for consideration as part of the current political talks process. The introduction of a Best Value regime for District Council services in Northern Ireland will encourage greater local accountability by giving District Councils greater flexibility in determining how best to achieve increased efficiency and improve quality of service. To ensure that local government is involved in developing Best Value proposals, a Consultation Paper was published on 10 December 1997 with a closing date of 5 February 1998. A copy of the Paper has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the estimated costs to local government authorities during each of the next five years of the transition from compulsory competitive tendering to best value; and if she will make a statement. [22776]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Government are currently in the process of consulting all interested parties on their proposals for a Best Value regime for District Council services in Northern Ireland. It will be a matter for each District Council to decide how to respond to the challenge of Best Value, and so it is not possible to estimate future costs at present.

Waste Incineration Plants

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many local councils are investigating the development of waste incineration plants; what financial resources have been involved;

whether the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has established a co-ordinating facility to encourage and assist local government attempts; and if she will make a statement. [22800]

Mr. Paul Murphy: While district councils in Northern Ireland continue to explore new options for waste management, none has undertaken a detailed study of the development of waste incineration plants, nor has the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland established any co-ordinating facility to encourage and assist such developments. The Government are currently formulating proposals for a Northern Ireland Waste Management Strategy which will address the issue of how incineration should contribute to the overall management of waste. The Department is considering applications from two companies—NIGEN Ltd. and Belfast Waste Services Ltd.—for planning permission to develop municipal waste incinerators in the Belfast harbour area.

Water Service

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to (a) privatise and (b) alter the present organisational structure of the water service in Northern Ireland. [22756]

Mr. Paul Murphy: No decisions have been taken on the future organisational arrangements for the provision of water and sewerage services in Northern Ireland. The options are currently under review and it is hoped to publish a consultation paper early in 1998.

Parades Commission

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she was notified of the resignation of the Rev. Roy Magee as a member of the Parades Commission; and if she will make a statement. [22493]

Mr. Ingram: Rev. Roy Magee advised my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in a letter dated 5 December of his intention to resign at the end of December.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Overseas Posts (Personnel)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list by overseas post (a) the number of diplomatic staff, (b) the number of British-based non-diplomatic staff and (c) the number of locally recruited staff currently (i) authorised for and (ii) actually based at each overseas post; and if he will indicate in (1) numerical and (2) percentage terms how each of theses authorised and actual numbers have changed since (A) five years ago and (B) 10 years ago. [22819]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I have placed in the Library of the House tables showing for each overseas Post (i) the current FCO authorised establishment of UK-based staff, together with the figures for 1993; and (ii) the number of Locally Engaged staff-years being worked currently, together with the figures for 1993.

Other statistics in the form requested by the hon. Member are not readily available, but figures for the total UK-based staff establishment of the FCO are as follows:

	1998	1993	1988
Home	3,525	4,040	3,775
Overseas	2,272	2,506	2,793
Total	5,797	6,546	6,568

	Change 1998–93		Change 1998–88
	Number	Per cent.	Number	Per cent.
Home	–515	–12.7	–250	–6.6
Overseas	–234	–9.3	–521	–18.7
Total	–749	–11.4	–771	–11.7

Figures for total UK-based staff in post are:

1998	1993	Change 1998–93
Number	Number	Number	Per cent.
5, 571	6,526	–955	–14.6

Figures for 1988 are regrettably not available, nor is a breakdown by location.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list by overseas post (a) the current annual cost and (b) the cost in 1990–91 of employing (i) diplomatic staff, (ii) British-based non-diplomatic staff and (iii) locally recruited staff; and if he will indicate (1) numerically and (2) in percentage terms how each of these costs have changed since 1990–91. [22817]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I have placed in the Library of the House a table showing for each overseas Post the full cost of staff slots at a representative sample of FCO grades (both UK-based and Locally Engaged). The figures show the estimated total cost to the FCO of maintaining an officer at Post in 1995–96 and are the latest available. They comprise: (i) direct costs (such as paybill, National Insurance Contributions, superannuation, allowances, accommodation and travel); (ii) a proportionate share of support functions at Post (such as communications and security); and (iii) a proportionate share of UK administration costs (such as personnel, finance, estate management and IT management).

No directly comparable figures for earlier years are available.

Ethical Foreign Policy

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the role of (a) ethics and (b) morality in his Department's foreign policy. [23130]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 15 January 1998]: As we made clear in the FCO Mission Statement last July, we are committed to work through international forums and bilateral relationships to spread the values of human rights, civil liberties and democracy which we demand for ourselves.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government's ethical foreign policy extends to a concern about how men treat women in other countries. [23212]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 15 January 1998]: We are fully committed to the promotion of human rights for all. We support the efforts of the European Union and other regional groups of which we are a member to promote gender non-discrimination and women's rights. The United Kingdom is an active member of the United Nation's Commission on the Status of Women and the Commission for Human Rights, and is committed to the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action.

European Commission Staff

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the cost of the staff employed by the European Commission who are based in countries outside the European Union; and how many such staff are employed. [23029]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We do not hold this information. I will write to the hon. Member in due course, having contacted the European Commission.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff employed by the European Commission are based in Barbados; what are their functions; and what is their cost to public funds. [23028]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Commission has six Brussels-based staff at its Delegation in Bridgetown, Barbados, as follows: Head of Delegation, two Economic Advisers, Rural Development Administrator, Social Development Adviser and Technical Adviser.

They are mainly involved in administering the Community's aid programme.

The cost of running the Delegation in Barbados comes from an overall budget for Commission Delegations in third countries which in 1996 was ECU 194,558,200 (about £130 million). The UK share of this sum was approximately 15 per cent. or £20 million.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

India (Port Development)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what representations the Government has made to (a) P&O and (b) the Indian Government regarding the proposed port development by P&O at Vadhavan in Dahanu Taluka, India; [22455]

(2) what action she has taken in response to representations she has received regarding the proposed port development by P&O at Vadhavan in Dahanu Taluka, India; [22456]

(3) how many representations received by Her Majesty's Government regarding the proposed port development by P&O at Vadhavan in Dahanu Taluka, India have been (a) in favour of and (b) against the project; [22457]

(4) what representations she has received from P&O regarding their proposed port development at Vadhavan in Dahanu Taluka, India; [22458]

(5) what representations she has received from the people of Dahanu Taluka regarding the proposed port development by P&O at Vadhavan in Dahanu Taluka, India; and if they were in favour of the proposed port development. [22459]

Mrs. Roche: To date, HMG have received seven representations regarding the proposed port development by P&O at Vadhavan. No representations were in favour of the project, and one came indirectly from the local people via the Dahanu Taluka Environment Welfare Association.

All the representations have been replied to by letter (except for the most recent one for which a reply is pending) explaining that the actual award of the contract to P&O Australia is for the Government of Maharashtra to decide and that the UK Government have no role in such an award. The replies also make it clear that the Vadhavan port development is not a British aid-funded project but purely a commercial transaction between P&O Australia and the Government of Maharashtra and, therefore, that interested parties may wish to express their concerns to the Maharashtran Government.

To date there have been no representations from the UK Government to either P&O or the Indian Government regarding the proposed port development at Vadhavan, nor has the UK Government received any representations from P&O with respect to the same issue.

Unsolicited Communications

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make it an offence to transmit unsolicited commercial communications through facsimile machines. [22896]

Mrs. Roche: Measures are already in place to deal with the problem of unsolicited faxes. The telecommunications and telephone selling industries have established a Fax Preference Service to help residential customers reduce the number of faxes they receive. Customers who have a fax machine in their residential premises may register for inclusion in a database against which companies selling via fax "clean" their mailing lists. In addition, under the Telecommunications Act 1984, UK companies using fax marketing are subject to a class licence which contains measures aimed at limiting the nuisance which can be caused by unsolicited faxes. Anyone sending unsolicited faxes must cease doing so to any particular person on receipt of a written request from them, or face possible enforcement action, including the removal of their right to operate a telecoms system, by Oftel.

Launch Aid

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she received a request for launch aid in respect of the A340 500/600 Airbus project; what decision has been made and on what grounds; and if the matter remains under review. [23040]

Mr. Battle: My department received an application for launch aid in respect of the A340-500/600 from British Aerospace on 8 July 1997. The application continues to be considered very carefully.

Official Engagements

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what official engagements the Minister for Consumer Affairs has undertaken since 1 December 1997. [23531]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: I have carried out a wide range of engagements both at the DTI and outside since 1 December in fulfilment of my role as Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs.

Information Technology

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to consolidate the analysis and reporting of IT-related statistics, with particular reference to the economic impact of the industry on GDP and GNP; and what assessments she has made of the current economic impact of the IT industry and the user IT dependent business. [23815]

Mr. Battle: Collection and analysis of statistics on the IT and IT-related industries is the responsibility of the Office for National Statistics (ONS). The surveys conducted by the ONS are mainly to provide information for National Accounts purposes, and not for policy purposes. However, the Department of Trade and Industry regularly has an opportunity to comment on the relevant surveys; some information is collected specifically on behalf of DTI, and the Department has access to the results of the surveys. DTI has no plans at present to alter these arrangements.

The IT, electronics and communications industries have a turnover of over £90 billion and add some £40 billion to UK GDP. They are growing at around seven per cent. per annum. The products and services of this sector impact on nearly all other sectors of the economy to differing degrees. No overall assessment of the economic impact on user IT dependent businesses has been undertaken.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress she has made in setting up the IT Skills Project Office. [23594]

Mrs. Roche: The Skills Project Office was established in July 1997 and submitted its preliminary findings in October 1997. The Office is currently working with Action 2000 on an initial tranche of 12 projects which will help industry tackle the century date change problem, which form part of an overall package of 53 projects aimed at the general IT skills shortage.

Action 2000

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what budget has been allocated to Action 2000. [23627]

Mrs. Roche: Don Cruickshank, Chairman of Action 2000, has been told that the budget for Action 2000 would be up to £1 million per financial year in each of the years 1997–98 to 1999–2000 inclusive. One million pound has been set aside in the current financial year. Before 1998–99 we expect to receive from Mr. Cruickshank his advice on what costed programme is needed, and the budget for future years can then be fixed.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will publish the promotional plans for Action 2000 to promote awareness of the year 2000 problem. [23592]

Mrs. Roche: Action 2000 will shortly be launching its Millennium Bug Campaign and a copy of the promotional material will be placed in the library of the House.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many officials, and at what grade, are working on millennium compliance issues. [23632]

Mrs. Roche: (a) The sources devoted to the millennium compliance of the core Department's own systems are subject to regular change as individual projects start and conclude. Currently, approximately 23 staff from private sector contractors and three in-house staff, two Directors and one range 10, are engaged on such work. (b) The number of staff involved in helping to establish the Department's Action 2000 initiative to support UK businesses is four full time officials, a Director, two range 10, one support staff and one consultant.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when Action 2000 will establish a millennium helpline; and what that telephone number will be. [23626]

Mrs. Roche: Action 2000 plan to announce a package of support aimed primarily at SMEs in the private sector before the end of this month. This will include a millennium hotline and the number will be announced at a press conference.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will place the business plans of Action 2000 in the Library. [23629]

Mrs. Roche: Following the launch of the Millennium Bug Campaign later this month, Action 2000 will be completing its business plan and submitting full costed proposals to the President of the Board of Trade for her approval. Copies of relevant documents will then be placed in the Library.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will publish the terms of the contract of employment with Don Cruickshank of Action 2000. [23631]

Mrs. Roche: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Maidenhead (Mrs. May) on 17 and 19 November 1997, Official Report, columns 50–51 and 190–91.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many members have been appointed to the advisory board of Action 2000. [23628]

Mrs. Roche: The Chairman of Action 2000 is currently consulting about these appointments.

SCOTLAND

Nursing Homes (Residential Allowance)

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to review the residential allowance payable to occupants of private and voluntary residential and nursing homes; if he will extend this payment to occupants of local authority residential and nursing homes; what further initiatives he plans for the residential care sector; and if he will make a statement. [18610]

Mr Keith Bradley: I have been asked to reply.

The Government are undertaking a number of reviews of key policy areas, including a review of the funding of long term care. The future payment of the Income Support Residential Allowance will be included in these reviews.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many officials, and at what grade, are working on millennium compliance issues. [23616]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Department has established a Year 2000 Programme led by the Information Technology Services Agency (ITSA) to co-ordinate the extensive activity across the Department. The Departmental Board, chaired by the Permanent Secretary, is receiving regular reports on progress. An ITSA Director (a senior civil servant) leads the work, reporting to the ITSA Chief Executive who chairs the Project Steering Group. There is a Programme Manager (Unified Grade 6) and a core team of five staff (two SEOs, one HEO and two EOs).

As part of this programme, there are, in addition, a network of Year 2000 teams across all areas of the Department working towards compliance. For some staff Year 2000 is a specific responsibility; for many others it is a priority activity within their normal work area.

National Insurance

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she intends to change the national insurance contribution contracting-out rebates. [24282]

Mr. Denham: I announced on 4 December that I was asking the Government Actuary for this views on the level of the National Insurance contracting-out rebates. He has now responded.

I have considered both the Government Actuary's advice and the impact of trends in the pensions industry on the resources available to the National Insurance Fund. From April 1999, the first opportunity available, I propose to:

> increase the age-related rebates for Appropriate Personal Pensions. The rebate rate at the youngest ages will rise from 3.4 per cent. to 3.8 per cent. with proportionately smaller increases at other ages, with the cap remaining at 9 per cent.; and > adjust the rebate for contracted-out money purchase schemes by replacing the current loading for expenses with the same as that contained within the rebate for contracted-out salary-related schemes.

I will lay an Order outlining these changes before both Houses in due course.

A copy of the Government Actuary's report has been placed in the Library of both Houses.

Pensions

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will publish figures showing the level of the basic pension and SERPS addition for men and women on (a) average full-time earnings for their sex, (b) half average earnings and (c) earnings of £40 a week, and its equivalent as a proportion of average earnings in later years, expressed in today's prices and as a percentage of average earnings in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 2015–16, (iii) 2025–26 and (iv) 2035–36, based on the assumption of (1) price indexation and (2) earnings indexation. [20809]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 15 December 1997]: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the tables. Where someone is earning £40 per week in 1997 terms, as this is well below the lower earnings limit for National Insurance contributions, they would not qualify for any basic Retirement Pension or SERPS in respect of these earnings.

1. Figures provided by the Government Actuary's Department.
2. For all years except the first year, national average earnings and earnings uprating factors are assumed to increase by 1.5 per cent. in real terms per annum. For 1998–99 the latter is assumed to increase by the change in real earnings in the 12 months to September 1997.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the net cost to the Exchequer of raising the state pension in line with earnings in the current year over the pension payable in 1996–97; and what would be the net additional cost if the link between pensions and earnings had not been ended in 1980. [17364]

Mr. Denham [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1997, c. 730-31]: The additional net cost to the Department of raising State pensions in line with earnings from April 1997 is estimated to be £530 million in 1997–98[1].

If the link between pensions and earnings had continued since 1979 to date the additional net cost to the Department in 1997–98 is estimated to be £10.4 billion[2].

Notes:

1. Figure is rounded to £10 million.
2. Figure is rounded to nearest £100 million.
3. These estimates are in respect of contributory RP and linked benefits. The gross costs were estimated by the Government Actuary's Department. Net costs were calculated by using income related benefit offset ratios.

The income related benefit offsets were calculated using specific offset ratios of 27 per cent. and 22 per cent. respectively. The offset ratios were calculated using two models: the 1997–98 Policy Simulation Model based on the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey, and the 1997–98 Income Support Simulation Model based on the May 1996 Quarterly Statistical Enquiry; both uprated to 1997–98 prices, benefits and earnings levels, and calibrated to the forecasts underlying the 1997 Departmental Report.

Domestic Violence

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action is being taken to assist victims of violence and abuse in close relationships and domestic situations. [22421]

Ms Ruddock: Combating violence against women is a key priority for the Ministers for Women and we are working closely with colleagues across Government, with women's organisations and through the Cabinet sub-Committee on Women's Issues, to reduce the level of violence against women. We are working with the Home Office, which has lead responsibility for developing policies to tackle domestic violence, in promoting strategies which combine prevention of violence with support for those who have already been subjected to violence.

The Government's commitment is demonstrated by a wide range of initiatives already underway. The Home Office has set up an inter-departmental review to identify measures to protect vulnerable or intimidated witnesses and to assist them to give evidence in court. The Lord Chancellor's Department's implementation of Part IV of the Family Law Act 1996 affords further protection for women and children, by providing civil remedies to victims of domestic violence. The Department of Health plays a vital role in encouraging inter-agency forums to improve local service co-ordination to influence public attitudes and offer support and relevant information for those who experience domestic violence.

Heating Allowances

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are her estimates of the annual cost of the new heating allowances (a) for pensioners on income support and (b) for other pensioners; and what would be the cost of extending these payments (i) to families who currently qualify for cold weather payments and (ii) to families with children under five years of age who receive in-work benefits. [20625]

Mr. Denham: The additional help of £400 million over this winter and next, announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 25 November 1997, Official Report, columns 773–98, demonstrates the Government's commitment to help the elderly keep warm in their homes during cold weather.

People receiving Income Support in income-based Jobseeker's Allowance during the week commencing 5 January where their benefit includes one of the pensioner premiums will receive a Winter Fuel Payment of £50. Around 1.5 million payments should be made at a cost of over £70 million.

Other eligible pensioners will receive a payment of £20 or £10. Where there is only one eligible person in a household, or the eligible person is of no fixed abode, they will receive £20; otherwise, each person will receive £10. It is estimated that over 3 million payments will be issued for £20 and almost 5 million for £10 at a cost of £120 million.

Overall, almost 10 million payments will be made to over seven million pensioner households at a total cost of around £200 million.

The estimated additional cost of extending the provision and making a £50 payment to each family who: (i) are currently eligible for Cold Weather Payments would be £70 million; or, (ii) have children under five and are receiving in-work benefits of either Family Credit, Housing Benefit (non-IS cases), Council Tax Benefit (non-IS cases) or Disability Working Allowance would be £10 million.

Note: all figures are rounded to the nearest 10 million.

DEFENCE

Trident

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the costs of the Trident missile bodies ordered in 1997 are included in the Trident project cost estimate. [24048]

Mr. George Robertson: The procurement costs of all the UK's Trident missile bodies are included in the Trident acquisition cost estimate, which currently stands at some £12.6 billion.

The maintenance and support costs of the missiles are included in the operating costs of Trident, which have been estimated at an average of £200 million per year over the 30 year lifetime of the system. We are currently looking at the basis of this cost estimate in the light of operating experience and as part of the wider Strategic Defence Review.

I regret that I did not make this distinction clear in my oral reply to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing) on 12 January 1998, Official Report, columns 12–13.

Defence Contracts

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about steps to reclaim moneys from the companies involved in the payment of commissions to Mr. Gordon Foxley relating to defence contracts. [24113]

Mr. Spellar: On 10 December 1997, Official Report, column 553, I announced that normal commercial relations were to be resumed with the second of the three companies involved in the Foxley case, Junghans GmbH of Germany. I am now pleased to announce that a satisfactory settlement has been reached with the final company implicated in this affair, Simmel Difesa Spa who are acting on behalf of the successors to Fratelli Borletti Spa, under which the company will pay an agreed sum in redress to my Department, including interest and a contribution to costs, for payments made contrary to contractual conditions. A statement of contrition by the company, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House, forms part of the agreement with the Ministry of Defence. This settlement provides for normal commercial relations to continue between Simmel and the Ministry of Defence.

Strategic Defence Review

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish those written submissions to the Strategic Defence Review which have been made by individual Service and Ministry of Defence civilian personnel. [24114]

Mr. George Robertson: Written submissions to the SDR from Service and MOD civilian personnel are part of an internal consultation process. I will therefore place a digest of these submissions in the Library of the House as soon as it is available.

Iraq

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about military contingency planning in respect of recent events in Iraq. [24115]

Mr. George Robertson: Iraq continues to obstruct the work of the United Nations Special Commission whose purpose is to ensure that Iraq cannot again threaten its neighbours with weapons of mass destruction. The United Nations Security Council has repeatedly made clear that Iraq must co-operate fully and unreservedly with UNSCOM and comply with relevant Security Council Resolutions. The United Kingdom is working with other members of the Security Council to secure Iraq's co-operation through diplomatic means. But, if these efforts fail, we may need to consider other measures, including the use of force. As a contingency, HMS INVINCIBLE, accompanied by the Royal Fleet Auxiliary FORT VICTORIA, will therefore sail to the Gulf to join other UK forces and those of our allies already operating in the region.

Land Command Restructuring

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to consult hon. Members with a constituency interest over Commander in Chief's Land Command's proposal to relocate HQ 2nd Division at York to Edinburgh in April 2000; if he will list the units currently located at Imphal Barracks in York and the number of (a) service and (b) civilian personnel employed by these units; which of these units will be affected by the Land Command restructuring proposals; and if he will make a statement about the future of Imphal Barracks in York and the Land Command restructuring proposals. [23356]

Mr. Spellar: The Commander in Chief Land Command has set in hand a study of the options for restructuring his Command. These options include a proposal to reduce the number of district headquarters from six to three. The study will include recommendations on the location of a headquarters to administer a proposed region covering Scotland and the North of England, parts of which are at present administered by headquarters of the Fifth Division at Shrewsbury, of the Second Division at York, and of the Scottish District at Edinburgh. This work is still at an early stage and no recommendations have yet been put to Ministers nor decisions been taken. Until the study is complete, it will not be possible to say whether and how any changes may affect Imphal Barracks in York, which at present houses both the headquarters of the Second Division and a number of other units.

The units currently located at Imphal Barracks, York are listed with the number of Service and civilian personnel employed there:

Unit	Number of Service personnel employed	Number of Civilian personnel employed
Headquarters 2 Division	79	143
Headquarters York Garrison	5	73
Headquarters 15 (North East) Brigade	29	20
2 Signal Regiment	437	0
Recruiting and Liaison Staff (East)	4	7
120/123 Army Youth Team	7	0
RA Gunnery Training Team (North)	9	0
240 Signal Squadron	14	20
46 Transport Regiment Royal Logistic Corps	5	33
Periodic Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers Examination Team	8	12
Kings Division Officer Recruiting	0	1
2 Military Intelligence Company	13	0
23 Military Intelligence Section	3	2
33 Section Special Investigation Branch Royal Military Police	9	3
150 Provost Company Royal Military Police (York Detachment)	2	0
Defence Estate Organisation (Works) York	0	4
Army Welfare Service York Branch	0	9

1. Figures for Service personnel employment are as at September 1997.
2. Figures for Civilian personnel employment are as at 1 January 1998.

We will initiate consultation, including with relevant hon. Members, in the normal way once any recommendations have been made.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will place a copy in the Library of the letter sent to suppliers reminding them of their contractual arrangement to ensure their goods are millennium compliant and list the suppliers to whom the letter was sent and the date on which it was sent; [23588]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 22 December, Official Report, column 418, if he will list the names of those suppliers who have been unable to provide the necessary assurances that the equipment they provide is millennium compliant. [23587]

Mr. Spellar: Suppliers under existing contracts are being requested to confirm that equipment being supplied will be Year 2000 compliant. For new procurements a condition of contract is included covering Year 2000 compliance. A copy of the standard letter issued to those suppliers will be placed in the Library of the House.

Liaison with MOD's suppliers occurs at many points across the Department. Local project staff are responsible for ensuring that suppliers who are approached provide satisfactory responses to the request for assurance. There is no central record of suppliers who have been contacted, or of responses from suppliers unable to provide the necessary assurances.

This information could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many officials and at what grade are working on millennium compliance issues. [23589]

Mr. Spellar: Staff at all levels of the MOD are involved in Year 2000 associated tasks ranging from the rescheduling of resources, to the management of Year 2000 programmes and projects, to the checking and correction of systems. When necessary, internal staff resources are being supplemented by suitably skilled consultancy effort.

However, the size and scope of the MOD and of the delegated nature of the way the Department does its business means that detailed information is not centrally available on the numbers and grades of officials involved in Year 2000 remedial work. This information could only be supplied at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimate of the cost to his Department of ensuring that all equipment is millennium compliant. [23586]

Mr. Spellar: The current estimated total cost to MOD of tackling the Year 2000 problem is £200 million. Costs are, however, still being assessed and refined and it is expected that the imminent completion of more costed plans will give a better indication of the accuracy of this estimate.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the procedures which have been carried out on monkeys and great apes, and the number involved in these procedures which have died as a result, at (i) Porton Down and (ii) other establishments for which he is responsible, in each of the last 10 years. [22573]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 16 January 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your question concerning the procedures that have been carried out on monkeys and great apes over the last ten years at Porton Down and other establishments.

No work on great apes has been undertaken at DERA during the last ten years, either at Porton Down or elsewhere. The number of procedures carried out on other non-human primates for 1987 to 1996 is shown in the table below. All figures relate to procedures carried out at Porton Down, except in 1993 when 12 procedures were carried out at the Royal Air Force Institute of Aviation Medicine at Farnborough. It should be noted that the Home Office reporting requirements changed in 1990, and so the number of procedures does not necessarily equate to the number of animals used. All animals were killed humanely at the end of projects in accordance with the relevant Home Office licence.

Number of procedures conducted on non-human primates by year

Year	Number of procedures
1987	117
1988	164
1989	64
1990	80
1991	31
1992	72
1993	48
1994	17
1995	17
1996	14

The number, but not a description, of the procedures is reported annually by species and by primary purpose in the annual returns to the Home Office. The procedures are defined on the project licences, and so a list of the actual procedures carried out could only be obtained by reference to the individual project licences and then not on an annual basis. Further, some of the titles of the procedures relate to classified research programmes and, in the interests of security, could not be disclosed. Nevertheless, many details of DERA's research on non-human primates are available in publications in the open literature.

I hope this is helpful.

CABINET OFFICE

RJB Mining

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will make a statement on his meeting with the Chief Executive of RJB Mining on 9 January. [23230]

Mr. Mandelson: I visited Kellingley to learn at first hand of the issues facing the coal industry and to acquaint the workforce and management with the Government's approach.

Ministerial Visit (Disney World)

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will make a statement on his visit to Disney World earlier in January. [23226]

Mr. Mandelson: Walt Disney are world leaders in entertainment. I went to learn at first hand from their wide experience, as suggested by the Select Committee on Culture, Media and Sport. I had extensive discussions on technical matters, managing the flow of visitors, service facilities, and other aspects of this highly successful public attraction.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what was the cost to public funds of his visit to Disney World in Orlando. [23920]

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what was the cost of his trip to Florida, including the travel and accommodation costs of accompanying staff. [23481]

Mr. Mandelson: The cost of my trip to the United States was approximately £3,450, including the travel and accommodation costs of an accompanying official from the British Consulate General in Miami.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if, and at what cost, he was accompanied to Disney World by Civil Service staff. [23922]

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister without Portfolio how many (a) civil servants and (b) special advisers accompanied him to Disney World; what was the estimated cost of their visit; and what was their schedule of appointments at Disney World. [23925]

Mr. Mandelson: One civil servant from the British Consulate General in Miami accompanied me on my appointments at Disney World. The cost of his travel and accommodation was approximately £307.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what was the cost to public funds of his recent visit to the United States of America; and what part of his visit was for private purposes. [23923]

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Minister without Portfolio how many days he spent in the United States of America on his recent trip; and how many of these were working days. [23480]

Mr. Mandelson: I spent four days in the United States of America. I undertook an official programme on all these days, following a private overnight stay on arrival.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Minister without Portfolio for what reasons he chose to visit Disney World Florida rather than Disney Land Paris; and what was the extra cost of visiting Florida compared with a visit to Paris for the same purpose. [23476]

Mr. Mandelson: I wanted, in particular, to have the opportunity of visiting the Epcot (Educational Prototype Community of Tomorrow) Centre; and was also able to fit in a short programme in Washington arranged for me via the British Embassy. A direct cost comparison is not therefore relevant in this case.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will list the dates of his visit to the United States of America separately identifying the date of his visit to Disney World; and if he will provide a breakdown of his appointments at Disney World. [23931]

Mr. Mandelson: I visited the United States of America on an official programme from 2 to 5 January 1998. On 2 and 3 January I held a series of meetings at Epcot (the Educational Prototype Community of Tomorrow) with Judson Green (President, Walt Disney Attractions), George Kalogridis (Vice President Epcot Operations), Robin Chapman (Director Creative Development Epcot), and Danni Mikler (Manager Epcot International Programmes).

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Mathematics

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish the results for the link items for mathematics for the (a) Third International Mathematics and Sciences Study, (b) Secondary International Mathematics Study and (c) First International Mathematics Study. [22795]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) have commissioned a further analysis of the results of the Third International Mathematics and Science Study which will include some comparisons with the Second International Mathematics Study. QCA plan to make the further analysis publicly available.

Higher Education

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the percentage intake of full-time home undergraduates at each HEFCE funded institution from (a) state schools, (b) fee-paying schools and (c) the FEFC sector, onto (i) arts and social science courses, (ii) science courses and (iii) all courses in (1) 1995 and (2) 1996; and if he will make a statement. [23608]

Dr. Howells: The data requested are not available centrally. The Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) collects details of the course subject and previous educational establishment of applicants and accepted applicants to each higher education establishment but these data are published only at the sector level. Information on the previous educational establishment of accepted applicants is published in the UCAS Annual Report. The latest published data are for applicants accepted for autumn 1996 entry and are shown in the table. It is for individual universities and colleges to decide whether or not such data should be made available for their own institution With the authorisation of the institutions involved, UCAS can provide these data separately for each individual establishment. The hon. Member might therefore care to contact UCAS directly.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list his responsibilities for millennium compliance in the light of the Prime Minister's announcement of his new responsibilities. [23623]

Dr. David Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a similar question from the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 18 December 1997, Official Report, column 318.

The Ministerial Group on the Millennium Date Change which the Prime Minister announced on 27 November will oversee work being done in both the public and private sectors. I have been charged with convening a sub-group to focus on progress in dealing with the Year 2000 problem in central Government departments and agencies. Responsibilities within Government remain unchanged with individual departments being ultimately responsible for their own areas.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 4 December 1997, Official Report, column 325, if he will place (a) a copy of his letter to colleagues and (b) copies of each department's response to his request for further information on the skills issue and millennium compliance in the Library. [23613]

Dr. David Clark: Yes. I will place this information in the libraries of the House and publish it on the Internet shortly.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give details of all engagements he has undertaken directly in connection with millennium compliance issues since 1 November. [23624]

Dr. David Clark: I, and my officials, have had a number of meetings with interested bodies, the media, colleagues and officials.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 4 December, Official Report, column 324, if he will list the departments whose plans indicate that PC replacement plans will not be completed until after June 1999. [23614]

Dr. David Clark: This information is included in the plans which were placed in the libraries of the House following my statement on 27 November.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many officials in his Department, and at what grade, are working on millennium compliance issues. [23615]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Within the Cabinet Office and its Agencies, there are 41 officials working on millennium compliance issues either as part of their normal duties or in a full time capacity; details are as follows:

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Sewerage

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many water companies have proscribed the use of ribbed thin wall plastic piping in sewerage installations. [22758]

Angela Eagle: Of the ten major water and sewerage companies, two have suspended the use of ribbed thin wall plastic piping and a third has placed a temporary restriction on its use. The remaining seven companies allow a range of pipe materials for sewerage installations. Choice of pipe material depends on a number of factors including relevant site conditions.

Urban Foxes

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate his Department has made of the growth of the urban fox population in the United Kingdom over the last 30 years. [22820]

Angela Eagle: Reliable data are not available before 1980. Since 1980, detailed population surveys were undertaken in nine English towns and form the results of these surveys the predicted urban fox population in 1994 was estimated at 33,000, made up of 30,000 for England, 2,900 for Scotland and 100 for Wales.

A study in 1987 showed that urban foxes tend to be self-regulating, and it also indicated that they have little effect on rural populations, with low net emigration. Recently, the decline in reported sightings suggests that the number of urban foxes has fallen in some cities.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the public health risks which arise from urban fox populations. [22822]

Angela Eagle: There are very few health risks resulting from urban fox populations, and there is very little cause for concern.

Foxes in theory could transmit certain infections, such as toxocariasis, hydatid disease or pasteurellosis to man. However, from the limited data available, it is evident that foxes have not been implicated in any cases of these diseases among humans.

There is currently no rabies in the terrestrial mammal population of the British Isles.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what estimate he has made of the number of occasions over a five-year period on which a driver of an HGV can expect to be stopped for a roadside check by the Vehicle Inspectorate; [22832]

(2) what proportion of vehicles stopped by the Vehicle Inspectorate at roadside checks that were found to be unroadworthy or otherwise in breach of regulations, were registered outside the United Kingdom. [22834]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Vehicle Inspectorate Executive Agency, Mr. Ron Oliver, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mr. Tom Brake, dated 16 January 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about the estimated number of occasions over a 5-year period on which a driver of an HGV can expect to be stopped for a roadside check by the Vehicle Inspectorate and what proportion of vehicle stopped by the Inspectorate found to be unroadworthy or otherwise in breach of regulations, were registered outside the United Kingdom.

There are approximately 406,500 HGVs (i.e., vehicles with a design gross weight in excess of 3,500 kgs) operating annually on a commercial basis in the UK. The Inspectorate carries out in the region of 360,000 roadside checks of HGVs a year. On this basis it is estimated that an HGV driver could be stopped between 4 or 5 time over a 5-year period by the Inspectorate. I should add that the Inspectorate's examiners target their checks to find the more serious defects and breaches of law.

Details of vehicles registered outside the UK found to be unroadworthy or in breach of regulations at Inspectorate roadside checks during 1996–97 are shown below:

	Number	Number
Number of vehicles found to be unroadworthy/in breach of regulations	35,104	(34,537)
Number of above vehicles registered outside UK	1,651	(1,084)
Percentage of above registered outside UK	4.7	(3.1)

1. Figures exclude vehicles prohibited as a result of an instrumented smoke only check as this data does not distinguish if a vehicle is registered outside the UK.
2. The figures include prohibitions issued for drivers' hours offences which are only issued to vehicles registered outside the UK. Figures in brackets exclude these prohibitions.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce legislation to impound heavy goods vehicles found at roadside checks to be in unsafe condition. [22833]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are developing a scheme for the detention of illegally operated heavy goods vehicles, but this would require primary legislation and there would first need to be a public consultation exercise. There are still a number of practical issues to be resolved before we can go out to consultation and these are being addressed.

Rail Services

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to set targets for increasing the proportion of passengers and freight carried by rail. [22836]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We want to see more passengers and freight travel by rail. Our White Paper on integrated transport will set out our proposals for achieving this objective.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to increase the role of local authorities in delivering an integrated rail service. [22838]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are committed to establishing a national rail authority and are reviewing the role of local government in transport planning. Our proposals will be published in our White Paper on integrated transport policy.

Rail Network

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will set up a new rail authority to co-ordinate and develop the rail network; [22835]

(2) what plans he has to create a national rail development plan to modernise and expand the network. [22837]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are committed to establishing a national rail authority, to provide a clear, coherent and strategic programme for the development of the railways.

Passenger Transport Authorities

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will extend the Passenger Transport Authority Model to London and other areas. [22839]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The institutions required for delivering an integrated transport policy are being considered carefully and we shall be setting out our policies in the White Paper due to be published later this year. The specific proposals for restructuring transport in London under a Greater London Authority (GLA) will take this work into account. They will be set out in the GLA White Paper which we intend to publish in March.

Coastguard

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment he has made of the capability of the undersea telecoms link between the Shetland Islands and the mainland for carrying clear traffic for the purpose of Her Majesty's Coastguard; and when he expects the link to be mended; [22847]

(2) how many consultants were employed by the Coastguard Agency in (a) 1996–97 and (b) 1997–98; in what capacity; and at what cost. [22844]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Coastguard Agency, Mr. C. Harris, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 16 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the Coastguard service.

The Coastguard Agency employed 22 consultants in 1996–97 at a cost of £525,455 and have so far employed 22 consultants in 1997–98 at a cost to-date of £330,832. Since April 1996, these consultants have been involved in a wide range of projects including IT training and development, paybill modelling, health and safety, Coastguard property and assisting the Marine Pollution Control Unit with annual and table top exercises.

HM Coastguard has microwave telecom links between Shetland and the Scottish mainland provided by British Telecom rather than undersea submarine cable. My Regional Controller for North and East Scotland has confirmed that there are no defects or restrictions on operators due to British Telecom lines which effect the communication links of HM Coastguard.

Kerosene

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions his Department has had with (a) the European Commission and (b) the Treasury regarding the introduction of taxation on Kerosene. [23199]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Council agreed, on 9 June 1997, a Resolution calling for the European Commission to study the economic and environmental effects in the EU of taxing aviation kerosene. My Department will continue its dialogue with the Commission as the study progresses and keep in regular contact with the Treasury and other interested Departments on this issue.

Motorcycling

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 18 December 1997, Official Report, column 267, if he will set up a motorcycle strategy group to consider the issues raised at the special motorcycling seminar held at his Department on 25 November 1997. [23039]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 18 December 1997, Official Report, column 267.

We will consider between now and the publication of the White Paper on Integrated Transport Policy the best structure for consulting effectively and widely about motorcycling issues.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what contingency plans he has made in the event of millennium compliance failures in any transportation system in the United Kingdom. [23634]

Angela Eagle: Millennium compliance is the responsibility of the relevant transport industry.

My Department has worked closely with the railway industry to ensure that arrangements are in place for millennium compliance. The Rail Millennium Programme Office has been set up to manage an industry-wide programme of projects to ensure compliance. Part of this programme is to assess the risks of non compliance and the need for any specific contingency plans.

My officials are working with London Transport to ensure, as far as possible, that millennium compliance failures do not occur and to ensure that sensible contingency measures are put in place in good time.

As regards aviation, my Department has notified all major UK airlines, airports and associated industry organisations of the need to consider whether their systems will be affected by the problem and advised them to take any remedial action necessary. We have also been in close and regular contact with the Civil Aviation Authority (including National Air Traffic Services) who have been requested to consider the problem and take any necessary action with other relevant sectors of the aviation industry. The situation has been and will continue to be monitored on a regular basis.

The Highways Agency is actively considering the issue, including the need for contingency plans, in relation to the trunk road network and is liaising with local highway authorities.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the total cost of millennium compliance to his Department broken down between transport, environment and the regions. [23633]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions estimates the total cost of millennium compliance to his Department to be £17.9 million (excluding Government Offices for the Regions).

Since the merger of the former Transport and Environment Departments it is no longer possible to differentiate between the central costs for transport and environment. Of the £17.95 million, £2.2 million is estimated for DETR (Central).

Of the remaining £15.75 million, £15.55 million is estimated for the former Transport Executive Agencies and £200 thousand for the former Environment Executive Agencies.

The results of a scoping exercise for the Government Offices for the Regions should be available in April 1998. Costs are not expected to exceed existing PES provision.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what contingency arrangements have been made for the Coastguard Agency in the event of any millennium compliance failure; [23635]

(2) what estimate he has made of the cost of millennium compliance for the Coastguard Agency. [23636]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Coastguard Agency, Mr. C. J Harris, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Cheryl Gillian, dated 16 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the issue of millennium compliance.

A programme of replacing all existing PCs and Servers that are not compliant is currently under way and will be completed by the end of the current financial year. Statements of compliance have been obtained from all of the Agency's hardware suppliers and sample machines tested.

Statements of compliance have also been received from all providers of bespoke software. All are or will be compliant with the exception of the Operations Rooms Command and Control System (ADAS) and a Marine Pollution Control Unit package (BOSCA). We are awaiting a statement of compliance regarding the latter, but no problems are anticipated. The Coastguard Agency is currently reviewing the replacement of the ADAS system, and a decision on the way forward is expected shortly. Compliance should be achieved during 1999.

I acknowledge that certain domestic devices, such as lifts, escalators etc., have imbedded chips which may also have a year 2000 compliance problem. This area is being investigated by the Agency's Estate Services Branch who are awaiting statements of compliance. It is anticipated that all devices will be compliant by 31 March.

To date, the estimated cost of the compliance exercise for the above programmes is £170k.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many officials, and at what grade, are working on millennium compliance issues. [23637]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The central DETR co-ordination programme has a programme manager at G7 level and two co-ordinators at SEO level with additional support equivalent to one HEO. Each Business Unit within DETR (central) is responsible for ensuring compliance of their own business critical systems. It is estimated that a total of 50 officials between EO and G5 are working on millennium compliance issues on a part time basis. (Please see following table for breakdown by grade.)

Executive Agencies

The Executive Agencies have a varying number of officials dealing with millennium compliance issues depending on the size of the problem within each agency. Approximate totals are given in the following table.

Government Office for the Regions

The Government Office Central Unit has established a central committee to address millennium issues and there are a variety of officials at different grades working on the issues within each government office. Again, approximate totals are given in the following table.

Officials working on Millennium Compliance Issues

	G5	G6	G7	SEO	HEO	EO	AO
DETR(C)	1	—	3	8	26	12	—
Executive Agencies	5	1	6	10	11	8	5
Government Offices	—	—	1	1	14	—	—

All figures exclude contractors.

Unitary Development Plans

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made towards national coverage of local plans and unitary development plans. [23806]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department has published a report today which gives details of progress made towards adoption of plans by individual local authorities in England. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House. AT the end of December 1997, 53 per cent. of local authorities had an adopted Local Plan or Unitary Development Plan in place. Measures to speed up the procedures under which such plans are prepared and adopted were included in the statement on Modernising Planning issued by my hon. Friend the Minister for Regions, Regeneration and Planning on 15 January 1998, Official Report, column 262.

M. V. Pride of Bilbao

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the result of inquiries made by the Marine Safety Agency into the circumstances of the 17 hour delay in the completion of the journey commenced by M. V. Pride of Bilbao on 3 January. [23590]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Marine Safety Agency, Mr. R. M. Bradley to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Peter Viggers, dated 16 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your Question about the vessel "Pride of Bilbao".

The vessel recently completed a voyage from Bilbao to Portsmouth in poor weather conditions which worsened as the passage continued. The Master of the vessel was subsequently interviewed by MSA officials. It was established that weather forecasts were available at the outset of the voyage and it was found that it was not unreasonable, on safety grounds, for the voyage to have been commenced.

There were twelve reported injuries, the worst of which was a broken arm; no damage to the ship was sustained. All of the injuries sustained have been reported to the Marine Accident Investigation Branch for their consideration.

The MSA is content that the Master did not put to sea in overly adverse conditions and did not compromise safety in any part of the voyage.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Civil Cases (Fast Track Procedure)

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is his policy on the creation of a fast track procedure for certain types of civil cases; and what plans he has to modify the burden of proof which is carried by the plaintiff. [22359]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor's Department issued a working paper on judicial case management in July 1997, which included proposals for a fast track procedure. A further paper was published at the end of November proposing a limit of £15,000 for fast track cases. It is planned to implement the fast track in April 1999 as part of the Lord Chancellor's Civil Justice Reforms. There are no current plans to change the existing requirements of the burden of proof as they relate to the plaintiff in a civil legal action.

Legal Aid

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if initial investigations required to determine the chances of a case succeeding will be covered by the insurance policy, in circumstances where it is decided not to proceed with a case under his proposed reforms of legal aid. [22434]

Mr. Hoon: Whether initial investigation costs are covered by an insurance policy if a case does not proceed would depend on the terms of the particular insurance policy.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what measures he intends to introduce under his legal aid reforms to ensure that fixing costs will not damage the prospects of injury victims winning cases? [22362]

Mr. Hoon: I am very aware of the concerns expressed about the implications of the fast track fixed costs proposals. In considering the future of a fixed costs scheme, a balance needs to be achieved between the desirable aims of making litigation more certain and affordable, with the need to allow parties to litigate on equal terms. Any system introduced will take account of these factors.

Loser Pays All Principle

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what measures he will take under his legal aid reforms to ensure that removing the principles of loser pays all will not encourage unnecessary delays in the judicial process. [22433]

Mr. Hoon: I have no proposals to amend the principle that the "loser pays all" under the legal aid reforms that we have announced. Any proposals to apply fixed recoverable costs in fast track cases, as part of the civil justice reforms, will, in common with the intention of the fast track, attempt to reduce delay.

Magistrates (Wales)

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will give a breakdown of magistrate benches in Wales according to declared political allegiance. [22107]

Mr. Hoon: On the latest information available, the political breakdown of benches in Wales, listed under Lord Chancellor Advisory Committee areas is:

Declared political allegiances by Welsh Advisory Committee area and bench

HEALTH

Private Clinics

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many private sector clinic registrations were cancelled by health authorities, because national and local standards were not being met in each of the last five years. [23007]

Mr. Milburn: Certain private clinics must be registered as nursing homes under the Registered Homes Act 1984. Information on the number of nursing homes deregistered is given in the table. The information collected centrally does not enable the number of private clinics included in these figures to be identified.

Year	Number of nursing homes deregistered
1992	7
1993	11
1994	7
1995	15
1996	6

These figures are taken from the National List of Cancelled Registrations and cover all nursing homes registered under Part II of the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the adequacy of health authorities' inspections of private sector clinics and hospitals. [23008]

Mr. Milburn: Health authorities are required by law to inspect private hospitals and certain clinics at least twice a year, and, in general, give this task appropriate priority within the resources available.

Children Leaving Care

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the standard of services provided to children leaving care. [23110]

Mr. Boateng: In February 1997 the Social Services Inspectorate (SSI) published "When Leaving Home is Leaving Care . . ." following a major inspection of leaving care and after care services in nine social services departments. The inspection was based on a comprehensive set of standards drawn up by SSI. Given that such a major inspection has been conducted relatively recently, there are no current plans to mount a further review in the near future. Copies of "When Leaving Home is Leaving Care" are available in the Library.

NHS Staff (Territorial Army)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS and NHS Trust employees are members of the Territorial Army; and what percentage this is of the total number of employees. [23326]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is not available centrally. National Health Service Executive guidance to all NHS Employers in 1997 encouraged the release of staff for duties in the Reserve Forces. Copies of this guidance have been placed in the Library.

Breast Cancer Screening

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for screening women for breast cancer in (a) the 30 to 40 years and (b) over 50 years age groups. [23520]

Mr. Boateng: There is at present no evidence to suggest that screening all women aged 30 to 40 would be effective in reducing mortality from breast cancer, and the Government have no current plans to introduce screening for this age group. However, we are currently funding research into the effectiveness of screening women aged 40 to 50. Any decision to introduce screening for this age group will need to be based on the outcome of this research.

The National Health Service Breast Screening Programme was set up in 1988 and invites all women aged between 50 and 64 for screening every three years, with screening for older women available three yearly on request. The Government are funding research into changes which might improve the quality of the service to women, including reducing the screening interval, taking two mammographic views of the breast at all screening rounds, and routinely inviting women aged 65 to 69 for screening.

NHS Board Members

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Reigate of 26 November 1997 about appointments as chairmen and non-executive directors of NHS Boards. [22947]

Mr. Milburn: I replied to the hon. Member's letter on 13 January.

Continence Products (VAT)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he took to inform community continence services of the Treasury's decision on 13 August 1997 to impose VAT on home deliveries of continence products. [22842]

Mr. Boateng: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise issued a News Release on 13 August 1997 regarding the Government's intention to bring forward legislation to clarify the law on the Value Added Tax treatment of drugs and medical appliances. They copied this to the National Health Service Executive on the same day. HM Customs and Excise subsequently, during September, notified the NHS of the Government's intention.

Stretton Hall, Great Glen

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the redevelopment of Stretton Hall, Great Glen, with particular reference to his Department's immunity from planning regulations. [23383]

Mr. Milburn: The sale of Stretton Hall Hospital in Leicestershire is being managed by the Trent Regional Office of the National Health Service Executive. Outline planning consent has been obtained involving 100 new dwellings, and a sale has been agreed subject to obtaining detailed planning consent. The purchaser will have to comply with all planning legislation affecting the development.

Health authorities lost Crown immunity in 1991. On the abolition of regional health authorities in 1996, some property, which has since been managed by the NHS Executive, regained Crown immunity. This currently applies to Stretton Hall Hospital, pending its sale. However, it is not the Department's policy to take advantage of this situation. NHS Estates, an agency of the Department of Health, with English Heritage have produced guidance which is expected to be followed by all regional offices of the NHS Executive in respect of the care and disposal of historic buildings.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what contingency arrangements have been made for the Ambulance Service in the event of millennium compliance failure. [23639]

Mr. Milburn: The National Health Service Executive's Year 2000 Programme are working to eliminate risk through the identification and management of potential risks.

It is a priority for NHS Organisations to develop contingency plans and an Ambulance Service forum is being established, through NHS regional offices, to address the issues.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost of millennium compliance for the Ambulance Service. [23640]

Mr. Milburn: No estimates have been made.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by what date all (a) kidney dialysis machines, (b) intensive care cots for premature babies and (c) intensive care equipment will be millennium compliant; and what will be the cost of compliance. [23646]

Mr. Milburn: By 31 December 1998 each separate National Health Service organisation should have completed major activities where all critical systems are ready and fully tested, or detailed plans made for coping with those systems or equipment that cannot be repaired or replaced in time.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to be able to estimate accurately the costs of millennium compliance in the NHS. [23644]

Mr. Milburn: Information should be available by end of April 1998.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he wrote to suppliers to the NHS reminding them of the necessity for all equipment to be millennium compliant; and if he will place a copy of the letter in the Library and list the names of suppliers he has sent it to and the date it was sent. [23645]

Mr. Milburn: The Medical Devices Agency wrote in 1996, and again in 1997, to the main United Kingdom trade associations concerned with medical devices. This has been followed up with a letter to many individual manufacturers. The National Health Service Supplies Authority are in the process of writing to approximately 4,000 supplier organisations with whom the NHS has a national contract. The letter will be sent by 31 January 1998.

The NHS Executive wrote in October 1997 to 30 leading suppliers of Information Systems to the acute and community trusts and the main suppliers of general practitioner systems. Copies of letters and addressees will be placed in the Library.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many officials, and at what grade, are working on millennium compliance issues. [23641]

Mr. Milburn: The Department of Health, including its agencies, currently employs a total of 44 full time equivalent members of staff of various grades on Year 2000 related work. The Year 2000 programme within the Department of Health is co-ordinated by the head of the Applications Development and Support branch, who reports to the senior Departmental information technology steering committee.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what resources are being made available to the NHS's Adverse Incident Centre to deal with any failures to systems through millennium compliance failures. [23638]

Ms Jowell: The Medical Devices Agency expects the majority of medical devices to be millennium compliant already. Therefore the number of adverse incidents involving millennium compliance failures is likely to be low. As the number of reports involving millennium compliance failures is expected to be a small fraction of the total number of adverse incident reports, we see no need to allocate extra resources to the Adverse Incident Centre to deal specifically with millennium compliance failures.

Workforce Standing Advisory Committee

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new medical schools he anticipates will be required to implement the recommendations of the Medical Workforce Standing Advisory Committee. [23174]

Mr. Milburn: One of the main recommendations in the Third Report of the Medical Workforce Standing Advisory Committee (MWSAC) is a 20 per cent. increase in the annual intake to United Kingdom medical schools. This recommendation has very significant implications, and needs careful examination. The Government will announce their decisions on all of MWSAC's recommendations in a few months' time, in the light of the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review (CSR).

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's policy towards the recommendations of the Medical Workforce Standing Advisory Committee. [23175]

Mr. Milburn: The Medical Workforce Standing Advisory Committee's (MWSAC) main recommendations are for the annual intake to United Kingdom medical schools to increase by 1,000, a 20 per cent. increase over the target of 4,970 for the year 2000, together with a range of measures to improve the recruitment and retention of doctors.

A number of MWSAC's recommendations chime with the Government's own thinking and should be welcomed. But the recommendation on increased medical school intake has very significant implications, and will need careful examination.

The Government will announce their decisions on all of MWSAC's recommendations in a few months' time in the light of the Comprehensive Sending Review.

Dental Services

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase the number of NHS dentists in the South Devon area. [23386]

Mr. Milburn: On 1 January we announced a further £10 million to continue the Government's drive to improve access to National Health Service dentistry and tackle oral health inequalities through our Investing in Dentistry initiative. This focuses help on those areas of the country where these problems are most acute, by providing grants to enable dentists to expand existing practices and set up new ones.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Sewers

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will amend the Building Regulations to comply with section 104 of the Water Industries Act 1991 to ensure that all sewers are built by developers to an adoptable standard. [22841]

Mr. Raynsford: There are no plans to amend the Building Regulations to require that all sewers are built to a standard necessary for them to be adopted under an agreement made under section 104 of the Water Industry Act 1991. However, in 1986, the Department of the Environment in conjunction with the Welsh Office carried out a review of water and sewerage law and considered the automatic adoption of all new sewers undertakers. It was concluded that this could not be implemented as it would have involved vesting existing private sewers with the water authorities of the time and would have placed an undue financial burden on them and hence their customers.

London Underground

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for each of the last five years (a) the number of penalty fares issued by London Underground Ltd. and (b) the income generated by penalty fares issued by London Underground Ltd. [23217]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The operation of the Penalty Fares Scheme is a matter for London Underground. The table details the information provided by London Underground for the completed years since the scheme was launched on 4 April 1994.

Year	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Number of penalty fares issued	173,899	145,410	203,650
Income from penalty fares	£1.1 million	£1 million	£1.5 million

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many appeals against penalty fares issued by London Underground Ltd. were made in each of the last five years; and what proportion of these were successful in each of those years. [23218]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The operation of the Penalty Fares Scheme is a matter for London Underground. The table details the information provided by London Underground for the completed years since the scheme was launched on 4 April 1994.

Year	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Appeals processed[1]	26,318	21,771	26,117
Percentage of appeals that were successful	25 per cent.	26 per cent.	35 per cent.

[1] Of the appeals processed approximately 10–15 per cent. are further correspondence or re-appeals.

Duty Free Sales

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the effect of the abolition of duty free on the cost of air travel and ferry travel. [23200]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are currently in the process of examining the possible effects of abolition of duty free sales, including the implications for air travel and ferry travel.

West Coast Main Line

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number of accidents involving staff and contractors working on the West Coast Main Line for each of the last five years. [23205]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I regret that this information is not available in the format requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The accident reporting regime changed in 1996 when the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1995 came into effect. In addition, accidents are recorded not by train route but by which company reported the accident. In the majority of cases, this is Railtrack, as infrastructure controller, even where Railtrack staff were not involved in the accident. Accidents are recorded against relevant Railtrack zones. The West Coast Main Line covers several such zones and some of the boundaries have changed since the creation of Railtrack in April 1994.

Gatwick Airport

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the recommendations made by the Gatwick Airport close parallel runway study group; [23202]

(2) what work his Department is currently undertaking in relation to the possibility of a close parallel runway at Gatwick Airport. [23201]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department is not undertaking any work in relation to the possibility of developing a close parallel runway at Gatwick Airport. The work which the previous administration asked BAA to undertake into this concept following publication of the report on Runway Capacity to Serve the South East (RUCATSE) is not yet complete. We have asked BAA to put the work on hold so that we can consider how to take this issue forward in the light of the integrated transport White Paper, which we expect to publish in the Spring.

Office of Passenger Rail Franchising

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list by train operating company the punctuality and reliability figures compiled by OPRAF for each of the last 12 months. [23204]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This information is included in the quarterly bulletins of franchise operators' performance issued by the Franchising Director, the most recent of which was published on 15 January. The bulletins are in the Library of the House.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many local authorities are expected to be brought into liability for VAT by exceeding the 5 per cent. de minimis partial exemption limit; and how he intends that the additional cost to such authorities will be funded. [22992]

Mr. Raynsford: The provisional Local Government Revenue Finance Settlement for 1998–99 takes into account local authorities' VAT liability for their statutory responsibilities. The previous Government introduced a change in VAT partial exemption rules which affected VAT liability on local authorities' exempt business activities. This came into effect on 1 April 1997, in order to ensure that local authorities accurately account for VAT and are treated on a similar basis to the private sector. Local authorities calculate the extent to which they have exceeded the 5 per cent. limit on an annual basis, and must make an adjustment in the next VAT return after the year end. The effects of the change in VAT partial exemption rules will not therefore be known until 1998–99.

We expect councils to find the budget for any effects of this change from within their provision for 1998–99.

Lost Property (Rail Stations)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidelines exist for the provision of a lost property service in railway stations. [23195]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The adoption of a voluntary code of practice aimed at improving the level of service to those customers who lose property in the course of a rail journey is currently being considered by the train operating companies who lease the majority of stations, and by Railtrack who manage the 14 major stations on the network. It is expected that it will come into operation in the spring.

Staying Put Scheme

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what level of grant support is envisaged for the Staying Put scheme; and if he will make a statement. [23100]

Mr. Raynsford: Government funding for home improvement agencies, also known as "Staying Put" or "Care and Repair" schemes, has been increased by £¾ million (17 per cent.) to £5.214 million for 1998–99. Bids for funding for individual agencies are currently being assessed and we expect to announce the outcome next month.

Leasehold Valuation Tribunals

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he is taking to review the work of Leasehold Valuation Tribunals. [23328]

Ms Armstrong: We are monitoring closely the work of the Leasehold Valuation Tribunals in relation to their new jurisdiction for determining disputes over service charges and applications for the appointment of a manager which commenced on 1 September. We will consider carefully whether any changes in procedure are needed in the light of experience.

Leasehold Reform

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Government expect to bring forward a consultation paper on options for leasehold reform. [23663]

Ms Armstrong: We are currently considering the scope and practicability of possible new measures to assist leaseholders. We expect to make an announcement about our proposals and invite comments from interested parties in the Spring.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the withholding of information from the public register of applications for consent to release genetically modified organisms on the grounds of prevention of damage to the environment. [22881]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 15 January 1998]: Under the current legislation, information may be withheld from the public register on the grounds of prevention of damage to the environment. To date, no information has been withheld from the public register on these grounds. We would consider any requests to withhold information on this basis extremely carefully, with safety to the environment as the primary concern.

China

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to visit China. [23561]

Mr. Prescott: I hope to visit China in the early part of the summer.

Project Funding (Northumberland)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the projects within the Northumberland County Council area that have received European Regional Development Funding in the last three years. [24019]

Angela Eagle: Projects within the Northumberland County Council's area have to date received £26,377,479 from the Regional Development Fund (EDRF) in the last three years. A total of 170 projects have been supported under the following European Structural Funds Programmes: North East of England Objective 2, Northern Uplands Objective 5b, PESCA Community Initiative and RECHAR II Community Initiative. Regional projects approved under the aforementioned programmes have also provided assistance in the Northumberland area.

The Northumberland area has also benefited from support from the European Social Fund (ESF) and the European Agricultural Guidance Guarantee Fund (EAGGF).

Tables on projects in Northumberland that have received support from the EDRF have been placed in the Library.

Local Authority Pension Funds

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the current value of the local authority occupational pension funds. [23791]

Ms Armstrong: The most recent date for which we hold information relating to local authority pension funds in England and Wales is 30 June 1997, when the market value totalled £61.5 billion.

Coach Travel (Disabled People)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had, and with whom, to seek to improve travelling conditions in motor coaches for disabled people. [23800]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department has held extensive informal discussions, both with their statutory advisers on disability, the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee (DPTAC) and with representatives of both manufacturing and operating industries. On the basis of these preliminary discussions, we published on 19 December, for widespread public consultation, our proposals for making both buses and coaches accessible to disabled people in compliance with the Disability Discrimination Act. Twelve thousand copies of the consultation document have been issued to disability organisations and other consumer groups as well as to all bus and coach operators and manufacturers. The consultation document has been placed in the House Library.

Water Supplies (Stevenage)

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will assess the availability of water supplies for the planned new households when ruling on plans to expand Stevenage. [23729]

Angela Eagle: No. It is for the water companies concerned to quantify and provide the water supplies required to support new housing developments. This is a normal part of the planning process.

CFCs

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to ban all sales of CFCs. [23410]

Angela Eagle: My Department, in collaboration with the Department of Trade and Industry, is currently undertaking a study to look at the environmental and economic costs and benefits of tighter controls on ozone depleting substances, including a possible ban on the sale of CFCs, which may be included in proposals which the European Commission are expected to bring forward to amend EC Regulation 3093/94 on Substances that Deplete the Ozone Layer. We will consider the issue fully when the study is completed and in the light of discussion with European colleagues of whatever proposals the Commission bring forward.

Wild-caught Birds

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent figures he has obtained in respect of the number of wild-caught birds imported into the United Kingdom; and what percentage of wild-caught birds imported into the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available are estimated to have been dead on arrival. [22969]

Angela Eagle: The Department maintains records of trade only in the species listed in the Annexes to Council Regulation (EC) No. 338/97, which govern the import into EU Member States. At present, these records do not include data on the number of birds that were dead on arrival but we intend to gather mortality statistics when systems can be put in place. From the data returned so far, some 4,598 wild-caught birds were imported in 1997.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the Government's policy on EU Directive 96/29 in respect of the recycling of radioactive waste in consumer goods. [23618]

Angela Eagle: Directive 96/29/Euratom lays down revised European Union basic safety standards for the protection of the health of workers and the general public against the dangers arising from ionising radiation. It must be implemented into UK legislation by May 2000.

The Directive effectively sets levels of radioactivity above which radioactive materials must be the subject of regulatory control. The Directive, however, gives Member States discretion in setting levels for the release from regulatory control of materials for disposal, recycling and re-use.

The Government are giving careful consideration to this matter and their proposals will be the subject of full public consultation planned for later this year.

A27 Polegate Bypass

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much has been spent to date in total on the proposals to build the new A27 Polegate bypass, broken down into (a) land acquisition, (b) public consultation, (c) design costs, (d) compensation payments to tenderers and (e) others. [23409]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Norman Baker, dated 19 January 1998:

The Parliamentary Under Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question on how much has been spent to date in total on the proposals to build the A27 Polegate Bypass broken down into (a) land acquisition, (b) public consultation, (c) design costs, (d) compensation payments to tenderers and (e) others.

The overall spend so far is approximately £3.7m (including VAT). Of that, £1.4m has been spent on land acquisition, including land blighted by the scheme, but not necessarily required for it. Some of the costs would be recovered when any surplus land is sold.

Design costs, which include the development of preliminary design through public consultation to detailed design, are around £1m; it is not possible to break this down further except at disproportionate cost.

No compensation payments to tenderers (i.e for the DBFO project) have been made to date.

We have also spent £1m on advance payments to statutory undertakers (eg to move overhead electric power lines), some of which may be recoverable if the scheme does not go ahead, and £250,000 on ground investigation surveys. The only other item of major expenditure has been the preparation of tender documents for the Weald and Downland DBFO project of which this scheme was part, we estimate that the portion of costs attributable to this scheme are in the order of £50,000.

National Conditions of Carriage

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review (a) the National Conditions of Carriage in general and (b) clause 45 of the conditions. [23393]

Ms Glenda Jackson: At the request of the Rail Regulator, the Association of Train Operating Companies is currently conducting a review of the National Conditions of Carriage and consulting the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising, the Office of the Rail Regulator, the Central Rail Users' Consultative Committee and the train operating companies.

River Tyne Debris Clearance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the contributions in the last five years from the Environment Agency and its predecessors to the "Eager Beaver" River Tyne Debris Clearance vessel; and what are his reasons for discontinuing this contribution in the next financial year. [23647]

Angela Eagle: The contributions made to the "Eager Beaver" River Tyne Debris Clearance vessel in the past five years by the Environment Agency from 1996–97 and the National Rivers Authority before it, are as follows:

1993–94: £4,000

1994–95: £4,000

1995–96: £2,000

1996–97: £2,000

1997–98: £2,000

The Environment Agency is an executive non-Departmental public body, free to manage its day to day business within the framework provided by the Government. Any decision about its future funding contributions to the "Eager Beaver" is therefore a matter for the Agency.

Cavity Walls

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the latest results of his Department's research into rain penetration in cavity walls. [24238]

Angela Eagle: On behalf of the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions the Building Research Establishment has undertaken research into water penetration in cavity walls filled with insulation.

As part of my Department's ongoing programme of research into rain penetration in cavity walls, I have, in consultation with my hon. Friends the Minister for London and Construction and the Minister for Local Government and Housing, asked for precautionary checks to be carried out on the condition of galvanised steel wire wall ties in a representative sample of homes with cavity walls filled with insulation. This follows the preliminary results of research which indicate that there is a possibility that the life expectancy of green coloured galvanised steel wire wall ties might be shortened when used in conjunction with Urea Formaldehyde foam cavity fill. The tests were undertaken on dwarf walls without the protective features found in real houses. I wish, therefore, to establish whether the effects indicated in the BRE research occur in real houses.

I want to stress that there is no conclusive evidence of a safety risk involving galvanised steel wire wall ties in cavity wall insulation. But it would be wrong if, as a result of the preliminary findings, we did not investigate quickly and thoroughly whether or not the possible problems with green coloured galvanised steel wire wall ties in some cavity fills were occurring in people's homes. This is a prudent, precautionary measure and I have asked that further research be carried out as soon as possible.

The expert, independent, advice I have received from the BRE is that, while it believes that its initial findings indicate the need for a wider study, it is strongly of the view that it would be premature to place any firm interpretation on its findings until it can be established whether they are representative of conditions in the UK housing stock.

While the number of homes containing galvanised wire wall ties with a green film, in cavity wall insulation, is a small portion of the housing stock, it is prudent to carry out these precautionary checks which will be extended to examine other forms of galvanised wire wall ties in cavity fill.

BRE's test results show:

Accelerated corrosion has occurred to galvanised steel wire wall ties which have been coated with a green identification film when embedded in moist urea formaldehyde foam cavity insulation.

Whilst there was visual evidence of corrosion of "grey" (without the green film) galvanised steel wire wall ties embedded in moist cavity fill insulation, the measurement of loss of zinc was too small to be significant.

No significant corrosion was found in either form of galvanised steel wire wall tie embedded in moist blown mineral wood or mineral wool batt cavity insulation.

There was some visual evidence of corrosion on both types of galvanised steel wire ties at the gap which occurs between the masonry and all three types of wet insulation.

Stainless steel wire wall ties showed no signs of corrosion irrespective of the cavity fill material and exposure.

The results were obtained from experimental walls after 12 and 18 months subject to regimes of accelerated exposure. Copies of BRE's Research report have been placed in the House Library.

Ferry Crews

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the answer of 12 January 1998, Official Report, column 111, on ferry crews, if he will set out the criteria which the Marine Safety Agency uses in assessing the ability of passenger ferry crew members to communicate in English. [23725]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Marine Safety Agency, Mr. Bradley, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Alasdair Morgan, dated 19 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your Question about the criteria used by the MSA in assessing the abilities of passenger ferry crew members to communicate in English.

MSA inspectors, when witnessing emergency drills on passenger ferries, expect crew members to be able to communicate clearly to passengers in English the location of the following (which are specifically referred to in the Merchant Shipping (Minimum Standards of Safety Communications) Regulations 1997):

muster stations;

life-saving devices;

evacuation routes;

safety instructions;

and to be able to give a clear explanation to passengers of other matters such as:

the nature of the emergency;

the need to put on warm clothing;

instruction to board a life boat or life raft.

The inspectors may apply these criteria at any other time if they feel that crew members' English language skills need to be assessed.

Charity Collections (Stations)

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will advise the managements of all railway and underground stations not to rely on charity registration as an indication of respectability. [22886]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Applications for charity collections on railway and underground stations are considered by the operators on an individual basis and do not solely rely on the fact that an organisation is registered with the Charity Commission.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will advise the management of railway and underground stations to require a recommendation from an independent source before permitting charity collections on station land and premises. [22884]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Permission for charity collections on railway and underground stations is a matter for the individual operator, in this case Railtrack, the train operating company or London Underground Ltd. Charities are advised to seek permission from them in advance to enable applications to be considered and collection times to be allocated.

Timber

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the Government's policy on the purchasing for use by Government departments and agencies of (a) Brazilian mahogany and (b) other endangered timber; how the policy is implemented and monitored; in what form the results of that monitoring are published; and if he will make a statement. [23847]

Angela Eagle: Decisions on the procurement of goods and services, including timber or related products, are the responsibility of individual Departments. Departments must have regard to the need to secure best value for the taxpayers' money, to EU and other international rules on procurement and to their strategies for environmentally friendly housekeeping. In pursuing these aims, Departments can be expected to seek timber from sustainable sources where practicable. My Department's Green Guide for Buyers Part 1: Policy and Practice, which I have commended to Green Ministers in other Departments, requires minimum use of virgin materials, and the Department seeks as far as possible to purchase wood only from sources verified as sustainable. Costa Rica and Bolivia have listed their populations of Brazilian Mahogany in Appendix III of CITES (the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species) and Brazil has consulted on a proposal to do the same. The importation of this species into the EU requires an export permit or a certificate from the country of origin. Importers are required to complete a notification in order to help monitoring of the levels of trade.

Food Safety

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the funding for implementation of the Pennington Report, announced on 19 August 1997, will count against local authority spending limits. [22948]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 16 January 1998]: In line with the announcement made on 19 August 1997 by my hon. Friend the Minister for Public Health, £3.75 million of extra funding has been provided to English local authorities to contribute towards the additional costs of inspecting food premises more frequently. This will assist in implementing the Government's response to the Pennington report. As a rule, expenditure for which provision is made within an authority's Standard Spending Assessment (SSA) is included in an authority's budget requirement for capping purposes. Authorities are able to increase their budgets by at least the increase in their SSA, except where it would take their budget more than 12.5 per cent. above SSA or where their budget is already more than 12.5 per cent. above SSA.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Council how many questions have been tabled since 1 May for answer on the following day by (a) Labour hon. Members and (b) hon. Members from other parties; and how many in each case were subsequently answered the following day. [23407]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The number of such Questions tabled by Labour hon. Members was 766, of which the POLIS database records 690 as having been answered on the day on which they appeared on the Order Paper and the number tabled by hon. Members of other parties was 10, of which the POLIS database records 2 as having been answered on the day on which they appeared on the Order Paper. These figures are from 1 May 1997 to 15 January 1998 (inclusive).

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Drugs Tsar

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Council when the decision was taken to employ an assistant Drugs Tsar; and how the job was advertised. [23391]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The decision to appoint Mike Trace as the Deputy UK Anti-Drugs Coordinator was taken in the light of the Ministerial interviews of the short-listed candidates, which I chaired and it was ratified by the Prime Minister before appointment in October 1997.

The Deputy Coordinator acts in support of the full range of the Coordinator's responsibilities.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Abdul Oudigo

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish all the correspondence between his Department, the Metropolitan Police, the Nigerian Police and Interpol concerning Abdul Oudigo in 1995 and 1996; [23026]

(2) if he will publish the contents of the Interpol report on Abdul Oudigo that was received by his Department in 1996. [23027]

Mr. Michael: Interpol London has no record of Mr. Oudigo, either on paper or on any of its databases. Nor is there any record on the Police National Computer or at the Interpol Headquarters in Lyon.

If my hon. Friend is able to provide this Department with further information concerning his Question, for example Mr. Oudigo's date of birth, I will be happy to make further inquiries.

Mr. Peter San Pedro

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department at what time CS spray was used on Peter San Pedro of London; at what time Mr. San Pedro was released; at what time Mr. San Pedro died in a road accident; and if he will make a statement. [23107]

Mr. Michael: I understand from Kent County Constabulary that an officer sprayed Mr. San Pedro with CS during an incident which began at 11.33 am on 3 April 1997; that he was released from custody at 12.30 pm that day; and that at 6.23 pm an emergency call was received to say that he had been struck by a lorry. The incident has been investigated by the Police Complaints Authority and an inquest took place on 4 and 5 December. The cause of death was recorded as multiple injuries and the jury returned an open verdict. The Crown Prosecution Service is currently considering matters arising out of the incident.

Flying Squad

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons the police installed road blocks around the headquarters of the Flying Squad in Walthamstow during the weekend of 20 and 21 December. [23043]

Mr. Michael: This is an operational matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. However, he tells me that no road blocks were installed around the regional Flying Squad office at Rigg Approach, Walthamstow, during the weekend of the 20 and 21 December. On that date, the office was searched by officers from the Metropolitan Police's Complaints Investigation Bureau following the arrest of former officers.

Dangerous Dogs

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many dogs have been (a) seized and (b) destroyed under the provisions of the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 to date. [23018]

Mr. George Howarth: Information on the numbers of dogs which have been seized by the police and local authorities under the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 is not collected centrally.

Information on the number of dogs destroyed under the dangerous dogs legislation is not collected in the form requested.

In the period 1992–1996, a total of 977 people were convicted either of offences under section 1 of the 1991 Act or of aggravated offences under section 3. In each of these cases, the court would have had no option but to order the destruction of the dog concerned. This figure, therefore, is likely to be close to the actual number of dogs put down under the Act over that period.

Animal Breeding Licences

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what licences for animal breeding are currently held by Hillgrove Farm, Witney, Oxfordshire; when the provision of these licences was last reviewed; and what assessment he has made of the justification for their issue. [22863]

Mr. George Howarth: Hillgrove Farm is designated under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 as a breeder and supplier of animals for use in scientific procedures. The Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 does not require that Certificates of Designation be renewed or formally reviewed. However, inspectors visit all establishments and will, where necessary, recommend the amendment of Certificates.

Hillgrove Farm was inspected three times in 1997. The purpose of these inspections was to assess compliance with the conditions set out on the Certificate of Designation.

I am satisfied that the establishment is operating within the terms and conditions of the 1986 Act and of its Certificate of Designation. There are no grounds, therefore, to revoke the Certificate.

Jonathan Aitken

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what dates officers from the Metropolitan Police travelled to Paris to interview staff at the Ritz in connection with the alleged perjury of Mr. Jonathan Aitken. [23112]

Mr. Michael: This investigation is an operational matter for the Commissioner. However, he tells me that two officers from the Metropolitan Police travelled to Paris on 12 January 1998 in connection with this investigation.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to conclude his investigation into the alleged perjury of Jonathan Aitken. [21606]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner informs me that inquiries are continuing. These inquiries have been protracted due to the legal necessity to seek evidence from foreign jurisdictions. The investigation is being pursued as expeditiously as possible and will be concluded as soon as practicable. This investigation is an operational matter for the Commissioner.

Drugs Offenders

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the average determinate sentence of imprisonment or detention in a young offender institution received by offenders convicted of the supply, importation or production of Class A controlled drugs in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; [23123]

(2) how many offenders convicted of offences related to the supply, importation or production of Class A controlled drugs received (a) a life sentence, (b) a determinate sentence of imprisonment and (c) a non-custodial sentence in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [23124]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 15 January 1998]: The offences referred to cover a wide range of circumstances and seriousness. Some cases may attract a caution if the offender has admitted guilt and the police decide that the offence is at the lower end of seriousness. On conviction, the maximum sentence available to the court for these offences is life imprisonment.

Table 1 shows the respective number of offenders cautioned, given a non-custodial sentence and given a custodial sentence since 1993. Table 2 shows the average sentence lengths given to those given a custodial sentence. Prior to 1993, information held centrally for offences of supply and production does not identify controlled drugs by type or class.

Witness Protection Scheme

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people sought relocation in 1997 under the witness protection scheme; and how many were successfully rehoused, by borough. [23960]

Mr. Michael: There is no national scheme for the protection of witnesses in this country and information relating to those on police witness protection schemes is not collected centrally. Whether to offer protection in any particular case and the form that protection should take, including whether the person should be relocated, is a decision for the police force concerned.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of, and how many, asylum seekers were (a) granted asylum and (b) given exceptional leave to remain for each year from 1985 to 1997 inclusive. [23489]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: During 1997, a total of 36,045 initial decisions, excluding dependants, were made on asylum applications. Of these, 3,985 (11 per cent.) were to recognise the applicant as a refugee and grant asylum, 3,115 (9 per cent.) were to refuse asylum but grant exceptional leave to enter (or remain) and 28,945 (80 per cent.) were to refuse both asylum and exceptional leave.

Equivalent information for the years 1986 to 1996 is given in table 1.2 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom 1996" (issue 15/97). Table 1.2 of issue 9/96 of this publication provides similar data for 1985. Copies of both publications are available in the Library.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) applications for asylum awaiting an initial decision and (b) appeals by asylum seekers against refusal to grant leave to stay were outstanding on 1 January. [23540]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Information on the number of outstanding cases relates to the position at the end of the month rather than the beginning.

As at 31 December 1997, there were 51,795 applications for asylum in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, awaiting an initial decision. As at the same date, there were 25,555 asylum related appeals awaiting determination.

The number of applications awaiting an initial decision has fallen by 5,600 (from 57,405) since the end of 1996. The total number of asylum related appeals outstanding has arisen over the same period by 3,215. However, over the last 5 months, this figure has shown a slight but consistent fall.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visits were carried out last year by his Department's inspectors to establishments authorised to undertake animal procedures; and how many of these were unannounced. [22957]

Mr. George Howarth: Figures for 1997 have not yet been finalised. I will write to the hon. Member when they are available.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are taken to ensure animals held in captivity for use in experiments are allowed to follow normal behavioural patterns so far as possible; and on how many occasions in 1996 his Department's inspectors have required changes to be made to conditions of captivity. [22952]

Mr. George Howarth: The environmental conditions required for animals used in scientific procedures are set out in the Code of Practice for the Housing and Care of Animals used in Scientific Procedures and reflected in the conditions set out in the establishment's Certificate of Designation. As far as possible, account is taken of species specific behaviour patterns and needs.

Central records are not kept of how many times inspectors have required changes to be made at designated establishments to meet the conditions set out in the Certificate of Designation.

The Inspectorate has completed audits of all establishments designated under section 6 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 and found high levels of compliance. Instances of non-compliance are being addressed.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what opportunities exist for pooling of data and other information obtained from animal experimentation between the United Kingdom and other countries; and what steps he is taking to encourage this. [22954]

Mr. George Howarth: There are no powers under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 to require scientists to share data obtained from animal experimentation. Scientists are, however, expected by the Home Office to publish the results of their research.

Under certain circumstances, where animal test data are submitted to regulatory authorities, there may be statutory obligations to share this data with third parties. The Home Office has encouraged this, as such sharing may reduce the number or scope of regulatory tests involving the use of animals.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the percentage of animal procedures carried out in 1996 which replicated procedures already undertaken previously (a) within the United Kingdom and (b) elsewhere. [22955]

Mr. George Howarth: This information is not available.

On occasion, replication or duplication of procedures may be essential to establish the reliability of previous data and findings. Unless there are valid reasons for replicating work already undertaken, the Inspectorate will not recommend that a licence be granted.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been initiated in each year since 1987 for offences under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986; and what was the outcome in each completed case. [22960]

Mr. George Howarth: Two prosecutions have been initiated since 1987. In 1991, an individual was convicted of breeding and supplying animals for use in scientific procedures while not being designated under section 7 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. In the other instance, charges were brought in 1997. This case is still before the courts.

Prosecutions for cruelty in designated establishments have also been pursued under the Protection of Animals Act 1911.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to reconcile respect for commercial confidentiality with his stated policy to seek to reduce the numbers of procedures carried out. [22956]

Mr. George Howarth: We assume the question relates to scientific procedures involving animals.

We have already announced our intention to investigate the possibility of a European database on alternative methods and to make applicants for project licences declare what consideration they have given to alternatives which reduce the number of animals used or replace them entirely (as well as refining procedures to minimise suffering).

The Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate will continue to assess licence applications to ensure that alternatives are used wherever possible. I do not accept that there is a conflict between commercial confidentiality and efforts to minimise the number of animals used in scientific procedures.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes will be required to the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 to comply with the terms of the Government's White Paper on Freedom of Information. [22958]

Mr. George Howarth: The Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 is one of a number of Acts which contain statutory bars to the disclosure of information. Section 24 of the Act prevents the disclosure of information given in confidence. The Government have announced that they will be reviewing such statutory bars to decide whether they should remain or should be amended to bring them into line with the "substantial harm" and "public interest" tests proposed in the White Paper on Freedom of Information: "Your Right to Know" (Cm 3818). No decisions have yet been made concerning individual Acts.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to increase substantially the penalties available for failure to adhere to the conditions laid down as part of project licences under the Animal (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. [22959]

Mr. George Howarth: The available penalties are set out in the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. These include variation or revocation of licences (section 11); suspension of licences (section 13); and, upon conviction under section 22 of the Act, imprisonment or a fine. The maximum term of imprisonment is two years on conviction on indictment or six months on summary conviction. Variation of a licence may include changes to the authorities granted (such as removing authority to carry out certain protocols) or the addition of special conditions. We have no plans to change these provisions of the Act.

In addition to these penalties, administrative measures can be taken such as admonition, or a requirement that licensees attend a training course. The latter can be formalised by the variation of the licence by the addition of a special condition.

All infringements of the Act are reported to the Animal Procedures Committee which reviews the level of penalties imposed and advises on whether these were appropriate. It remains Home Office policy to impose penalties primarily to prevent recurrence of the infringement of the Act.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many animals bred or otherwise obtained for use in animal experimentation in 1996 were subsequently killed without being so used; and what this was as a percentage of animals used. [22951]

Mr. George Howarth: Animals which are bred in designated establishments for use in scientific procedures under the terms of the Animals (Scientific Procedures)

Act 1986 but which are not so used can be killed by Schedule 1 or other approved methods without licence authority under the Act.

Types of animal which are not listed in Schedule 2 to the 1986 Act can be bred within non-designated establishments. Surplus animals can be humanely killed in such establishments without authority under the terms of the 1986 Act.

The Home Office cannot therefore collate, or even estimate, the number of animals bred for use in scientific procedures but which were killed without being used.

Changes to the Act would be needed if statistics of this nature were to be collected and there are no plans to make any such changes.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking (a) within the EU and (b) within the UN to discourage animal experimentation. [22953]

Mr. George Howarth: The United Kingdom takes an active role with its partners in Europe to ensure the implementation of the provisions of European Directive 86/609/EEC on the approximation of laws, regulations and administrative provisions of the member states regarding the protection of animals used for experimental and other scientific purposes.

There is no forum within the United Nations for discussing the use of animals in scientific procedures. However, links with other countries (including a number of non-European Union countries) exist through the Council of Europe and the European Convention ETS123 for the Protection of Vertebrate Animals used for Experimental and other Scientific Purposes.

The Directive, the Convention and the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 require that animals be used only where this is justified and where alternative methods of achieving the objective of the programme of work are not available.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated concerning the reliability of the results derived from animal testing and their applicability in respect of humans. [22963]

Mr. George Howarth: No research has been commissioned by the Home Office, but account is taken of species differences in the design of experiments, in the range of animal species used, and in the correlation of animal-based data with other experimental data. This includes, where appropriate, that produced in human trials.

The requirement to carry out safety tests using animals, the nature of the tests and the way the results are analysed and interpreted are the responsibility of other Government Departments and other international regulators, not the Home Office.

Young Remand Prisoners

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to end the practice of holding males aged under 18 years in adult prisons while on remand. [23726]

Mr. Michael: The Government are concerned about the continued remand of boys to prison which is a long-standing issue which the last Government failed to resolve. This Government's policy is to move to a situation where it is no longer necessary to remand 15 and 16 years olds to prison. I set out the background in detail in my answer to the hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) on 12 January 1998, Official Report, columns 64–66. We have reviewed this whole difficult area and decided that the priority is to give the courts the right range of powers to remand juveniles to secure accommodation, and there are provisions within the Crime and Disorder Bill to achieve this. The proposals do not apply to 17 year olds who are treated as adults for remand purposes. There is no proposal to change the remand arrangements for this older age group.

We hope that the outcome of the current review of the secure juvenile estate and the work which the Prison Service is currently doing will enable us to end the practice of detaining juveniles with adults.

Damages (Civil Recovery)

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department has conducted into the effect of legislation to facilitate the civil recovery of damages from criminals on the level of crime against businesses. [23949]

Mr. Michael: No such research has been conducted by the Home Office.

Firearms

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the quantity of illegal arms in circulation in England and Wales and on the impact on the illegal arms trade of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997. [23490]

Mr. Michael: There is no reliable estimate of the number of illegal firearms in this country. The primary purpose of the 1997 legislation, especially the banning of handguns, is to provide greater safeguards for the safety of the public, given that the shootings at Dunblane and Hungerford were committed using lawfully held weapons. In 1996, there were 294 incidents in which handguns were stolen or otherwise misappropriated so the ban will remove a significant supply of weapons for use in crime.

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his current estimate of the sums paid under the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997 Compensation Scheme to handgun owners (a) since the commencement of the scheme and (b) once full compensation has been paid. [23544]

Mr. Michael: On 6 January 1998, £30.3 million had been paid out under the Firearms Compensation Scheme. The latest total estimate for the Scheme, including payments for small-calibre pistols and ancillary equipment to be surrendered during February, is £166 million.

Drug Dealing Charges

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the totals of those (a) held in custody and (b) who received jail sentences subsequently following allegations that they have been dealing in

(i) heroin, (ii) ecstasy and (iii) cannabis in each of the last eight years; and what proportion they represent of the totals charged in each category. [23387]

Mr. Michael: Information for those appearing at the Crown Court in 1996 is given in the table. Crown Court data for earlier years and data for magistrates' courts are not sufficiently robust to allow for this level of detail.

Defendants who appeared at the Crown Court in 1996 on charges of dealing[1] in heroin, ecstasy and cannabis

	Dealing in:
	Heroin	Ecstasy	Cannabis
Dealt with[2]	992	839	2,720
Held in custody	625	343	794
Percentage held in custody	63 per cent.	41 per cent.	29 per cent.
Held in custody and sentenced to immediate custody	538	301	578
Percentage of those held in custody sentenced to immediate custody	86 per cent.	88 per cent.	73 per cent.

[1] dealing includes offences of supply and possession with intent to supply.
[2] includes all those acquitted or sentenced.

Voluntary Work

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received concerning the funding of projects organised and administered by community and voluntary organisations. [21443]

Mr. Michael: We receive grant applications from a wide range of community and voluntary organisations. In addition, we are in frequent discussion with representatives of voluntary and community organisations about matters of mutual interest, including funding.

Charity Collections

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice his Department issues to the owners of premises approached by charities for permission to make collections who wish to verify the standing of the charity; and if he will make a statement. [22885]

Mr. Michael: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 12 November 1997, Official Report, columns 558–59.

Littlewoods Directors

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the appointment of Ms Perkins as a non-executive director of Littlewoods. [24237]

Mr. Straw: My wife's unpaid appointment as a non-executive director of Littlewoods was made in July 1997, as part of a long-standing scheme for establishing better understanding between senior civil servants and the private sector. I am informed that 119 senior civil servants had appointments as non-executive directors in 1996–97. As a precaution against any appearance of conflict of interest, when my wife's appointment was made I arranged for any matters affecting the interests of Littlewoods to be considered by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State Home Affairs, my hon. Friend the Member for Knowsley, North and Sefton, East (Mr. Howarth). This is in accordance with the Guidance for Ministers and precedent. No conflict of interest therefore arises.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Tigers

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what account she takes of the threats which exist to the future of the tiger population in India in deciding her Department's policy towards India. [22949]

Clare Short: Protection of the natural environment is one of the priorities for Department for International Development set out in the recent White Paper. All projects are screened for their environmental impact. We are supporting the Indian Government's efforts to save the tiger with a £50,000 grant to the Global Tiger Forum, £1 million to the Indira Gandhi Conservation Monitoring Centre (a non-governmental organisation), and contributions to multilateral agencies with global environmental agendas.

Bulgaria

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made about the levels of poverty in the former Eastern bloc states with particular reference to Bulgaria. [23015]

Clare Short: The transition to democratic systems of government and market economies in the Eastern bloc has undoubtedly been accompanied by an increase in the incidence of poverty, particularly in Bulgaria. Our future work will place increased emphasis on trying to ensure that support to transition takes full account of the need to protect poor and vulnerable groups and to spread more widely the benefits from economic development.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement about British assistance towards development projects in Eastern Europe, with particular reference to Bulgaria. [23016]

Clare Short: Our assistance to Eastern Europe is directed through the Know How Fund, which supports transition to pluralist democracy and market economies. We are reshaping Know How Fund programmes to give greater emphasis to protecting the poorest and to enabling the widest number of people to share in the fruits of change, as described in our pamphlet "Support for Transition Countries: A New Strategy", a copy of which I am placing in the Library of the House. In Bulgaria, we shall support the encouraging reforms being pursued by the new government, paying particular attention to the needs of poor and vulnerable groups.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the Bulgarian state orphanage system. [23017]

Clare Short: We have discussed this issue with UK-based agencies working with Bulgarian orphanages. We conclude that we should help relieve the very poor conditions found in orphanages, and also assist the Bulgarian authorities to investigate community-based alternatives to institutional care. We are funding a £250,000 project with this aim, to be managed by the Save the Children Fund (UK). We have provided a total of £359,000 to UK-based agencies and the Bulgarian Red Cross for relief programmes with vulnerable families and institutions and are supporting social homes and orphanages through small grants. We have also contributed about £2 million to the European Union's Emergency Social Assistance and Humanitarian Office Programmes in Bulgaria.

HEALTH

Adverse Incident Centre

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the Adverse Incident Centre. [23012]

Ms Jowell: The Adverse Incident Centre is managed by the Medical Devices Agency. It is the first point of contact for reporting adverse incidents involving medical devices used in the National Health Service.

All reports are analysed and those involving death or serious injury, or with the potential to cause it, are investigated fully. Where appropriate, the agency issues a Hazard or Safety Notice to the NHS advising of hazardous products or unsafe procedures and the actions that should be taken.

In many other cases, the manufacturer is asked to investigate the incident. The agency reviews the manufacturer's response and, where appropriate, notifies the reporter of the outcome.

The agency publishes an annual survey of reported incidents as part of its efforts to increase awareness of the importance of reporting them.

The Adverse Incident Centre database holds over 32,000 incident records, dating back to 1987. Over 5300 adverse incident reports were received in 1997.

Travel Vaccinations

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what cost benefit analysis has been conducted into the privatisation of travel vaccinations for infectious diseases. [22906]

Ms Jowell: The non-availability or unreliability of data on travel vaccines given in the United Kingdom makes formal cost-benefit analysis difficult. We recognise that inconsistencies and ambiguities have arisen over the years in the arrangements for travel vaccines and the way they are interpreted and are seeking to resolve these anomalies as part of an ongoing, internal review.

Infertility Services

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has given to health authorities to ensure a more consistent provision of infertility services across the country. [23913]

Ms Jowell: The White Paper "The New National Health Service" outlines a number of steps which the Government will be taking to improve the consistency of service provision throughout the National Health Service. We will challenge and address variations which are not based on the health needs and wishes of local people. We will aim for maximum consistency while still allowing appropriate local and individual responsiveness. We are currently considering what further advice the NHS should be given on infertility service provision.

Disabled People

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the areas where his Department's report, Policy Research Programme: providing a knowledge base for health, public health and social care, has provided the basis for improvements in information to disabled people. [23357]

Ms Jowell: The Department of Health has funded improvements to information databases on disability equipment maintained by the Disabled Living Foundation and the Royal National Institute for the Blind. This followed evaluations in the Policy Research Programme suggesting that the European Union's Handynet system was not meeting the needs of users in the United Kingdom.

A range of other research is commissioned which relates to policy on physical disability, sensory impairment, learning disability and the health of older people. It covers a broad spectrum of acute care and continuing health and social care including work of community nurses and therapy professions. The broad aim of the research programme is to provide information that will assist in the policy formulation on integrated services to meet the needs of elderly, disabled or vulnerable people and to enable them to live in the community where possible.

Prescriptions

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy on the level of prescription charges and the availability of multiple prescriptions at discounted prices. [23395]

Mr. Milburn: All aspects of prescription charges are being examined as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review which will report in the summer. The Review in the Department of Health is being undertaken in the context of our manifesto commitment:

"if you are ill or injured there will be a national health service there to help; and access to it will be based on need and need alone—not on your ability to pay, or on who your general practitioner happens to be or on where you live".

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the proportion of medicinal drugs that are prescribed in order to counteract the consequences of other medicinal drugs. [23389]

Mr. Milburn: It is not possible to estimate the proportion of medicines prescribed to counteract the consequences of other medicinal drugs. However, medicinal drugs are often appropriately prescribed in combination, so that one drug may counteract the unwanted side-effects of another clinically necessary drug.

Body Piercing

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the method of licensing for people performing ear-piercing and body piercing; and what plans he has to review the licensing procedure.[23318]

Ms Jowell: The current registration and licensing provisions for ear-piercing and cosmetic body piercing business provisions are described in "Regulation of Skin Piercing: a Consultation Paper" issued jointly by the Department of Health and the Welsh Office in October 1996. Copies are available in the Library.

This consultation paper reviewed the current legislation which gives local authorities powers to control skin piercing businesses.

We are considering our response to the consultation exercise.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Hawk Jet Sales (Indonesia)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the delivery of Hawk Jets to Indonesia has been made; how much the Export Credits Guarantee Scheme has contributed to the sale; and, following the economic problems in Indonesia, what assessment he has made of the likelihood of full payment being received at the expected time. [23102]

Mrs. Roche: 16 of the 40 aircraft remain to be delivered.

ECGD has guaranteed two loans valued at US$530 million and £13.4 million for a contract for Hawk Aircraft made with the Indonesian Government in 1993 and one loan valued at £280 million in respect of a further contract made in 1996.

In view of the recent financial turbulence in Asia, ECGD is monitoring the situation closely. Payments under the above mentioned loans are up to date.

Credit Act

Mr. Colman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will introduce legislation for a new Credit Act. [23331]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: While I have no immediate plans to introduce legislation for a new Credit Act, I shall shortly issue a consultative paper on proposals for simplifying and clarifying aspects of Consumer Credit legislation.

Finance Director

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will arrange for the Office of Fair Trading to place in the Library its evidence to the European Commission and the results of its survey of finance directors on the proposed merger of KPMG and Ernst and Young; and if she will make a statement. [23682]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: Member States have a formal role in EC competition investigations. During an EC investigation, publication by the UK of views submitted to the Commission, or of the results of any surveys or work undertaken by the UK authorities, would compromise the effectiveness and integrity of that investigation. Such information could also be market sensitive.

Copyright and Consumer Protection

Mr. Maude: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to ensure that on-line service and access providers, including telecommunications companies, take legal and administrative responsibility for ensuring that material which is transmitted or delivered by them does not infringe copyright or consumer protection legislation. [23575]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The general principle is that the law applies on-line in the same way that it does off-line. Under United Kingdom copyright law, on-line service or access providers are legally responsible for copyright infringement if they themselves incorporate copyright material into transmissions without the consent of copyright owners. Existing consumer law covers electronic commerce in the same way as it covers face to face transactions and other forms of distance communications (e.g. mail order).

Employment Tribunal Awards

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many awards of over £50,000 were made by employment tribunals in cases of unfair dismissal in each of the last three years; and how many of these remain unpaid. [23462]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Awards for unfair dismissal are made up of two elements: a basic award and a compensatory award. The current maximum basic award for unfair dismissal case is £6,300, based on the statutory maximum of £210 per week, together with a maximum of £11,300 for the compensatory element. Section 125 of the Employment Rights Act 1996 provides for special awards in cases of unfair dismissal for Trade Union activities and in cases where the employer has failed to comply with an order for reinstatement. There have been no awards of over £50,000 in unfair dismissal cases in the last three years.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to make the payment of employment tribunal awards compulsory. [23461]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The payment of industrial tribunal awards is governed by similar procedures to other awards made by the civil courts. Employers who do not observe industrial tribunal monetary awards can be required to do so by court order.

Ministerial Travel (Trains)

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what date she last used a train in the course of her official duties. [22926]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 15 January 1998]: I last used a train in the course of my official duties on Monday 8 December 1997 travelling to London following a regional visit to Nottingham and Lincoln.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her current estimate of the cost of millennium compliance to United Kingdom businesses. [23593]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 16 January 1998]: I have made no such estimate. The cost will depend on many factors, including the extent to which businesses decide to fix, replace or abandon systems, and the speed with which they act. We believe that acting early will reduce the cost.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the engagements she has undertaken directly in connection with millennium compliance issues since 1 November. [23591]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 16 January 1998]: Ministers in my Department have undertaken numerous engagements directly in connection with millennium compliance since 1 November. These include:

meetings with the Chairman of Action 2000;

meetings with industry;

speaking engagements;

press interviews;

the European Telecoms Council;

bi-laterals with European counterparts.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will give details of the full staffing plan for Action 2000. [23630]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 16 January 1998]: Action 2000's Chairman and Director will be supported by three Team Leaders and an office manager, together with suitable clerical and administrative support. Action 2000, under its Chairman and Acting Director, is already co-ordinating detailed work under way by a number of teams dealing with the "year 2000" problem.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact on and cost to business of dealing with the date change problem and the introduction of the euro over the next two years. [23595]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 16 January 1998]: In respect of the date change problem, I have made no estimate. The cost will depend on many factors, including the extent to which businesses decide to fix, replace or abandon systems, and the speed with which they act. We believe that acting early will reduce the cost. The cost to business of the introduction of the Euro over the next two years will depend on many factors including how quickly and widely the Euro is actually used by business in the EU.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the issues currently being considered by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. [23802]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission (MMC) are currently considering three references which have been made to it. These are Underwriting Services, a monopoly reference, Bird's Eye Walls, a reference made under the Competition Act 1980, and Fresenius/Caremark, a merger reference.

Departmental Payments

Mr. Page: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she intends to publish the latest payment times of Government Departments; and if she will list them against the previous figures. [23795]

Mrs. Roche: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) on 12 January 1998, Official Report, column 28-29.

I will list the previous figures when I publish the payment performance figures for the financial year ending 31 March 1998.

Chief Engineering Adviser

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to appoint a government chief engineering adviser; and from whom Her Majesty's Government receive engineering-related advice at present. [23818]

Mr. Battle: The Government already have a Chief Scientific Adviser, Sir Robert May, whose responsibilities include fostering Science, Engineering and Technology throughout Whitehall. In addition, there are a number of officials and other bodies such as the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council whose responsibilities include the provision of engineering-related advice.

Information Technology

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to ensure that accountancy audits assess operational dependence on information systems. [23812]

Mr. Ian McCartney: It is the responsibility of the auditor in forming an opinion on whether a company's financial statements give a true and fair view to consider the entity's ability to continue as a going concern. This involves considering both the current and possible future circumstances of the business and the environment in which it operates.

In the context of potential systems failures caused by the Year 2000 problem, we are encouraging the profession to consider their role, and the Accounting Practices Board, which sets the standards for auditors, is on the point of issuing a bulletin providing preliminary guidance to auditors in respect of their consideration of the Year 2000 issue in the audit of financial statements. The Audit Faculty of the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales has already published a Technical Release providing guidance to its members, and the Urgent Issues Task Force of the Accounting Standards Board is also in the process of developing proposals in respect of some aspects of the Year 2000 problem.

Brazilian Mahogany

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many cubic metres of Brazilian mahogany were imported into the United Kingdom from Brazil in (a) 1996 and (b) 1997. [23518]

Angela Eagle: I have been asked to reply.

According to statistics kept by my Department, 9,966 cubic metres of Brazilian mahogany (Swietenia macrophylla) were imported in 1996. We are still compiling the data for 1997.

WALES

Referendum

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what was his role in arranging meetings between the Chief Executive of Caerphilly County Council and others over the conduct of the count of the referendum vote in Caerphilly; [23741]

(2) what information he received, and at what time, in respect of the count relating to the Blackwood Box during the referendum on a Welsh Assembly. [23742]

Mr. Ron Davies: None.

NHS Trusts (Appointments)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which section of which regulation provides the statutory basis for the appointment of a chief executive to an NHS trust in Wales. [23543]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Regulations 3, 4(1)(a) and 17 of the National Health Service Trusts (Membership and Procedure) Regulations 1990 (SI 1990 No. 2024), as amended, apply to the appointment of chief executives to NHS trusts in Wales.

PRIME MINISTER

Disablement Issues

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will meet the all-party group on disablement issues to discuss the scope and possible outcomes of the official and ministerial reviews of disability allowances, benefits and income support; [22582]

(2) if he has read the notes of the ministerial meeting with officers and members of the parliamentary all-party group on disablement issues on Thursday 18 December 1997. [22581]

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security is in charge of the Comprehensive Spending Review for her Department. She met with representatives of the all party disablement group on 18 December 1997 to hear their views on welfare reform and has offered to meet them again. I am aware of the views expressed by the group.

Daniel arap Moi

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his discussions with President Daniel arap Moi. [22811]

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Prime Minister what matters he discussed with President arap Moi of Kenya during his recent brief meeting. [22818]

The Prime Minister: I had a useful, private discussion with President Moi on 4 January 1998, which included the future challenges facing Kenya.

I made clear to the President that these challenges—which include constitutional review, action on corruption and other governance issues—should be addressed in an open and democratic framework.

Guidance for Ministers

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to modify the code of conduct and guidance for Ministers. [23035]

The Prime Minister: None.

Public Appointments

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy with respect to making appointments to quangos and other public bodies of those who do not support (a) current Government policy and (b) that of the body concerned. [23023]

The Prime Minister: Ministerial appointments to executive non-departmental public bodies and to NHS bodies are subject to the Code of Practice and guidance issued by the Commissioner for Public Appointments. His guidance makes it clear that appointments to public bodies should be made on the basis of merit and candidates are expected to subscribe to the objectives of the body on which they wish to serve. It states that political affiliation should not be a criterion for appointment (except where there is a statutory requirement or in the limited instances where the nature of the body makes it important that individual political parties are represented on it). These principles apply to all public appointments.

Banbridge Bomb Incident

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the source, route in and component elements of the car bomb defused in Banbridge on 6 January; and if he will make a statement. [22911]

The Prime Minister: The RUC have advised that, at approximately 1900 hours on 6 January 1998, telephone calls were received by a radio station in Drogheda and the Samaritans in Newry warning that a bomb in a red Sierra car in the centre of Banbridge was due to explode in 20 minutes. The car was located in Newry Street, Banbridge and the area was cleared. Following a number of controlled explosions carried out by an Army Technical Officer, the device, which comprised approximately 500 lbs of home-made explosive, was declared safe.

Police investigations into who or which organisation was responsible are continuing but the RUC have established that the vehicle passed through the border crossing point on the main Dundalk to Newry Road, travelling towards Newry at around 1800 hours on 6 January 1998.

Unfortunately there are some in Northern Ireland not yet prepared to follow the path of peace and democracy and the RUC and Army remain alert to the possibility of incidents such as this. They deserve great praise for clearing this device and preventing what could have been widespread damage, injuries and deaths.

Ministerial Travel (Trains)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the occasions since 1 May 1997 when he has used a train in the course of his official duties. [22923]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 January 1998]: I have made eight train journeys since 1 May 1997.

For reasons of practicality and security it is not always possible to travel by rail.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he has taken to encourage the use of public transport by Ministers. [22939]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 January 1998]: All Government Departments have been asked to draw up and implement green transport plans with the objective of minimising the environmental impact of their Department's transport activities.

Ministers and Civil Servants will be expected to play their part to meet their objectives.

Minister without Portfolio

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Essex, North (Mr. Jenkin) of 18 December 1997, Official Report, columns 264–65, concerning official functions at No. 10 Downing Street, on which occasions the Minister without Portfolio was present. [22915]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 January 1998]: My hon. Friend attended seven functions.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish a revised list of responsibilities of the Minister without Portfolio. [23571]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 January 1998]: In addition to the responsibilities announced when he was first appointed, my hon. Friend has responsibility within Government for the Millennium Experience at Greenwich.

Death Penalty

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Prime Minister if he will introduce legislation to enable the United Kingdom to sign Protocol 6 of the European Convention of Human Rights on the abolition of the death penalty. [22635]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 January 1998]: The availability or otherwise of the death penalty is a matter for Parliament to decide on a free vote. We have no plans to sign Protocol 6 of the European Convention on Human Rights, which would deny Parliament the opportunity to consider the issue in the future.

The Government have supported international calls for the abolition of the death penalty because Parliament has consistently voted against re-introduction of capital punishment for murder.

Cabinet Members

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Prime Minister if, when selecting members of his Cabinet, he took into account a candidate's private life. [23213]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 January 1998]: I considered a variety of factors when appointing the members of my Cabinet, the most important of which was their ability to carry out the official duties required of them effectively and well.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his responsibilities for millennium compliance issues. [23530]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The Government are acting to ensure that the national infrastructure is not damaged by the failure of electronic systems related to the year 2000 date change. We are working in partnership with business and through Action 2000 to alert business to the risks and what to do about them: every organisation must take responsibility for its own systems. We are undertaking a systematic appraisal of the electronic systems used by Government and their agencies. And we are taking the initiative with other Governments to tackle the problem on an international basis.

Ministerial Code

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the revisions to the Ministerial Code since its publication; and when they were published. [23721]

The Prime Minister: There has been none.

Whaling

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he raised the issue of whaling during his recent visit to Japan; and if he will make a statement. [23737]

The Prime Minister: I did not raise the issue of whaling with the Japanese Government during my visit to Tokyo. However, Government officials and the British Embassy in Tokyo are in regular contact with the Japanese on this important issue.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister when he now expects to meet the relatives of the victims who died on flight Pan Am 103 over Lockerbie. [24044]

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs intends to meet the relatives in the next few weeks. I will meet them thereafter. I look forward to hearing their views at first hand.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Scottish Devolution

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what discussions he has had with the Lord Advocate's Office on matters relating to Scottish devolution. [21482]

Mr. Hoon: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor regularly discusses a number of subjects with the Lord Advocate, and Scottish devolution has featured among these.

Civil Justice Reforms

39. Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on progress on the implementation of the civil justice reforms. [21484]

Mr. Hoon: The preparation for implementation of the civil justice reforms announced by the Lord Chancellor on 18 October 1997 is progressing as anticipated. More detailed information can be found in the Department's bulletin, "Implementing the Civil Justice Reforms", a copy of which has been placed in the Library. I am pleased to say we are on target to implement the reforms in April 1999.

Legal Aid

40. Ann Clwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on his proposed reforms of the legal aid system. [21485]

Mr. Hoon: Legal aid is not helping many of those in most need nor is it providing as much help pound for pound as it could. That is offensive to taxpayers and unfair to the poor. Our proposed reforms, by giving us better control over prices and what the money is spent on, will tackle those fundamental flaws in the present scheme.

Magistrates Courts Service

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many representations he has received in support of his proposals for the future structure of the magistrates courts service; and if he will make a statement. [21477]

Mr. Hoon: I have received 15 written representations in specific support of the statement I made on 29 October 1997 concerning the future structure of the magistrates' courts service. In addition, I have received general support from a number of interested organisations.

Cycle Spaces

Mr. Brake: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many secure cycle spaces there are in his Department. [22686]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor's Department has 15 secure cycle spaces in its Headquarters building in London and a further six in the Court Service Headquarters building, which are shared with other occupants. Outside London LCD Headquarters staff share buildings in Bristol and Leeds where two secure cycle spaces will shortly be available.

The Public Trust Office have ten secure cycle spaces in London. In the Court Service information about cycle spaces outside headquarters is not held centrally and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Small Claims Proceedings

Mr. Hill: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on how many occasions in the last 12 months a claim has been made in small claims proceedings for the cost of legal advice under County Court rules Order 19 rule 4 (2) (aa); and what was the value of the average amount awarded in that period. [22486]

Mr. Hoon: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Privacy Law

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received about the law relating to privacy. [21483]

Mr. Hoon: My Department has received representations about the law relating to privacy from media interests and members of the public.

Social Security Appeals

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many applications for leave to appeal to the Social Security Commissioner have been (a) accepted and (b) refused by the Commissioner in each of the last 12 months. [23030]

Mr. Hoon: The number of appeals accepted and refused by the Commissioner in each of the last 12 months are as follows:

1997	Accepted	Refused
January	61	717
February	205	296
March	332	122
April	171	103
May	72	129
June	163	257
July	88	181
August	105	280
September	155	330
October	149	96
November	202	95
December	162	250

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Crown Copyright

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to publish the Green Paper on the future of Crown copyright. [24422]

Dr. David Clark: A consultation paper, "Crown copyright in the Information Age", has been published today (Cm 3819). The Green Paper sets out a number of options for the future management of Crown copyright on which comments are invited by 31 March 1998. The Green Paper takes account of various representations received over the last year and meetings which officials have had with representatives of the UK Information Industries.

The Government believe there to be considerable scope for reform designed to provide a lead and act as a catalyst for enabling effective dissemination and distribution of official information; and to aid the development of our Information Industries.

The Government look forward to receiving comments on the options and questions aired in the Green Paper. At the end of the consultation period, the Government will announce their conclusions. It is our clear intention, however, to place the management of Crown copyright on a simplified and sure footing which will serve the citizen and user of government-originated material well. The demands of the Information Age, with electronic delivery increasingly substituting for print on paper, requires a new approach. This Green Paper provides the basis for devising that approach.

Freedom of Information

Mr. Willis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to introduce freedom of information legislation. [23361]

Dr. David Clark: The Government's plans for freedom of information legislation are set out in the White Paper "Your Right to Know" (Cm 3818) published on 11 December 1997.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the annual running costs of nuclear weapons transportation. [21209]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 17 December 1997]: The annual cost of nuclear weapon transportation for financial year 1996–97 is in the order of £3 million. This figure represents the cost of maintaining and operating the convoys that transport the weapons, as well as the costs of personnel associated with this activity.

Recruitment

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the cost of training new recruits to armed forces to meet the rate of resignations as a percentage of each armed forces total salary bill; and if he will make a statement. [21650]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 22 December 1997]: The Armed Forces require about 25,000 new recruits each year to maintain the trained manpower requirement, and to meet the annual rate of outflow both in terms of resignations and natural wastage. The numbers of personnel who left the Armed Forces under Premature Voluntary Release (PVR) terms in 1996–97, and the numbers recruited from civil life by Service that year, are shown in the table:

Service (a)	PVR exits (b)	Numbers recruited (c)	Comparison: ((b) as a percentage (c)) (d)
Naval Service	2,013	3,959	'51%
Army	6,224	15,552	40%
RAF	1,718	2,684	'64%

' The comparison figures for the Naval Service and RAF are, to an extent, exaggerated because of the Defence Cost Study redundancy programmes, resulting in a lowering of the trained requirement. Recruits would not be needed to replace redundees in the same way that they would be to replace those leaving for other reasons.

The cost of initial recruit training in financial year 1996–97 for each Service was:

	£ million	Per cent.	£ million
Naval Service	56.5	x51=	28.82
Army	69.6	x40=	27.80
RAF	26.8	x64=	17.15
Total	152.8		73.77

The costs in the left hand column cover initial recruit training for all intakes; that is, to maintain the trained manpower requirement, and to meet the annual rate of outflow both in terms of resignations and natural wastage. Although there is no direct relationship between numbers recruited and resignations in any given year, the costs in the right hand column express the approximate cost of training an equivalent number of recruits to those leaving on resignation. The total of £73.77 million represents just over 1 per cent. of the overall cost of the Armed Forces salaries bill for 1996–97.

Military Personnel and Equipment (Private Use)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those occasions since 1 May on which military personnel and equipment was hired out to private individuals or companies. [22618]

Dr. Reid: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Trawlers (Intelligence Gathering)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hull, West and Hessle (Mr. Johnson) of 17 December 1997, Official Report, column 214, on intelligence gathered by trawlers, if he will name the trawlers; if he will indicate whether the Gaul was used for intelligence purposes and whether it was being so used at the time of its sinking; and if arrangements for using trawlers for intelligence work and collecting intelligence from crews of other trawlers operated at Grimsby. [22637]

Dr. Reid: The three trawlers used for specific intelligence gathering operations in the mid-60s and early 1970s were MV Arctic Galliard, MV Lord Nelson and MV Invincible. All were owned by Hull-based companies, and almost certainly operated from that port. The MV Gaul was not involved in any such activity either before or at the time of her loss in 1974.

More generally, personnel did occasionally embark on trawlers, during which time they were encouraged to report back any opportunity sightings of interest, as indeed were the trawlermen themselves. While we can assume that this did not necessarily centre on Hull-based vessels, there are no records to indicate whether trawlers or trawlermen from other ports were involved.

United Nations Training School

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United Kingdom service personnel attended courses at the United Nations Training School in Ireland in each of the last three years. [22536]

Dr. Reid: The numbers of United Kingdom service personnel who have attended courses at the United Nations Training School in the Republic of Ireland in each of the last three years are as detailed:

1997: 2

1996: 2

1995: 2.

Republic of Ireland

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel from the Republic of Ireland's defence forces received training at military establishments in the United Kingdom in each of the last three years. [22535]

Dr. Reid: It has been the practice of successive Administrations not to release details of military assistance provided to other countries on the grounds that this information has been considered confidential between Governments, and that disclosure would risk damaging our international relations. However, this practice is being reviewed against the background of the Government's commitment to openness, and I will write to the right hon. Gentleman once the review is complete.

Personnel (North Yorkshire)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many MOD (a) service and (b) civilian personnel were based in North Yorkshire at the latest date for which figures are available and in each of the previous 10 years; and if he will list those MOD units which were based in North Yorkshire 10 years ago, but have since been closed or moved elsewhere, indicating in each case the number of (i) service and (ii) civilian personnel employed 10 years ago. [23325]

Mr. Spellar: The detailed historic information requested is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Centrally held information is as follows:

Service and Civilian Personnel located in North Yorkshire

Date	Service	Civilian
30 June 1986	11,500	4,300
30 June 1987	11,100	4,200
30 June 1988	12,300	4,100
30 June 1989	12,300	4,100
30 June 1990	12,800	4,300
30 June 1991	12,600	4,300
1 July 1992	13,400	4,200
1 July 1993	11,800	3,800
1 July 1994	10,800	3,500
1 July 1995	10,600	3,100
1 July 1996	10,100	2,500
1 July 1997	n/a	2,200

n/a = Not available.

Civilian numbers are full time equivalents. Prior to 1 April 1995, part timers counted as half of full time; after 1 April 1995 they were counted by the proportion of conditioned hours worked.

Ministry of Defence site closures in North Yorkshire in the last ten years include:

Colburn Barracks, Catterick

District Workshops, Strensall

Driffield Camp, Nr Beverley

Uniacke Barracks, Harrogate

Hildebrande Barracks, Harrogate

RAF Elvington

AAC Harrogate (Army Apprentice Col. to reopen in September 1998 as Army Foundation College (Interim Solution)

RAF Harrogate

Government Buildings, Harrogate

Hessay Supply Depot

Scorton Storage Depot

RAF Catterick (became Marne Barracks)

Scarborough Training School

Escrick Storage Depot.

RAF Marston Moor

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what use is currently being made of the surviving structures at RAF Marston Moor. [23381]

Mr. Spellar: As far as can be ascertained from remaining records, the former RAF airfield at Marston Moor was disposed of in the 1960s. My Department retains no interest in the former airfield structures and is not aware of their current ownership or use.

Chapelcross Magnox Station

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department was first informed of the crack in the reactor at Chapelcross Magnox station. [23398]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence was first made aware on 25 June 1997 that a crack had been discovered in a heat exchanger shell in Reactor 2 at BNFL's station at Chapelcross. The fault was discovered during a routine maintenance inspection.

Army Prosecuting Authority

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the administrative and judicial relationship between the Army Prosecuting Authority and the Lord Chancellor. [23730]

Mr. George Robertson: The post of Army Prosecuting Authority, which operates under the general superintendence of the Attorney-General, has no administrative, judicial or any other relationship with the Lord Chancellor. It is, of course, quite proper for the APA to give consideration to a legal issue which arises in any given case, whatever the source, including the Lord Chancellor, that alerts him to it.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who is the current head of the Army Prosecuting Authority; and what are his other duties. [23732]

Mr. George Robertson: Major General Risius is, having been appointed by HM The Queen, the Prosecuting Authority for the Army. He is also the Director of Army Legal Services and, as such, is the most senior Army lawyer.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to whom the Army Prosecuting Authority reports. [23731]

Mr. George Robertson: The Army Prosecuting Authority is subject to the general superintendence of the Attorney-General. The APA is independent of, and cannot be directed by, the military chain of command on cases he is asked to consider. The military authorities are informed on a case by case basis of decisions taken by the Army Prosecuting Authority.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account the Army Prosecuting Authority takes of the opinions of the Lord Chancellor in determining whether or not to conduct a prosecution. [23735]

Mr. George Robertson: The Army Prosecuting Authority operates under the general superintendence of the Attorney-General. The decision whether or not to prosecute a case referred to the Army Prosecuting Authority is made on the realistic prospect of obtaining a conviction based on the available evidence, and whether a prosecution is in the public and Service interest. These tests are essentially the same as those applied by the Crown Prosecution Service. It is of course, quite proper for the APA to give consideration to any legal issue which arises in a given case, whatever the source that alerts him to it.

Prosecutions (Disobeyed Orders)

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances his Department will initiate a prosecution against a serviceman who disobeys an order not to speak to the media. [23736]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 12 January 1998, Official Report, column 4, in which I explained the function and status of the Army Prosecuting Authority. The Prosecuting Authorities of all three Services operate in the same manner.

The decision whether to prosecute or not will depend on the specific circumstances of each case after an assessment has been made of all the pertinent legal, evidential and procedural issues. It is not possible to specify any particular circumstances which would apply.

Major Eric Joyce

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what press briefing his Department provided in respect of a letter to him from the Lord Chancellor concerning Major Eric Joyce. [23734]

Mr. George Robertson: None. Since correspondence between Ministers is confidential and not for publication, and is properly withheld under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, no press briefing material was either required or provided.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what meetings Ministers held to discuss Major Eric Joyce's conduct; and what was the date of such meetings. [23733]

Mr. George Robertson: Defence Ministers have taken part in no meetings which discussed what disciplinary action, if any, should be taken against Major Joyce, or determined the course of any action in train. These are matters for the Army. The matter of Major Joyce's conduct has inevitably been the subject of discussion between Ministers, and between Ministers and officials, concerning the handling of the public and parliamentary business to which the case has given rise.

Seaton Barracks, Plymouth

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the negotiations regarding the transfer of Seaton Barracks, Plymouth, to English Partnerships will be completed; and if he will make a statement about the reasons for the delay. [23952]

Mr. Spellar: Following complex and detailed negotiations a final draft valuation report has now been submitted to English Partnership (EP) by independent Valuers acting for the Ministry of Defence. A deadline of 30 January has been set to agree the final report.

Negotiations between the parties have become protracted due to the need to complete surveys and obtain detailed information and costings on a variety of infrastructure and planning issues including highways, utilities and playing fields. The requisite information has now been incorporated into the final draft valuation report.

Chemical and Biological Weapons

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence since when service personnel taking part in the service volunteers programme at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment Porton Down have been allowed to take away form the establishment copies of the written consent forms which they have signed. [22513]

Dr. Reid: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 19 January 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your question concerning the service volunteer programme at DERA's Chemical and Biological Defence Sector (CBD) at Porton Down.

Studies at Porton Down have always been conducted to the highest standard of ethical practice prevailing at the time and volunteers would have been required to give their informed consent to take part in a study. This may not, however, have been in the form of written consent as the written consent form used today has only been recently introduced.

The consent forms currently signed by service volunteers attending CBD Porton Down are kept with the records at Porton Down. As far as staff at Porton Down are aware, no volunteer has asked for a copy of his consent form in the past. There is, however, no reason why copies of signed consent forms cannot be given to volunteers should they request them.

I hope this is helpful.

Animal Experiments (Porton Down)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many animals have been bred for use in experiments at Porton Down in each year from 1990 to 1997 to date; and how many of each year's total were subsequently killed without being so used. [22965]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Norman Baker, dated 19 January 1998:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence concerning the number of animals bred and used in animal experimentation at Porton Down in each year from 1990 to 1997 as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency.

The animal species currently bred at Porton Down are Rhesus monkeys, common marmosets, Porton strain mice, Porton strain Wistar rats and Large White pigs. These colonies must be maintained at levels sufficient to protect the genetic base of the species and to supply all of DERA's requirements in terms of numbers, sex, age, weight, timing and quality.

Table 1.

Year	Mice			Rats			Marmoset			Rhesus			Pigs
	Weaned	Issued	Surplus cull	Weaned	Issued	Surplus cull	Weaned	Issued	Surplus cull	Weaned	Issued	Surplus cull	Weaned	Issued	Market sales

Table 1 shows the number of animals weaned by the breeding unit at CBD, the number of animals issued from the unit and the number of animals culled by the Unit. This information is shown for the financial (not calendar) year. The numbers of animals (mice, rats, marmosets and Rhesus) issued represent those for scientific use at CBD and sales of surplus animals for scientific use at other establishments; the number of animals retained for replenishment of breeding stock is not shown in this table. Surplus pigs are sent to the local market; the figures do, however, include a small number kept for breeding at CBD. The number of animals weaned is not necessarily equal to the total of the number issued and the number of surplus stock culled in any one year. The discrepancies may be due to the occurrence of natural deaths or to the fact that animals, especially the Rhesus monkeys and marmosets, may not be issued until they are between 12 and 24 months old.

The number of rats and mice culled is high, but in line with commercial operation. This is due to stringent experimental requirements, such as the use of single sex or narrow weight ranges. However, with the exception of 1994–1995, no Rhesus monkeys or marmosets have been culled. The marmosets were culled due to a very low usage at CBD and an unexpected fall in demand elsewhere. Table 1 shows that the breeding of marmosets was, therefore, significantly reduced in subsequent years.

I hope this information is helpful.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the date of the last occasion on which he or his predecessor viewed (a) the conditions in which animals are kept at Porton Down and (b) an experiment to which an animal was subjected. [22967]

Mr. Spellar: Since 1 May 1997, no Minister from this Department has visited the Chemical and Biological Defence Sector at the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency, Porton Down. I intend to visit Porton Down myself in the next two or three months.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he is taking to introduce alternatives to animal experimentation at Porton Down; and if he will list the initiatives in this area since 1995. [22962]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Norman Baker, dated January 1998:

As Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) I have been asked to reply to your question about the introduction of alternatives to animal experimentation at Porton Down.

The use of alternatives to living animals has always been a priority in designing and executing research programmes to address the MOD's requirements.

Alternatives must be fully considered when drawing up a project licence application. At CBD each project licence application is subjected to an internal peer group ethical review. The meeting is open to all members of staff, the details of the licence application are briefly presented and then the meeting is open to debate on both scientific and ethical concerns. One of the major aims is to ensure that the '3Rs' have been addressed, i.e., Reduction, Replacement and Refinement. The review can result in an application being completely rejected, held over subject to improvements being made or approved for submission to the Home Office.

The review procedure is in line with the outcome of a Home Office Supplementary Note 'Interim report on the review of operation of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986' dated 6 November 1997 which emphasises the requirement that applicants for new project licences must demonstrate that they have sought alternatives before the use of animals is proposed.

With respect to initiatives since 1995, a new in vitro toxicology laboratory has been commissioned at CBD Porton. The use of in-vitro cell and tissue culture models allows innovative research to identify novel medical countermeasures and examine the potential hazards and the mechanism of action of chemical and non-chemical agents. Similar models are also used in research to investigate treatment regimes and prospective protective and decontaminating compounds for use in a chemical warfare environment.

Experiments using animals have also been essential for advances in the surgical management of injury. Another recent initiative has been the development of a variety of model systems for studies on the protection of personnel from physical injury and the identification of injury mechanisms. The model systems can be grouped under three headings; animal cadaveric tissue; physical models; and computer models. They have either reduced or entirely replaced the use of living animals.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what external procedures exist to ensure that animals held at Porton Down are allowed so far as possible to follow normal behaviour patterns and that the are properly looked after. [22966]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Norman Baker, dated 19 January 1998:

As Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA), I have been asked to reply to your question about the way in which animals are cared for at Porton Down.

All work and housing involving animals at DERA's Chemical and Biological Defence Sector (CBD) at Porton Down are conducted strictly in accordance with the Home Office guidelines on the care and use of animals as defined within the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 which is administered by the Home Office.

CBS adheres to and expands upon existing Home Office codes of practice and guidelines for the care and housing of animals involved in scientific procedures. There is an on-going programme of environmental enrichment for all species. In particular, CBD Porton has an established track record of innovative approaches to the housing of non-human primates used in scientific procedures.

Inspectors from the Home Office make both announced and unannounced visits to CBD Porton and have full access to all CBD animal facilities. As part of the Act the establishment must have a named veterinary surgeon and named animal care and welfare officers. At CBD these officers have formed and internal Animal Care and Use committee. The welfare of the animals is of paramount importance to Porton Down which has a world wide reputation for its excellent standards of husbandry and breeding of laboratory animals.

In addition to the statutory controls in place, the Ministry of Defence has established an independent animal welfare committee—Animal Welfare Advisory Committee—which reviews the arrangements for animal care and welfare at sites within DERA carrying out work with animals, and advises on best practice. The reports from this independent committee are made to the Chief Scientific Adviser to the Ministry of Defence and are published in the House of Commons Library.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the terms of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 are applied to procedures carried out at Porton Down. [22961]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Norman Baker, dated 19 January 1998:

As Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA), I have been asked to reply to your question about the application of the terms of the Animal (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 to procedures carried out at Porton Down.

All work involving animals at DERA's Chemical and Biological Defence Sector (CBD) at Porton Down is carried out strictly in accordance with the requirements of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 which is administered by the Home Office.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to ensure that animal experiments undertaken at Porton Down do not breach the terms of the Protection of Animals Act 1911 in respect of the deliberate infliction of wanton physical cruelty. [22964]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Norman Baker, dated 19 January 1998:

As Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) I have been asked to reply to your question about the steps taken to ensure that animal experiments at Porton Down do not breach the terms of the Protection of Animals Act 1911.

All work involving animals at DERA's Chemical and Biological Defence Sector (CBD) is carried out strictly in accordance with the requirements of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 which superseded the Cruelty to Animals Act (1876). The Act covers all experimental work involving the use of animals, and states: "A person guilty of an offence under section 1 of the Animals Act 1911 or section 1 of the Protection of Animals (Scotland) Act 1912 in respect of an animal at a designated establishment shall be liable to the penalties specified in subsection (1) above".

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent he shares information obtain from animal experimentation at Porton Down with other members of NATO; and to what extent he is provided with information obtained from animal experimentation carried out in other NATO countries. [22968]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Norman Baker, dated 19 January 1998:

As Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation Research Agency (DERA) I have been asked to reply to your question about the extent to which information gained from animal experimentation is shared among the members of NATO.

The UK government participates, whenever possible, in collaborative research programmes which involve a sharing of data and, indeed, results from the UK research programme have been shared with other NATO members. One of the considerations in planning collaborative programmes and sharing information is the reduction of animal use on an international basis.

I hope this is helpful.

Aircraft Requirements

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the competition for Tranche 2 of the Hercules Replacement Programme and the possibility of leasing C–17 aircraft. [23137]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 5 November 1997, Official Report, column 255. One of the aims of the Strategic Defence Review is to ensure that our Armed Forces are properly equipped to undertake the tasks asked of them. Our air transport requirement is therefore being scrutinised closely in the Strategic Defence Review.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to issue the invitation to tender for the RAF's Tranche 2 airlift requirements to Lockheed Martin and Boeing/McDonnell Douglas for a full competition. [23140]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 5 November 1997, Official Report, column 255. We are still considering with partners how a competition involving other aircraft might be organised.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the impact of discussion of C-17 leasing on efforts to integrate (a) European aerospace companies, and (b) the aerospace industry in general. [23143]

Mr. Spellar: One of the aims of the Strategic Defence Review is to ensure that our Armed Forces are properly equipped to undertake the tasks asked of them. Our air transport requirement is therefore being scrutinised closely in the Strategic Defence Review. Where appropriate, industrial and other implications will be taken into account in reaching decisions on the way ahead.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment he has made of the (a) cost, (b) viability and (c) acceptability to the Royal Air Force of the Royal Air Force operating three types of heavy-lift aircraft; [23136]

(2) what plans his Department has for a near-term lease of C-17 aircraft; [23138]

(3) when the Government will make a full public statement on his Department's requirement for an outsize cargo airlift capability within the SDR; [23141]

(4) what conclusions have so far been reached as part of the SDR in relation to the future of the FLA. [23139]

Mr. Spellar: One of the aims of the Strategic Defence Review is to ensure that the Armed Forces are properly equipped to undertake the tasks asked of them. Our air transport requirement is therefore being scrutinised closely in the Review. We will announce our conclusions in the White Paper to be published at the end of the Review.

Aerospace Industry (North-West)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account will be taken of the importance of maintaining aerospace jobs in (a) Chorley and (b) other North-West Region constituencies in future airlift planning. [23142]

Mr. Spellar: Any decision on our future airlift capability will take account of all industrial and employment issues, as well as all other relevant factors.

Meat Procurement

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the criteria which Booker Foodservice are required to apply in meeting the best value for money terms under their contract to supply meat to the armed forces; and if he will make a statement. [23974]

Mr. Spellar: The Department's food supply contractor is bound to seek best market prices for meat. All purchasers are required to conform with quality specifications which, together with statutory requirements, ensure that only meat of an acceptable standard is supplied.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the contract terms which require Booker Foodservice to give full consideration to British products in procuring meat for the armed forces; and if he will make a statement. [23973]

Mr. Spellar: The Department has specifically asked Booker Foodservice to ensure that it gives full consideration to the supply of British meat where this would meet the contract specifications and provide best value for money.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if all meat and all meat products procured for the Armed Forces comply with (a) Council Directive 64/433/EEC, (b) the Fresh Meat (Beef Controls) (No. 2) Regulations 1996 and (c) the UK specified risk material controls; and if he will make a statement. [23976]

Mr. Spellar: Yes. Meat and meat products for the Armed Forces are obtained from contractors who obtain their supplies on the open market and those suppliers are required to meet all the statutory regulations.

Eurofighter

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much the United Kingdom is contributing to the total cost of the Eurofighter; what percentage this represents of the total; what percentage of the work on the building and maintenance of the Eurofighter is to be carried out in the United Kingdom; and how many jobs will be created in the United Kingdom as a result of the project. [23388]

Mr. George Robertson: The latest estimated procurement cost of the Eurofighter programme is £42.8 billion, £15.9 billion of which is the estimated cost to the UK. This is some 37 per cent. of the total. For the Production phase, UK work share will be approximately 37.5 per cent. This is based on the number of aircraft we are buying in relation to the other nations. Present plans are for each nation to be responsible for the maintenance of their respective aircraft and we therefore expect the majority of maintenance work on the RAF's aircraft to be conducted in the UK. Currently, there are about 6,000 high technology jobs sustained by the development phase of the Eurofighter programme in the UK. This figure is expected to rise to about 14,000 at the peak of production.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Minimum Wage

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what research her Department has commissioned on the impact of minimum wages in Northern Ireland. [20780]

Mr. Ingram: None. The Government have appointed the Low Pay Commission to gather evidence and make recommendations in relation to the national minimum wage. To that end, the Commission visited Northern Ireland on 31 October, and my Department is contributing fully to the evidence which the Government are soon to present to the Commission.

Plastic Baton Rounds

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will publish the full tender for baton training referred to in the letter from the Home Office Minister of State to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley, dated 18 August. [20013]

Mr. Ingram: No; publication of the tenders for the provision of equipment for training purposes for the RUC would not be in the interests of national security.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list all overseas visits made since 1 May 1997 on which she or any other Minister in her Department has been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code, indicating (a) who accompanied him or her and (b) the cost to public funds of each such visit. [23266]

Marjorie Mowlam [holding answer 15 January 1998]: No overseas visits have taken place where Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code applies.

Holmes Cash and Carry (Robbery)

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the circumstances relating to the arrest and preferring of charges against eight men in connection with a robbery at Holmes Cash and Carry at Boucher road, Belfast in February 1996; how many juries were selected and how many trials took place; what was the cost of the entire judicial process; for what reason this case was descheduled; and if she will make a statement regarding its conduct and outcome. [23385]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 January 1998]: On 12 February 1996, the RUC, acting on information received, went to the premises of Holmes Cash and Carry at Boucher road, Belfast and arrested seven men in the premises and one additional man a short distance away. All eight men were arrested under provisions of section 14(1)(b) of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1986 and conveyed to Castlereagh Holding Centre for interview. Charges were subsequently preferred for the offences of Armed Robbery and Unlawful Imprisonment.

During the following court proceedings six juries were involved. There were six trials, two of which reached conclusion.

The then Attorney-General certified that the charges in this case were not to be treated as scheduled offences. He has asked me to say that he did so because he formed the erroneous view that they were not connected with the emergency.

It is not possible to provide the cost of this entire judicial process without incurring disproportionate cost.

The Secretary of State does not intend to make a statement about the conduct and outcome of this case.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Team Sports

11. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps his Department takes to encourage competitive team sports. [21451]

Mr. Banks: Our sport for all policy is dedicated to providing excellence at all levels and improving sporting performance, while increasing sporting opportunities for the many, not the few. It encompasses all sports including competitive team sports.

Sport (Women)

12. Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures he intends to take to encourage more women to participate in sport. [21452]

Mr. Banks: I am determined to improve opportunities for women of all ages and at all levels in sport. That goes for participants, competitors, coaches and administrators.

The UK and Home Country Sports Councils actively encourage women to get involved in all sports. They are underlining the significant achievement of women in sport and helping improve levels of participation.

Arts Council

14. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to review his relationship with the Arts Council. [21455]

Mr. Fisher: My Department, in common with all others, is currently undertaking a fundamental review of expenditure. The review involves a re-evaluation of all the activities in the sectors covered by the department and its sponsored bodies, and of the relationships between them. The terms of reference for the review were published on 24 July and copies are available in the Library of the House.

Millennium Commission

15. Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is (a) the number and (b) the cost of projects funded by the Millennium Commission to date. [21457]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Millennium Commission has offered grant to 186 capital projects at 3,008 locations across the United Kingdom and through the Millennium Awards scheme has made 14,500 grants to individuals. It has also made a grant of £450 million to the Experience at Greenwich.

The total amount offered to capital projects is £1,235,308,558. The total cost of these projects is £2,969,141,000. Awards to individuals currently total £39 million.

19. Ms Hewitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to ensure that projects funded by the Millennium Commission continue after 2000. [21461]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Millennium Commission has provided £1.24 billion in grant for 185 projects across the country. It is a condition of grant that projects show they can meet their revenue costs for the foreseeable future.

United Kingdom Sports Institute

16. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on how the new United Kingdom Sports Institute will help British sportsmen and women excel in international competitions. [21458]

Mr. Banks: The United Kingdom Sports Institute will have the very best experts and facilities available. British sports men and women will be able to tap into the best advice on sports science, sports medicine and technology to assess how their training programme can be augmented and enhanced.

The Institute will make a major contribution to providing support to the various sports Governing Bodies to achieve their aspirations of winning more medals and championships in international competitions.

British-produced Films

17. Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to increase the number of British-produced films shown (a) domestically and (b) internationally. [21459]

Mr. Tom Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friends the Members for Leyton and Wanstead (Mr. Cohen) and Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham).

Sport (Ticket Touts)

20. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received on the impact of the activities of ticket touts on sports funding. [21463]

Mr. Banks: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Home Affairs and I met the CCPR recently to discuss the issue of ticket touts generally. The Government are looking at the extent of the problem and what practical solutions are available.

Tourism (Training and Qualifications)

21. Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to encourage the improvement of training and qualifications in the tourism industry. [21464]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The development of a skilled, world class workforce is vital if the tourism, hospitality and leisure industry is to provide the excellent service that customers demand. A working group of the Tourism Advisory Forum is looking specifically at training, qualifications and quality of employment and will feed into the new tourism strategy which we will publish next summer.

Non-league Football

22. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has for the future of non-league football. [21465]

Mr. Banks: I recognise the importance of having a healthy structure of non-league football. I was pleased to be able to announce last June that £20 million will be available to the Football Trust over the next four years from the Football Association and the National Lottery to support football at all levels, including the non-league game. I am also pleased that the Lottery is having such a positive impact on football generally with this sport being the second largest beneficiary of awards to date.

Classical Music

23. Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on Government support for classical music. [21467]

Mr. Fisher: Britain has an unrivalled and historic tradition of high quality classical music. My Department funds the BBC and the Arts Council of England, each of which invests significant sums in support of propagating and developing classical music. Local authorities also invest significant sums in support of the arts and classical music, and the British Council represents the best of British artistic talent abroad.

National Lottery

24. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to change the lottery operator in 2001. [21468]

Mr. Chris Smith: The appointment of the next National Lottery operator is a matter for the Director General of the National Lottery. Subject to the approval of Parliament, the National Lottery Bill provides that the Director General will be assisted in the selection process by an advisory panel.

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to make national lottery funding simpler for small community organisations in Wales. [21448]

Mr. Fisher: The National Lottery Bill will help to ensure that more Lottery money goes to small scale projects in local communities. It will allow distributors to make application processes simpler and to move decision making to the grass roots.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what are his plans for revenue funding to support capital projects funded from the National Lottery. [21453]

Mr. Banks: Lottery distributors may already provide revenue grants or endowments alongside capital grants if they believe it is a sensible use of Lottery funds. We have made clear our view that, over time, the focus of Lottery funding should shift from buildings to people. I intend to give the distributors greater flexibility in their strategies to shift the balance from capital to revenue support without entering into long-term commitments which will prevent them from meeting new needs.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what percentage of heritage lottery applications have been turned down (a) in 1996 and (b) since the recent decision to establish health and education funds to be supported by the lottery, in respect of (i) the North West Region and (ii) the United Kingdom. [23366]

Mr. Banks: Twenty-four per cent. of applications considered by the Heritage Lottery Fund (HLF) in 1996 for projects in the North West were rejected. The equivalent figure for the whole of the UK was 27 per cent. Plans to establish the New Opportunities Fund, the new good cause for health, education and the environment, were announced in the White Paper "The People's Lottery" in July 1997. Since then, the HLF has rejected 26 per cent. of applications for projects in the North West and 31 per cent. of applications for the UK as a whole.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the decision of the Heritage Lottery Board to reject the application from Southport Pier Trust for funding of the renovation. [23376]

Mr. Banks: Decisions on heritage Lottery applications are made independently of Government by the Trustees of the National Heritage Memorial Fund, the body responsible for the Heritage Lottery Fund. My right hon. Friend does not intervene in the process or comment on decisions made.

Football (Racism)

25. Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to help combat racism in football. [21469]

Mr. Banks: The Government are committed to stamping out racism in all areas of sport. One of the primary tasks for the Government's Football Task Force is to examine ways in which racism can be eliminated from the game, and to encourage wider participation by ethnic minorities, in playing and spectating. The Task Force will be making its recommendations to me shortly.

Music Industry (Piracy)

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to combat piracy in the music industry. [21460]

Mr. Fisher: The Government work closely with the music industry in identifying areas where piracy is a problem, and in taking action to deal with it.

Public Appointments

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his Answer to the hon. Member for Leicester, East of 22 December 1997, Official Report, columns 410–13, on public appointments, if he will list the region or nation of home residence for each of the appointees. [23009]

Mr. Chris Smith: The information requested is listed in the table and notes the region/nation of residence at the time of appointment:

Sporting Championships

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what campaigns he is involved in to bring major sporting championships to the United Kingdom in addition to the World Cup 2006. [23097]

Mr. Banks: In addition to providing full Government backing for England's bid to host the 2006 World Cup, we are fully committed to work to bring the Olympics and other major international sporting events to the UK. I am working closely with the British Olympic Association and the UK Sports Council to ensure that we have the best possible chance of success. Lottery funds have been earmarked, through the World Class Events Programme, specifically to attract major events to this country.

Military Heritage

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will compile a register of historic military airfields; and if he will take steps to ensure their preservation. [23001]

Mr. Banks: My right hon. Friend has a statutory duty to compile lists of buildings of special architectural or historic interest. English Heritage, his statutory advisers on listing, are currently undertaking a thematic study of military airfields and will be making recommendations to me later this year on buildings and structures at such sites which merit listing. Consent is required before any works can be undertaken to a listed building which would affect its special interest. In addition, the Defence of Britain Project, co-ordinated by the Council for British Archaeology, is compiling a record of 20th Century military sites and structures in the UK, although inclusion on the record will not attract any additional statutory protection.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the historic battlefields which have been lost since 1967 through development or whose setting has been damaged. [22999]

Mr. Banks: On the evidence of research conducted by English Heritage in preparing their Register of Historic Battlefields, the only important battlefield site in England lost through development since 1967 is Newark (1644).

Of the 43 surviving battlefields included on the Register, the following are considered by English Heritage to have been significantly damaged by development since 1967, although not to the point of extinction:

Adwalton Moor (1643)
Naseby (1645)
Neville's Cross (1346)
Newbury I (1643)
Northampton (1460)
Stamford Bridge (1066)
Tewkesbury (1471)
Worcester/Powick Bridge (1651).

The following battlefields are considered to have suffered significant damage to their settings since 1967:

Chalgrove (1643)
Shrewsbury (1403).

Church Buildings

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what financial assistance the Government provide for church building repairs; and what total funds it provided in each of the last five years. [23099]

Mr. Banks: The reply relates to England only. Government financial assistance for the repair of historic religious buildings in use is channelled principally via English Heritage's church and cathedral grant schemes. Funding for historic places of worship is also available from the Heritage Lottery Fund. In addition, my Department provides 70 per cent. of the funding of the Churches Conservation Trust, which preserves outstanding Anglican churches no longer in use for worship, and contributes (both directly and by way of English Heritage) to the costs of the Historic Chapels Trust, which cares for a number of non-Anglican buildings.

Funding offered under these schemes in each of the last five years is as follows:

£ million

1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
English Heritage church grant offers:

[1] For 1997–98 English Heritage and the Heritage Lottery Fund are collaborating on a joint application scheme for places of worship in England, for which both organisations have allocated £10 million. The figure for Heritage Lottery Funding includes an additional amount for funding outside the joint scheme.

TREASURY

Outdoor Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the measures being taken by (a) the Valuation Office and (b) the Valuation Office in the Bristol area to reduce the avoidance of business rates on outdoor advertising sites. [22173]

Dawn Primarolo: Valuation Officers in England and Wales are responsible for including all rateable business uses in local rating lists and have been reviewing the position with outdoor advertising sites for some months. In the Bristol area, the review has been under way for some time similarly and a number of missing sites have been identified and will be assessed for rates by the Valuation Officer accordingly.

Social Security Benefits

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards the taxation of social security benefits. [22121]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 22 December 1997]: At present, some social security benefits are taxable (including widow's benefit, retirement pension, jobseeker's allowance and incapacity benefit), while some are not (income-related benefits such as income support, housing benefit, council tax benefit, child benefit, disability living allowance/attendance allowance). In addition, incapacity benefit for all new cases since 1995 has been taxable.

Employment Statistics

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people are currently employed in the United Kingdom by foreign-owned companies, broken down by country of ownership. [22894]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. David Heath, dated 19 January 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), to your recent question on employment in the United Kingdom by foreign owned companies.

The attached table provides data for all foreign owned businesses in the UK. It has been split to show each country within the EU, but for non-EU only 6 countries have been illustrated with the remainder grouped. This is in line with similar data that was produced in an article in the ONS publication Economic Trends, entitled 'Globalisation: Scope, Issues & Statistics'—Table 9 in No. 528 November 1997. That data was however based on agriculture, manufacturing and distribution rather than whole economy.

The table represents enterprises on the Inter Departmental Business Register (IDBR). An article giving further explanation on the IDBR is in Economic Trends No. 505 November 1995. Information relating to country of ownership details for UK enterprises is provided to the ONS by the market information firm Dun & Bradstreet.

The analyses are based on an employment size measure (employees plus working proprietors). The primary source of employees data on the IDBR is the ONS inquiry, Annual Employment Survey.

Copies of Economic Trends are available in the House of Commons Library.

Pensions Mis-selling

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will instruct the Personal Investment Authority to reimburse independent financial advisers who were fined for relying on computer-based records in the period up to the decision of the Personal Investment Authority to accept computer records as evidence of work done; and if he will make a statement. [22887]

Mrs. Liddell: The Treasury has no such power.

Population Statistics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the numbers and percentage of the population (a) in general and (b) over 60 years old, who are (i) over 75, (ii) over 80 and (iii) over 85 years in each region of the United Kingdom. [23670]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 19 January 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me, as Director of the Office for National Statistics, to reply to your recent question asking for an estimate of the numbers and percentage of the population (a) in general and (b) over 60 years old, who are (i) over 75, (ii) over 80 and (iii) over 85 years in each region and nation of the United Kingdom.

The most recent data available are the mid-1996 population estimates. The attached table provides the information by the ages requested.

Employment Statistics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library tables showing the distribution of men and women, distinguishing between part-time and full-time workers and, between industries and services as in Table 3 of the Labour Market Gazette, November 1996, page 491, for each local authority in Tyne and Wear. [23668]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office of National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 19 January 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as the Director of the Office for National Statistics, to your recent question on employment in Tyne and Wear.

Data for every sector listed in Table 3 of Labour Market Trends are available on the NOMIS database, which is accessible through the House of Commons Library. However, to represent the confidentiality of individual businesses, many of the figures would be suppressed. I suggest instead that you refer to the data for each of the five local authorities which make up Tyne and Wear at SIC92 section level. At this level of aggregation none of the data are suppressed.

Earnings

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated number of (a) men and (b) women who are earning less than £2.00 per hour in the United Kingdom. [23287]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Tom Cox dated 19 January 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as the Director of the Office for National Statistics, to your recent question on earnings.

The available information from the Labour Force Survey (LFS), Summer (June 1997–August 1997) is shown below. The LFS provides earnings data for Great Britain and not the United Kingdom and is regarded as the most appropriate source for low pay data.

Estimated numbers of men and women earning less than £2 per hour in Great Britain

Men 220,000

Women 283,000.

Retail Prices Index

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will alter the constituent elements of the RPI to reflect current spending on services and goods. [23573]

Mrs. Liddell: The ONS recalculates weights for the constituent elements of the Retail Prices Index (RPI) at the start of each year using the latest available figures from the Family Expenditure Survey (FES). For example, from February 1998, the RPI weights will use information from the FES for the period July 1996 to June 1997. This allows the ONS to reflect the most up to date spending patterns available and to introduce new goods and services into the index.

Single Currency

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with his German counterpart about the implications for the introduction of the euro of the challenge in the German Constitutional Court concerning the alleged failure of Germany to meet the Maastricht criteria for entry into a single currency; and if he will make a statement. [23294]

Mrs. Liddell: The Chancellor meets his German counterpart on a regular basis, including at ECOFIN where a range of issues are discussed. However, it would not be right for me to comment on the internal matters of other EU Member States.

London Art Market

Mr. Green: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the impact of VAT harmonisation in the EU on London's art market. [21466]

Dawn Primarolo: Goods imported into the UK normally bear VAT at the standard rate (17.5 per cent.). Under the terms of EC law introduced in 1995, certain works of art, antiques and collector's pieces imported into the UK are eligible until 30 June 1999 for an effective rate of VAT at importation of 2.5 per cent. After that date, the UK should increase the VAT rate to at least the normal minimum effective reduced rate of 5 per cent.

During 1998, the EC Commission is expected to review the effects of the relevant EC legislation on the competitiveness of the Community art markets compared to third countries' art markets. The relevant Government Departments are working closely with art trade bodies to evaluate those effects, and to ensure that the position of the UK's fine art market will be properly represented in that review.

CABINET OFFICE

Millennium Experience

28. Mr. Page: To ask the Minister without Portfolio how much public money he estimates will be spent on the millennium experience. [21472]

Mr. Mandelson: No taxpayers' money is being spent on the project other than that already committed by English Partnerships to prepare the site for development. The New Millennium Experience Company is receiving a Lottery grant of £399 million (net) from the Millennium Commission. A further £359 million of income will be raised from sponsorship, commercial activities, visitor revenue and disposal income.

30. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Minister without Portfolio how much of the Greenwich millennium experience's budget will be raised through ticket sales. [21474]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company currently estimates that around £168 million of the budget will be raised from visitor revenue including ticketing and merchandising.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will make a statement on the role that Christianity will play in the Millennium Experience. [23229]

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what is the Government's policy in respect of the religious content of the Millennium Dome. [23576]

Mr. Mandelson: I refer the right hon. Member and my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Ceredigion (Mr. Dafis) on 24 November 1997, Official Report, column 388.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio, pursuant to his oral answer of 8 December 1997, Official Report, column 660, if he will make a statement on his ticketing and transport arrangements for people from Scotland and the north of England. [21607]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is continuing to develop its ticketing strategy. The Company's aim is to set prices which are as low as possible and therefore are affordable to the maximum number of people whilst achieving the revenue required by the budget.

NMEC will work closely with all public transport providers, especially coach and rail operators, and with the travel trade, with the aim of ensuring that travel tickets can be sold together with Millennium Experience tickets and that the transport providers offer keenly priced fares.

29. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will make a statement on the future uses of the millennium dome after 2000. [21473]

Mr. Mandelson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Selby (Mr. Grogan) on 1 December 1997, Official Report, columns 2–3.

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will list the names of the public appointments he has made since 1 May 1997; and which of those appointees receive remuneration. [23208]

Mr. Mandelson: The information requested is listed in the following table.

Sponsored Body	Role	Name	Remuneration
New Millennium Experience Company	Deputy Chairman	Sam Chisholm	None
New Millennium Experience Company	Board Member	Sir Alan Cockshaw	None
New Millennium Experience Company	Board Member	Michael Grade CBE	None
New Millennium Experience Company	Board Member	Ruth MacKenzie	None

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

China

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Chinese authorities in respect of the conditions within Chinese orphanages. [22627]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 12 January 1998]: Orphanages were most recently discussed with the Chinese authorities at the expert level EU/China human rights meeting in Peking on 1–2 December 1997. We participated as a member of the EU Troika. At that meeting the EU agreed a package of technical assistance including projects for the protection of orphans.

Amsterdam Treaty

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if paragraph 3 of the Subsidiary Protocol of the Treaty of Amsterdam permits the repatriation of acquis communautaire. [22615]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Maastricht Treaty introduced as an objective of the European Union "to maintain in full the acquis communautaire" (Article B). The acquis communautaire is not an immutable body of law. Community agreements and legislation may be repealed or become obsolete. In the past the Commission has withdrawn legislative proposals on subsidiarity grounds. This option is made explicit in the Subsidiarity Protocol of the Treaty of Amsterdam, paragraph 3 of which states that subsidiarity

"allows Community action within the limits of its powers to be expanded where circumstances so require, and conversely, to be restricted or discontinued where it is no longer justified".

European Commission Directorates

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) of 9 December 1997, Official Report, column 498, what percentage of total staff working at A grade the figure for British nationals represents for each directorate of the European Commission. [22658]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) on 9 December 1997, Official Report, column 498, was based on information from the European Commission dated July 1997. Since then, the Commission has supplied new information based on December 1997 figures.

According to this updated information, the number of British nationals working at A grades in each Directorate General of the Commission is as follows:

Directorate General	Number of British officials at A grade	British officials as percentage of total staff at A grade
I	37	17.0

Cycle Spaces

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many secure cycle spaces there are in his Department. [22687]

Mr. Fatchett: This Department has 166 secure cycling spaces—84 in London and 82 at Hanslope Park, near Milton Keynes.

Travel Insurance

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the number of United Kingdom citizens who travelled abroad without travel insurance in (i) 1995, (ii) 1996 and (iii) 1997; and if he will make a statement. [22598]

Mr. Fatchett: We have no accurate way of measuring this. For our own purposes we estimate that 10 per cent. to 15 per cent. of Britons still do not take out travel insurance when they travel abroad. Our estimates for 1995, 1996 and 1997 are similar. We strongly advise that all travellers take out insurance.

Immigration (Cubans)

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visitor visas for entry into the United Kingdom from Cuban nationals have been turned down in each of the last two years. [22497]

Mr. Fatchett: The number of visit visa applications from Cuban nationals refused in Havana in the last two years was: 65 (5.1 per cent.) in 1995; 63 (4.5 per cent.) in 1996 and 99 (5.4 per cent.) in the first 11 months of 1997. Records are not kept of applications from Cuban nationals applying in other countries.

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications in each of the last two years for visitor visas have been from Cuban nationals. [22496]

Mr. Fatchett: The number of visit visa applications from Cuban nationals in Havana in the last two years was: 1,975 in 1995; 1,420 in 1996 and 1,822 in the first 11 months of 1997. Records are not kept of applications from Cuban nationals applying in other countries.

Arms Control Disarmament Research Unit

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the annual budget for his Department's Arms Control Disarmament Research Unit in the last two years. [22507]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: There is no specific budget for the two staff of the Arms Control and Disarmament Research Unit. Their costs are included in the overall budget of the FCO's Non-Proliferation Department. For much of financial year 1996–97, there was an additional part-timer member of the Unit; the costs for that year totalled approximately £125,000. In financial year 1997–98, costs to date total approximately £80,000.

Arms Control Treaties

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what work his Department is currently carrying out to support and implement arms control treaties in the fields of (a) chemical weapons and (b) nuclear weapons; and if he will make a statement. [22508]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: This Department works closely with the Department of Trade and Industry and the Ministry of Defence to ensure that the UK remains in full compliance with its obligations under the Chemical Weapons Convention (CWC), which the United Kingdom ratified in 1996, and to promote the universality and effective implementation of the Treaty. This involves coordinating and preparing positions for, and leading the UK Delegation at, the periodic Conferences of States Parties of the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW) in The Hague; and preparation for and attendance at the regular meetings of the OPCW's Executive Council.

The UK is a Depositary State for and a leading member of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT). This Department leads and co-ordinates UK participation in the review process for the treaty, which includes a Review Conference every five years and Preparatory Committee meetings in the three years preceding each Conference. The FCO is also sponsoring legislation to enable the UK to ratify the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty (CTBT).

The UK is also a member of the Australia Group and Nuclear Suppliers Group, which formulate and implement export controls for materials, equipment and technology relevant to chemical weapons and nuclear programmes respectively. The UK will become chair of the Nuclear Suppliers Group in April 1998.

This Department also leads on a range of actions in other multilateral fora (e.g. the European Union, NATO) and in bilateral action with individual states in support of the objectives of these treaties and bodies.

Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what work is being carried out by his Department to support the negotiations to strengthen the 1972 Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention. [22509]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: This Department is working closely with the Ministry of Defence and the Department of Trade and Industry in support of international efforts to establish a legally binding Protocol to strengthen compliance with the 1972 Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention. Our officials lead the UK delegation at these negotiations in Geneva and chair the key sessions on compliance measures. They also pay a key role in consultation within the European Union on these issues. One of the priorities for our EU Presidency is to promote decisive progress in the negotiations in 1998.

Israeli-Palestinian Goods

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy on Israeli requests to the EU to extend the scope of the EU-Israeli Association Agreement to include jointly produced Israeli-Palestinian goods in exemption to customs duties. [22546]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We strongly support efforts by Israeli and the Palestinian Authority to establish cumulation of rules of origin under the EC/PLO and EC/Israel agreements. This would allow goods jointly produced in Israel and the Palestinian Authority preferential accession to EU markets. To allow such cumulation, both sides must harmonise their rules of origin. The European Commission has held technical talks with both sides to assist them in this task.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimated value of goods jointly produced by Israel and Palestine and imported by the EU; and what proportion have been imported at zero tariff. [22547]

Mr. Doug Henderson: No statistics are available for imports of goods jointly produced in Israel and the Palestinian Authority.

Iraq

Mr. Cohen : To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of (a) the total amount received by Iraq under oil sale-related agreements and (b) the amount taken as reparations. [23042]

Mr. Fatchett: Since December 1996 when Iraq accepted the "oil for food" scheme, Iraq has been permitted to sell US dollars 4 billion worth of oil. UNSCR 1143, which renewed the scheme in November 1997, allows for the sale of a further US dollars 2 billion worth of Iraqi oil. Thirty per cent. of the proceeds from Iraqi oil goes to the UN compensation fund which pays compensation claims from individuals, corporations and governments who suffered direct loss, damage or injury as a result of Iraq's unlawful invasion and occupation of Kuwait in 1990.

Land Mines

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government plans to incorporate the Ottawa Landmine Treaty into United Kingdom law; and what steps it is taking to persuade other countries to ratify the treaty. [23611]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We intend to introduce legislation as soon as the parliamentary timetable allows. We shall continue to take every opportunity to urge as many countries as possible to sign the Ottawa Convention and to encourage those that have signed to ratify the Convention as quickly as possible.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Government intend to ratify the land mines treaty; and if he will make a statement. [23298]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We intend to ratify the Convention as soon as the necessary legislation is in place. We shall continue to take every opportunity to urge as many countries as possible to sign the Ottawa Convention and will press for complementary action to promote a global ban on anti-personnel landmines in international fora, including the Conference on Disarmament in Geneva.

Turkey

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on how, at what level and when the human rights problem in Turkey is being raised with the Turkish government. [23574]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We regularly raise human rights in our Ministerial and official level contacts with the Turkish authorities.

I raised this issue with the Turkish Minister for Human Rights in Ankara in October 1997. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has had a number of discussions on the subject with the Turkish Foreign Minister. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister raised the matter during his meeting with the Turkish Prime Minister in December.

The Turkish authorities recognise that this is an area in which they need to make progress. Our objective is to encourage them along that path.

Kenya

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received about the ill-treatment and torture of children in Kenya; and if he will make a statement. [23464]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are concerned by reports of incidents involving police brutality in Kenya, particularly those where young children appear to be involved. We shall be raising the cases highlighted by Amnesty International with the Kenyan authorities. More generally we continue to raise with the Government of Kenya our concerns about human rights abuses in that country and our desire to see police officers guilty of such offences brought to justice.

Algeria

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's policy towards Algeria. [23562]

Mr. Fatchett: We share the widespread revulsion at the barbaric massacres in Algeria and continue to condemn the violence. Following close consultation with our EU Partners, the Algerian Government has agreed to our proposal, as EU Presidency for a Troika Ministerial visit to Algeria, from 19 to 20 January 1998. I will lead the mission and will continue the political dialogue between the EU and Algeria which was established at the time of the Algerian Foreign Minister's talks in Luxembourg in November 1997.

Mrs. Gaynor Regan

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the occasions on which Mrs. Gaynor Regan has accompanied him at public expense since 2 May; and if he will make a statement. [23533]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 16 January 1998]: There have been no such occasions.

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the cost to public funds of each occasion on which Mrs. Gaynor Regan has accompanied him on his official duties. [23488]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 16 January 1998]: There has been no cost to public funds.

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he sought the advice of his Permanent Under-Secretary of State about the participation of Mrs. Gaynor Regan on official visits organised by his Department. [23487]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 16 January]: Yes.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the purpose of his return to the United Kingdom from the Indian sub-continent during Her Majesty the Queen's visit to Pakistan and India; and what was the cost of the travel involved. [23625]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 16 January 1998]: It was agreed with Buckingham Palace that I should accompany Her Majesty on her State Visits while she was in the capital cities of both countries and calling on members of their central governments. I was therefore in Islamabad on 7 and 8 October and in Delhi on 13 and 14 October, and not in attendance in the intervening period. It would not have been an effective use of the time of myself or my officials to stay on when I had no official business. These arrangements were agreed in July, long before the State Visit. The travel costs for myself and two officials for Pakistan were £4,211 and for India £11,547. On the outward journey to Pakistan we travelled on The Queen's aircraft.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the journeys overseas by the spouse or partner accompanying him since 1 May were in every case authorised in advance by the Prime Minister. [23572]

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he sought the permission of the Prime Minister in accordance with paragraph 69(a) of the Ministerial Code for Mrs. Gaynor Regan to accompany him on overseas visits at public expense. [23723]

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he sought the Prime Minister's prior assent for each overseas visit made by Mrs. Gaynor Regan when accompanying him at public expense. [23382]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 16 January 1998]: Yes, except when Ms Gaynor Regan accompanied me to Dublin on 3 November when there was no cost to public funds.

Tigers

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had since 1 May 1997 with representatives of the Indian government in respect of the threats to the tiger population in that country; and what were the outcomes of those decisions. [22950]

Mr. Fatchett: I met the Indian Environment Minister during my visit to India in June last year and expressed my support for the work of the Global Tiger Forum which stemmed from an Indian initiative. We continue to maintain close links with the Forum and will invite the Secretary General to the next meeting of the CITES Standing Committee to be held in London in March, where the plight of the tiger will be a major item on the agenda.

Hong Kong

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the income from the sale of land occupied by GCHQ in Hong Kong; and where that money has been deployed. [23396]

Mr. Fatchett: After deduction of sales costs, a total of £12,451,316.54 was transferred to the Treasury from the sale of property owned by Her Majesty's Government and used by GCHQ in Hong Kong. The property consisted of 20 houses purchased by the British Government to accommodate GCHQ staff at Hong Lok Yuen.

Immigration

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the application for entry clearance made by Zia Ul Haq at Karachi, reference KA 173579 will be determined. [24008]

Mr. Fatchett: We have asked our High Commission in Karachi to provide a detailed account. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, will write to the hon. Member within one week of receiving that account.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

School Inspections

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance he has given to Ofsted on the frequency with which school inspections should be carried out. [23314]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 16 January 1998]: HM Chief Inspector of Schools was given a legal duty to secure the inspection of all maintained schools in the four-year period ending on 31 July 1997 in respect of secondary schools and 31 July 1998 in respect of primary and other schools. Thereafter, the Education (School Inspection) Regulations 1997 provide for schools to be inspected at intervals of no more than six years from the end of the school year in which their previous inspection took place. In the case of failing schools and schools with serious weaknesses, HM Chief Inspector secures more frequent inspections.

Literacy

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment for what reasons schools taking part in the literacy summer schools project are not required to use standardised tests of reading before and after the project takes place. [22796]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The Department carried out a full evaluation of last year's scheme using National Curriculum Key Stage 2 tests, and also a qualitative survey of participants. A summary report of the evaluation is available in the Library. The Department is considering how best to evaluate this year's expanded scheme.

Teachers

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the number of trained teachers who qualified in (a) Australia, (b) New Zealand, (c) Canada and (d) South Africa who were teaching in maintained schools in London on (i) 1 January 1997 and (ii) 30 September 1997. [23610]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The information requested is not available.

Grammar Schools

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the percentage of the intake for each maintained grammar school from outside the boundary of the local authority in which it was situated in (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997. [23609]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the percentage of the intake from maintained primary schools at each maintained grammar school in (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997; and if he will make a statement. [23607]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Net Year

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what criteria will be used to assess the success of Net Year. [24006]

Dr. Howells: UK Net Year is a private sector initiative developed and funded by industry, and it is not for the Government to set criteria to judge its success. The Government does, however, welcome the contribution of UK Net Year to promoting progress towards the targets outlined in its consultation paper "Connecting the Learning Society".

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what budget his Department has allocated to Net Year and what proportion of the total budget for Net Year will be covered by (a) public and (b) private funds. [24005]

Dr. Howells: UK Net Year is a private sector initiative funded by industry with no Departmental funding. As with numerous other private sector projects, it is planned to be complementary to the Government's National Grid for Learning initiative.

Disability Discrimination Act

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will legislate to abolish the threshold exempting employees from the employment provision of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [23765]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on the review of the exemption provisions on 9 December 1997, Official Report, column 519. The threshold cannot be abolished by regulation, but could be lowered to two. We will be considering whether to lower it and, if so, to what level following the outcome of our consultations and review.

The Government have no plans for primary legislation to abolish the threshold. We will await the recommendations of the Disability Task Force before considering what form of primary legislation may be necessary to secure comprehensive, enforceable civil rights for disabled people.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the regulation-making process of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 that the Government (a) are currently using and (b) have plans to use and to improve the effectiveness of the Act. [23617] sections 3(9), 5(6) and (7), 6(8)(a), (c) to (g) and (10), 12(3), 8(6) and (7), 16(3), 19(5)(c), 20(7) and (8), 24(5), 50(8), 54(6), 52(8), 56(2) and (4), 60(6), 62(2), 67, 68(1) and 70(3) and paragraphs 1(2), 2(4), 3(2) and (3), 4(2)(a) and 5(a) of Schedule 1, 3(a) and (b) and 4 of Schedule 4, and 4(4) and 7 of Schedule 5.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Regulations have been already been made in exercise of the following powers of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 (DDA):

Section 30(3) of Part IV of the DDA amends the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 and regulations have been made under sections 5 (7A) and (7B) and 89 (4) of that Act. Regulations have been made under sections 30 (7) and (8) of Part IV of the DDA. Those sections have been repealed but consolidated into section 528 of the Education Act 1996.

Regulations have been made under sections 30 and 32 of the Industrial Tribunals Act 1996. Section 63(2) of the DDA has been replaced by section 32 (2) of that Act.

A regulation would be needed under section 7(2) if, following the current review of the threshold exempting small employers from the employment provisions in Part II of the Act, it is decided to lower the threshold.

Regulations are expected to be needed under the powers in section 15 when it is decided to implement the duty on trade organisations to make reasonable adjustments. Proposals for regulations would be subject to consultation.

A number of regulations are expected to be needed to help clarify the operation of the remaining rights of access to goods and services under Part III of the Disability Discrimination Act. Proposals for regulations will be subject to consultation in due course.

The Government will be using their powers under Part V of the DDA to require that in future buses, coaches and trains and taxis are fully accessible to disabled people including those who need to travel in their wheelchair. The first stage of the consultation on taxis was completed at the end of November 1997. Consultation on the proposals for buses and coaches is now under way and will be followed by consultation on the draft regulations for rail vehicles.

Regional Development Funds

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much interest was accrued on funds received from the European Social Fund under Objective 5b, before they were distributed to projects via the regional Government Offices in (a) 1994, (b) 1995, (c) 1996, (d) 1997 and (e) 1998. [23855]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The funds received under the European Social Fund are not held in interest bearing accounts and therefore do not accrue any interest; like other Government cash balances they reduce the interest payable on total Government debt.

SCOTLAND

Road Bridge Tolls

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the annual cost of abolishing all trunk road bridge tolls in Scotland. [19795]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 12 December 1997]: As this matter is not under consideration, no estimate of the cost of abolition has been made. Such costs in respect of the Erskine and Skye Bridges, the only tolled bridges on trunk roads in Scotland, would be calculated in terms of the contracts that exist between The Scottish Office and the operators of the bridges. The Scottish Office would also incur the on-going costs of maintaining the bridges.

EU Agriculture Council

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many meetings of the Council of Agriculture Ministers of the European Union he has attended. [23584]

Mr. Macdonald: My noble Friend the Minister with responsibility for agriculture, the environment and fisheries in Scotland has attended two meetings of the Agriculture Council.

Feudal System

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what estimate he has made of the financial resources and compensation required to abolish feudal superiors' rights; [23537]

(2) pursuant to his oral statement on 12 January 1998, Official Report, column 22, what is his estimate of the financial resources required to abolish the feudal system; and what are the public expenditure consequences. [23312]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 16 January 1998]: Until the Scottish Law Commission formulates its final recommendations, it is not possible to estimate what, if any, financial resources will be required to abolish the feudal system or what will be the public expenditure consequences. Similarly, it is not possible to estimate what, if any, financial resources and compensation will be required to abolish feudal superiors' rights until the Commission has come to a view on this matter and until Ministers have had an opportunity to consider the Commission's recommendations.

Forestry

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with ministerial colleagues on the apportionment of Forest Enterprise's assets; what agreement has been reached on the apportionment; and if he will make a statement. [23485]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 16 January 1998]: Land managed by Forest Enterprise is owned by the three Forestry Ministers (the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food). After devolution, it is proposed that, in Scotland and Wales, such land will be transferred to the Scottish Ministers and the Welsh Assembly respectively.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to authorise sales of standing timber belonging to the Forestry Commission prior to the Scottish Parliament taking responsibility for this matter. [23743]

Mr. Macdonald: The Forestry Commission fells and restocks areas of woodland as part of the sustainable management of its estate. About half the trees which are felled are sold standing, and the purchasers make their own arrangements to fell and market them. This routine forestry practice does not require specific authorisation by Ministers.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to authorise further sales of Forestry Commission land prior to the Scottish Parliament taking responsibility for this matter. [23764]

Mr. Macdonald: Last May, we imposed a moratorium on the sale of forest land managed by the Forestry Commission. This moratorium is still in place. We are currently considering the Commission's future activities as part of its Comprehensive Spending Review. We will announce our conclusions in due course.

Chapelcross Nuclear Reactor

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when his Department was first informed of the crack in the reactor at Chapelcross Magnox station; [23397]

(2) to what extend the age of the nuclear reactor at Chapelcross was a contributory factor to the crack which was publicised by BNFL in December. [23399]

Mr. Wilson: The existence of a defect in a weld in a heat exchanger in reactor two at Chapelcross was detected during the reactor's annual refuelling, maintenance and inspection shutdown. It was reported to the Scottish Office on 26 June 1997.

In accordance with normal procedures, details of the weld defect were contained in the Chapelcross newsletters, dated 3 July and 11 December 1997, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. Details were also contained in the Health and Safety Executive's Quarterly Statements of Incidents at Nuclear Installations, published on 30 September 1997.

I understand that the age of the reactor at Chapelcross was not a factor in the defect which has been in place since the original manufacture of the vessel concerned. The preferred option for repair has been discussed between BNFL and the NII which will involve the isolation of the affected heat exchanger. In the meantime, the NII has given approval for the reactor to operate.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library the reports by consultants on the various aspects of the competing sites for a Scottish Parliament. [23539]

Mr. McLeish: The design feasibility studies for each of the four sites were placed in the Library on 12 January along with a summary of the Comparative Transport and Environmental Assessment.

I have today placed in the Library copies of the full Comparative Transport and Environmental Assessment report and copies of a draft working brief for the design of the Scottish Parliament building.

Arable Aid Payments

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to complete payment of the 1997 arable aid payments. [23950]

Mr. Macdonald: Subject to the continuing co-operation of farmers on matching every field on their claims against the Field Identification System (FIS), i.e. the new register of unique field identifiers, we aim to make most final payments under the 1997 Arable Area Payments Scheme (AAPS) by 31 March 1998.

Northern Ireland Electricity Interconnector

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the plans of Northern Ireland Electricity to lay the undersea portion of the Scotland to Northern Ireland electricity interconnector. [23724]

Mr. Macdonald: The plans of Northern Ireland Electricity have been examined in detail. The undersea portion of the proposed Scotland-Northern Ireland interconnector is planned to pass to the north of the Beaufort's Dyke explosives disposal area. Consideration has been given to the detailed seabed surveys undertaken on behalf of Northern Ireland Electricity which have allowed the planned cable route to be optimised in order to avoid a wide range of natural obstructions and dumped munitions. A number of unidentified objects have been located electronically and Northern Ireland Electricity is confident that the proposed method of installation by water jetting will allow these objects to be avoided. The Government have therefore accepted Northern Ireland Electricity's conclusion that the risk of disturbance is minimal.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Living Allowance

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff making personal visits to people in receipt of disability living allowance as part of the Integrity Project have a recognised medical qualification. [21098]

Mr. Denham: One our key aims is to rebuild integrity in, and public support for, the Social Security system and the way in which public money is spent. We need to focus on those who are properly entitled to benefit. This is why we have set up the Benefit Integrity Project.

The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with further details.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mrs. Angela Browning, dated 15 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question regarding how many staff making personal visits to people in receipt of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) as part of the Integrity Project have a recognised medical qualification.

The role of staff visiting DLA recipients as part of the Benefit Integrity Project (BIP) is to obtain an up to date statement about the needs of those people who have a DLA award at the higher rate of mobility combined with the highest rate of care. The visiting officers do not make decisions on entitlement to benefit either at the visit or subsequently.

The visiting officers are administrative staff. All BIP visiting officers receive a detailed 5 day training course which covers all aspects of visiting technique. The course also includes a special session on disability awareness, written and delivered by the Disablement Income Group.

In cases where information gathered indicates that there may have been a change in circumstances since the award was made, an Adjudication Officer may decide to review the award. In such cases they may refer the case to the Benefit Agency Medical Services (BAMS) for advice, approach the General Practitioner or some other medical professional, for a factual report, or ask BAMS to arrange for a report from an Examining Medical Practitioner.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Income Support (Basildon)

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of family credit there are in the Basildon constituency; and how many people in the Basildon constituency are in receipt of income support. [22831]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of Family Credit and Income Support is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Angela Smith, dated 16 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many families in Basildon are in receipt of Family Credit (FC), and how many are in receipt of Income Support (IS).

The information is not available in the format requested. The FC Unit produces statistics which show the number of families in receipt of FC within individual Benefits Agency (BA) office areas. IS produces information which relates to the number of families in receipt within a BA District.

The BA's Essex South West District includes offices at Basildon, Grays and Harlow.

The number of families in receipt of FC, in the BA office at Basildon, was 2,088 as at September 1997. The number of families in receipt of IS, in the Essex South West District, was 33,865 as at November 1997. These figures are provisional and subject to change. The information serves as a "snap-shot" of the position at the date of the scan and does not provide details of the number of families in receipt of benefit annually.

I hope you find this reply useful.

Incapacity Benefit

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans she has to change the all work test; [23145]

(2) what research she has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the effectiveness of the current all work test in making decisions to meet individual needs; and if she will make a statement. [23146]

Mr. Denham: Our Comprehensive Spending Review is looking at all aspects of provision for sick and disabled people including the appropriateness of the all work test. Our aim is to ensure that the emphasis is placed on people's capacity for work and not their incapacity; their ability and not their disability. The evaluation of the all work test published in February 1997[1] and the results of the survey of people leaving Incapacity Benefit[2] will inform our thinking. We are currently considering our research requirements for 1998 and details of our programme will be published in due course.

Social Security System

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the most serious problems currently facing the social security system in order of priority. [23848]

Mr. Field: Our aim is to build a Welfare State fit for the 21st century, which extends opportunity and security to all.

Our core principles are that:

Society has a responsibility to help people in genuine need, who are unable to look after themselves;

Individuals have a responsibility to help provide for themselves when they can do;

Work is the best route out of poverty for people who are able to work;

Fraud and abuse should be minimised and rooted out wherever found.

We are currently examining where the current system ails to meet these core principles.

New Deal (Warrington)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social ecurity what estimate she has made of the number of eople in the Warrington, North constituency who will enefit from the New Deal. [23851]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The New Deal for Lone Parents lfils the Government's commitment to provide practical elp and advice to lone parents on Income Support who ant to work. One of the eight areas in which the rogramme is already available is the Benefits Agency istrict of North Cheshire, which covers the Warrington orth Parliamentary Constituency. The New Deal for one Parents will be available to all lone parents who ake a new claim for Income Support from April 1998, nd will be extended to cover existing claimants from ctober 1998.

Estimates are not available by Parliamentary onstituency for the number of people who might benefit om the New Deal for Lone Parents. It is, however, timated that there are around 3,000 lone parents ceiving Income Support in the Warrington Local uthority District and who could therefore take advantage the services already on offer through this programme.

The New Deal for Young People will give work, ucation and other opportunities to those aged 18 to 24 no have been unemployed for over six months. This ogramme will begin in 12 pathfinder offices this month d will be introduced nationally in April 1998. It is timated that, in 1998–99, 1,700 people would become gible for the New Deal for the Young Unemployed in e Halton and Warrington unit of delivery, which mprises the areas covered by the Runcorn Bridgewater, ncorn Rutland, Warrington and Widnes Employment rvice Jobcentres.

The New Deal for Young People will be followed in ne 1998 by the New Deal for the long-term employed, which will provide subsidies to employers £75 per week for six months if they take on those ople aged 25 or over who have been unemployed for o years or more. The latest available data indicate that re are around 1,000 people in this category in the lton and Warrington unit of delivery.

The number of people in the Warrington area who will nefit from the New Deal for people with a disability or g-term health problem is not yet known. A tendering rcise is currently underway for innovative schemes, l plans for introducing personal advisers for this group ll be announced later this year.

Residential Care Allowance

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social curity when she plans to announce her proposals to orm the residential care allowance. [23766]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Government are undertaking a number of reviews of key policy areas, including a review of the funding of long-term care. The future payment of the Income Support Residential Allowance is included in these reviews.

It is too early in the review process to be able to give a firm commitment on when we will be ready to announce the outcome.

Low Pay

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of working women earn less than the national insurance contributions ceiling. [23951]

Mr. Denham: In 1995–96 an estimated 94 per cent. of female employees earned less than the Class 1 National Insurance contributions Upper Earnings Limit.

Source: 1995–96 Family Resources Survey.

Appeals

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes in policy there have been since 1 May concerning the granting of leave to appeal to the Social Security Commissioner. [23031]

Mr. Keith Bradley: There has been no change in policy regarding appeals to the Social Security Commissioner since May 1997. The Social Security Bill paves the way for modernising the delivery of Social Security. It includes measures which will improve the arrangements for handling appeals from tribunals to Commissioners. The Bill had its second reading in the House of Lords on 15 January.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beef

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of beef sold in the United Kingdom is sourced from cattle born after 1 August 1996; and if he will make a statement. [21599]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 18 December 1997]: Information on the percentage of beef sold in the United Kingdom sourced from cattle born after 1 August 1996 is not readily available but so far few animals of this age will have been slaughtered. In time the age of an increasing number of slaughtered animals will be known as a system of cattle passports, which record birth and death details, was introduced in Great Britain on 1 July 1996.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment the European Commission has made of the advantages of banning beef exports from countries which have detected BSE in their cattle. [23360]

Mr. Rooker: The European Commission has banned exports of beef from the UK, but has not banned exports from other Member States which have reported cases of BSE. The Commission takes advice on BSE related issues from the Scientific Steering Committee. Summaries of the proceedings of that Committee are published on the Internet at: http://europa.eu.int/en/comm/dg24/scientif/ncomm0/index.html

Live Animal Exports

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answers of 18 November 1997, Official Report, column 117 and 4 December 1997, Official Report, column 355, if he will provide a breakdown of the numbers of pigs exported for breeding to each country concerned from January to October. [22613]

Mr. Rooker: Computer records up-dated since my previous answer indicate that the number of breeding pigs certified for export from the United Kingdom between January and October 1997 inclusive is as follows:

Country	Number
Belgium	36,438
Canada	600
Czech Republic	559
China	795
Denmark	974
Falkland Islands	25
France	26,573
Germany	40,595
Greece	661
Republic of Ireland	1,080
Italy	8,837
Japan	248
Latvia	102
Malaysia (Peninsula)	338
Mexico	709
Netherlands	13,344
Nigeria	46
Philippines	164
Poland	80
Portugal	83
Romania	217
Slovakia	87
South Korea	538
Spain	19,372
Taiwan	70
Thailand	482
Russia	350
United States of America	122
Total	153,489

This information is provisional and subject to change.

It is common practice for export health certificates to be issued in anticipation of exports which do not then take place. The central computer system is updated periodically to remove details of withdrawn export consignments from the records but we cannot guarantee that this information is complete. Confirmation of the actual numbers of animals exported could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Cattle Identification Scheme

Mr. Willis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations he has had, and with whom, concerning the adoption of a secondary button tag on cattle, and what decision he has made. [22988]

Mr. Rooker: Consultations have been held with the Joint Industry/Government Working Group on animal identification, with individual UK eartag manufacturers and the relevant services of the European Commission. Guidance will be provided to cattle keepers once a decision has been taken on which eartags will be approved for use in the UK for identifying cattle. In the meantime, all eartags on the current approved list can be used.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he plans to use the plastic secondary tag on cattle as a means of electronic identification. [23038]

Mr. Rooker: EU legislation on identification of cattle requires visual identification through the use of approved eartags and does not require compulsory electronic tagging of animals. However, there are no obstacles to preclude eartags being adapted to incorporate electronic devices and the Government welcome such initiatives by the Industry.

Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee (Funding)

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total research funding to SEAC, from (a) United Kingdom Government sources and (b) European Union Sources in (i) 1994, (ii) 1995, (iii) 1996 and (iv) 1997. [23186]

Mr. Rooker: SEAC is an advisory body. It does not, itself, carry out any research and is therefore not in receipt of research funding from any source.

Livestock Support

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the levels of (a) suckler cow, (b) ewe premium and (c) HLCA payments for beef and sheep per animal in cash prices and at 1997 prices for each of the last five years and his proposals for 1998–99. [23484]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The information requested is set out in the tables. The proposed rates for 1998–99 are not yet available.

Beef (Subsidies)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what subsidies are paid to beef farmers in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other European Union countries. [23358]

Mr. Rooker: Beef farmers in all EU Member States, including the UK, may apply for subsidies under two EU-funded headage Schemes. The Suckler Cow Premium (SCP) Scheme provides an annual payment in respect of female breeding animals, while the Beef Special Premium (BSP) Scheme provides either one or two payments in respect of each male animal fattened for slaughter. Automatic "extensification" payments are made under both schemes to claimants with stocking rates below set levels. Additional EU-funded SCP payments are made to producers in geographical areas within the Union, including Northern Ireland, which meet certain economic and agricultural criteria. Limited nationally funded SCP payments are also made in some Member States. A Deseasonalisation Premium, designed to encourage a more even pattern of slaughterings throughout the year, may also be paid to producers in Member States where concentration of slaughtering in a certain time frame has historically proved a problem. All EU producers in Less Favoured Areas may additionally claim under national schemes (part-EU funded) designed to offset the structural handicap they face. In the UK, payments are made per head of eligible breeding cow under the Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances scheme.

Genetically Modified Foods

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the United States Government in respect of the possible segregation of genetically modified foods; and if he will make a statement. [23405]

Mr. Rooker: The Department has close working contact with US Government officials on food issues including genetically modified foods and segregation. However, World Trade Organisation rules do not permit Governments to demand the segregation of crops that have been approved as safe.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if measures to require segregation of genetically modified crops would constitute a breach of World Trade Organisation agreements; and if he will make a statement. [23406]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) on 17 July 1997, Official Report, column 504.

Beef Imports (Argentina)

Mr. Key: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what concessionary tariff arrangements are available on beef imported from Argentina; and if he will make a statement. [23977]

Mr. Rooker: Argentina, along with certain other named countries, is able to benefit from the following concessionary tariff arrangements for imports of beef into the European Community:

28,000 tonnes under the high quality ("Hilton") fresh, chilled and frozen import quota (as part of an overall total of 58,100 tonnes);

700 tonnes of frozen thin skirt (as part of an overall total of 1,500 tonnes).

In addition, such countries may export beef under concessionary import tariff arrangements which are open to all exporting countries. Under these concessionary import tariff arrangements, beef may enter the Community at reduced or zero levy.

Concessionary import arrangements are made under World Trade Organisation Agreements, to the proper observance of which the UK Government are deeply committed. The volume of imports allowed under these concessionary schemes amount to only 5 per cent. of total community production.

WALES

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what was the (a) net surplus/deficit, (b) the total remuneration of the Chief Executive and (c) the resident population of the Morgannwy Health Authority for the year ended 31 March 1997; [23601]

(2) what was the (a) net surplus/deficit, (b) the total remuneration of the Chief Executive and (c) the resident population of the Dyfed Powys Health Authority for the year ended 31 March 1997. [23600]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The information is in the following table.

	Morgannwg HA	Dyfed Powys HA
(a) Net surplus/(deficit) (£000)	785	(1,913)
(b) Total remuneration of Chief Executive (£000)	70	87
(c) Resident population (thousands)	499.7	476.7

Sources:
(a) and (b) Annual Accounts of Morgannwg and Dyfed Powys Health Authorities 1966–97; (c) ONS Mid year estimate for 1996.

Health Trusts (Appointments)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the qualifications required of appointees to non-executive posts on health trusts and authorities in Wales. [20727]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Strong links with the area served by the Trust or Health Authority are required together with relevant experience such as one or more of the following: the Voluntary Sector; the Public Sector or Business, at a senior level; previous NHS employment/experience.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Coastguard

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will request the Coastguard Agency to publish its five-year plan. [22845]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I announced on 17 November 1997, Official Report, columns 9–10, a proposed five-year strategy for Her Majesty's Coastguard and it was agreed that the Coastguard Agency would issue a document for consultation. This document is being published today and copies have been placed in the Library.

Coroner's Service

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are his functions in relation to the Coroner's Service. [23180]

Ms Armstrong: My right hon. Friend has no responsibilities for the Coroner's Service.

Untreated Sewage

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much untreated sewage was disposed of on or in agricultural land in each year since 1991; and what assessment he has made of the impact of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 on these figures. [22865]

Angela Eagle: Sewage may be spread on agricultural land under the terms of a waste management licence issued by the Environment Agency under Part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The objective of the licensing system is to ensure that waste is recovered or disposed of in ways which protect the environment and human health.

The Environment Agency does not maintain a central record that distinguishes the licensed spreading of sewage from the licensed spreading of other wastes. It is not possible, therefore, to make an assessment of the impact of the 1990 Act on the quantities of sewage which are spread. However, the Department and the Environment Agency have commissioned the Water Research Council and the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service (ADAS) to develop further the criteria that determine the circumstances in which the spreading of wastes is of benefit to agriculture. The research project is expected to be completed by the end of March 1998.

Road Gritting

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidelines exist for local authorities for the gritting of roads in the event of sub-zero temperatures. [23194]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Keith Vaz, dated 20 January 1998:

The Parliamentary Under Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent question as to what guidelines exist for local authorities for the gritting of roads in the event of sub-zero temperatures.

The Highways Agency are responsible for motorways and all-purpose trunk roads in England. For these roads, the Agency provides a winter maintenance service which assists the safe movement of traffic and keeps to a minimum delays and accidents caused by adverse weather conditions.

An extensive network of sensors placed in the roads measure road temperatures, moisture and salt content, wind speeds and precipitation. These together with weather forecasting services assist Maintenance Agents to carry out preventative treatment before road conditions become hazardous. They do not use grit for this treatment but use rock salt or, in special cases, deicing chemicals.

The Highways Agency's Maintenance Agents, including Local Authorities, undertake the operational maintenance of the winter maintenance service in accordance with guidelines set out in Volume 2 Part 3 of a document titled. The Trunk Road Maintenance Manual. A copy of the document can be made available for inspection if you would like to contact Mike Garnham at this office on 0171 921 4220.

For the roads for which Local Authorities are responsible, they define their own treatments. Many use the guidelines of the County Surveyors Society or adapt them to their own circumstances and needs. Most Local Authorities also publish their own winter maintenance plans which define roads to be treated, together with treatment times and priorities.

Polegate Bypass

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many written representations his Department has received from (a) organisations and (b) members of the public about the Polegate Bypass in the last three months. [22996]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have received a considerable number of representations about the Polegate Bypass. We are unable to give a breakdown covering the last three months; however, since the start of the Roads Review consultation exercise in July 1997, we have received 96 representations from organisations and businesses, and 2,689 from members of the public, of which 699 were letters; 1,768 were local press campaign coupons; and 222 were in the form of petitions.

Leasehold Reform

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he is taking to simplify the rules governing the purchase of freeholds by leaseholders; and what plans he has to introduce a new commonhold form of tenure. [23327]

Ms Armstrong: We are committed to simplifying the rules governing the purchase of freeholds by leaseholders and we intend to bring forward a new package of reforms to assist leaseholders. We are currently considering the scope and practicability of possible new measures. We expect to make an announcement about our proposals and invite comments from interested parties in the Spring.

The introduction of Commonhold is a matter for the Lord Chancellor. However, I understand that his Department are currently considering the best way to handle the various proposals which have been made about commonhold schemes in the recent past.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many local authorities in all classes have been awarded a provisional SSA settlement for 1998–99 for the education block of less than a 5.7 per cent. increase; and if he will list these authorities with their respective figures; [23293]

(2) how many Metropolitan district authorities have been awarded a provisional SSA settlement for 1998–99 for the education block which is less than a 5.7 per cent. increase; and if he will list these authorities with their respective figures. [23292]

Ms Armstrong: Eighty four local education authorities have been awarded a provisional SSA settlement for 1998–99 for the education block of less than a 5.7 per cent. increase. Of these, eighteen are metropolitan district authorities. The authorities are listed in the table.

Water

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 16 June 1997, Official Report, column 36, what progress has been made by the Drinking Water Inspectorate in considering prosecution in the alleged cryptosporidium incident at Bingley in June 1993; and if he will make a statement. [23475]

Angela Eagle: The Drinking Water Inspectorate has completed its investigation of this incident involving an outbreak of cryptosporidiois. On 14 January 1998, it wrote to Yorkshire Water Services Limited informing the Company of its conclusions and recommendations arising from the incident. A copy of this letter has been sent to the health authority, local authority and the Yorkshire Customer Service Committee. I have arranged for a copy of the letter to be sent to the hon. Member and for copies to be placed in the library of the House.

The main conclusions of the Inspectorate were that:

(i) the epidemiological study carried out by the Bradford Health Authority provided strong grounds for suspecting that water unfit for human consumption was supplied;

(ii) the Company would not have had a defence of due diligence due to deficiencies in the management of the catchment and the operation of Gilstead Water Treatment Works; and

(iii) in view of the decision by the Judge in the prosecution of South West Water about an incident involving an outbreak of cryptosporidiosis in Torbay, not to admit as evidence the report of the epidemiological study, a prosecution cannot be mounted against the Company under Section 70 of the Water Industry Act 1991.

The Inspectorate's investigations uncovered some serious deficiencies in the Company's operations. Although Gilstead Water Treatment Works has since been closed, the Inspectorate considers it vital that the Company demonstrates that it has improved its operational procedures and performance in order to protect public health and therefore it has asked for an urgent reply from the Company to its recommendations.

In the light of the judgment in the Torbay case and the Inspectorate's conclusions on this incident, I have asked the Inspectorate to advise on what steps, including changes to the legislation, can be taken to secure successful prosecution when it is believed that water unfit for human consumption has been supplied.

Concorde

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent inspections have been conducted to establish the air worthiness of Concorde. [23375]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are seven Concorde aircraft on the UK register, all operated by British Airways. They are all subject to regular airworthiness inspections under the British Airways Concorde Maintenance Schedule, which is approved by the Civil Aviation Authority.

Storm Damage

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the cost to public funds of the storms of early January. [23560]

Ms Armstrong: None. The information is not collected centrally. Local authorities have statutory powers to deal with emergencies and are expected to budget accordingly. They may apply for additional financial assistance where there is a case for doing so under existing rules.

Ferry Safety

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will assess the advantages of introducing guidelines for safe ferry departures from port in inclement weather independently of the captains of the ships concerned. [23321]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Marine Safety Agency, Mr. Robin Bradley, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Dr. Alan Whitehead, dated 20 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your Question about guidelines for safe ferry departures.

The decision to sail should always lie with the master of the vessel. He is best placed to make such a decision on account of his knowledge of the ship and its area of operation, his experience and professional judgement, and in the exercise of his responsibilities. The importance of the master's discretion for safe navigation has been recognised in recent amendments to the SOLAS Convention, prompted by the ESTONIA disaster. These require that the master is not constrained by commercial pressures from shipowners and charters from taking decisions necessary for the safe navigation of his ship.

New regulations require that all limitations on the operation of the ship are readily available to the master on board the ship. These limitations must include any restrictions on areas of operation, weather restrictions, sea state restrictions, and restrictions on speed and permissible loads. In addition, early implementation of the provisions of the International Safety Management Code on all passenger ferries operating in Europe requires a proper assessment to be made of actual and expected weather conditions, using both official forecast and direction observation, before the ship sails.

I am satisfied that adequate information is available to the master to allow him to decide if his ship should set sail and may navigate safely, that in the interest of safe operation the decision must rest with the master, and that there are safeguards to protect his discretion.

Employment (Northumberland)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people were employed by Northumberland County Council (a) full time and (b) part time, excluding teachers in each year since 1992. [23991]

Ms Armstrong: The numbers of people employed by Northumberland County Council (excluding lecturers and teachers), at June of each year, from 1992 to date are:

	Full-time	Part-time
1992	n/a	n/a
1993	3,263	5,722
1994	3,256	5,972
1995	3,744	5,218
1996	3,646	5,533
1997	3,478	5,363

Joint Staffing Watch. The introduction of a new survey form in June 1995 changed the way in which staff are recorded so that where an employee is doing two or more jobs in an authority, each job is counted separately. As a result, figures for 1995 and later years are on a different basis from previous years.

Classic Cars

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to allow the continued use of classic cars when leaded petrol is withdrawn from general sale. [23827]

Ms Glenda Jackson: To meet concerns raised by owners of classic car owners about supplies of leaded petrol from 1 January 2000, when the proposed EU ban comes into effect, the Government have negotiated a derogation to allow continued supply to a limit of 0.5 per cent. of total petrol sales to be distributed through "specialist interest groups". For widespread use of many older, non-classic, cars whose owners currently use leaded petrol, the British Standards Institution are consulting on a specification for unleaded petrol containing a non-toxic lead replacement additive.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assurances he has sought from the Civil Aviation Authority that the air traffic control system in the United Kingdom will be fully millennium compliant. [24249]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) on 19 June 1997, Official Report, column 277.

Bus Employees Superannuation Trust

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the Statement of Claim has been received by his Department in the legal claim brought by the Trustee of the Bus Employees Superannuation Trust against his Department; what legal advice he has taken on the merits of the claim; what future action he proposes in respect of this matter; and if he will make a statement. [24126]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Statement of Claim has been received. The advice of Counsel has been obtained and Ministers are currently considering next steps on this matter in the light of that advice.

Marine Safety

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many shipments and how much plutonium was transported via United Kingdom destinations on roll-on roll-off ferries between 22 December and 12 January; and what advice he has received from marine safety experts on this transport. [24091]

Ms Glenda Jackson: One such notifiable shipment took place carrying 42.809kg of plutonium. I am advised that the ship used carried the usual certification and a document of compliance under the International Maritime Organisation's Code for the Safe Carriage of Irradiated Nuclear Fuel, Plutonium and High-Level Radioactive Wastes in Flasks on Board Ships (INF Code) and the packages used were approved by my Department in accordance with the International Maritime Dangerous Goods Code.

Air Routes

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the relationship between effective competition on routes between (a) Heathrow and European destinations and (b) Heathrow and North American destinations. [24263]

Ms Glenda Jackson: None. If the question is referring to the competition analysis of the proposed British Airways/American Airlines alliance, and whether this should include an assessment of European routes from Heathrow, it is a matter for the relevant competition authorities, not my Department.

Dangerous Chemicals (Rail Transport)

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to publish new guidelines on the transportation of dangerous chemicals by rail through residential areas. [24247]

Ms Glenda Jackson: An extensive study, Major Hazard Aspects of the Transport of Dangerous Substances: Report of the Sub-committee of the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Substances (HSC, ISBN 0 11 885676 6), published in 1991, found that the risks of such transport were tolerable. Regulations Approved Requirements and Guidance on the transport of dangerous goods are regularly reviewed in the light of technical developments and lessons learned from reported incidents.

Additionally, the Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Rail Regulations 1996 will soon be revised in accordance with Commission Directive 96/87/EC to apply the latest provisions of the COTIF regulations concerning the international carriage of dangerous goods by rail (RID).

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list the current guidelines for governing the transportation of dangerous chemicals by rail through residential areas; [24254]

(2) if he will list the safety responsibilities of (a) Railtrack, (b) English, Welsh and Scottish Railways and (c) European Vinyls Corporation Ltd., as they relate to the transportation of vinyl chloride monomer by rail in the Vale of Glamorgan; [24257]

(3) if he will list (a) voluntary and (b) statutory procedures governing the de-canting of vinyl chloride monomer from a freight tanker which has (i) been de-railed, (ii) tipped on its side and (iii) collapsed the bogey and cannot be safely lifted back on to the rail track; [24258]

(4) if he will list the current codes of practice governing the transportation of dangerous chemicals by rail through hazardous industrial areas; [24259]

(5) if he will list the current regulations governing the transportation of dangerous chemicals by rail through residential areas; [24260]

(6) if he will list the current regulations governing the transportation of dangerous chemicals through hazardous industrial areas; [24261]

(7) if he will list the current guidance notes governing the transportation of dangerous chemicals by rail through hazardous industrial areas. [24262]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The current regulations, which apply to transport throughout Great Britain, are as follows:

The Carriage of Dangerous Goods By Rail Regulations 1996 (SI 1996/2089)

The Carriage of Dangerous Goods (Classification, Packaging and Labelling and Use of Transportable Pressure Receptacles Regulations 1996 (SI 1996/2092).

The Regulations set out the duties and responsibilities on all parties concerned with the transport and dangerous goods including vinyl chloride monomer. These are supported by the following Approved Requirements and Guidance:

Approved Tank Requirements—The provisions for bottom loading and vapour recovery systems of mobile containers carrying petrol;

Approved Carriage List—Information approved for the carriage of dangerous goods by road and rail other than explosives and radioactive material;

Approved Requirements and test methods for the classification and packaging of dangerous goods for carriage;

Carriage of Dangerous Goods Explained Part 1—Guidance for Consignors of dangerous goods by road and rail, packaging, labelling and provision of information;

Carriage of Dangerous Goods Explained Part 3—Guidance for rail operators, and others involved in the carriage of dangerous goods by rail.

Regulation 23 of Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Rail Regulation 1996 requires train operators, facility owners and infrastructure controllers to establish and follow safety systems and procedures which enable them to deal with incidents safely. The details are set out in Railway Group Standards which are produced and published by Railtrack plc, following industry consultation, and which are enforceable through the Railway (Safety Case) Regulations 1994.

In addition, all parties operating on the railways must comply with the general provisions of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 and other related regulations. In particular, in relation to the transportation of dangerous goods by rail in the Vale of Glamorgan, Railtrack plc is responsible for:

control of the movement of trains on its network;

maintenance of the railway infrastructure;

complying with the terms of its Railway Safety Case (accepted by the Health and Safety Executive under the Railways (Safety Case) Regulations 1994);

accepting and monitoring compliance with the Railway Safety Case of train operating companies; establishing standards to ensure safe operation and emergency arrangements on its network; and compliance with those aspects of the CDG Rail which apply to an infrastructure controller.

Similarly English Welsh and Scottish Railways Ltd. is responsible for:

the safe operation of its trains;

compliance with its own Railway Safety Case and any relevant Railway Group Standards; and compliance with those aspects of CDG Rail applicable to a train operator.

European Vinyls Corporation Ltd., must comply with its responsibilities as consignor under CDG Rail.

There are separate requirements for the transport of radioactive material and for the transport of explosives.

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list the terms of reference of the Railway Inspectorate's inquiry into the Cadoxton derailment in the Vale of Glamorgan on 27 December 1997; [24248]

(2) what steps he will take to ensure that the inquiry undertaken by the Railway Inspectorate into the Cadoxton train de-railment will consider (a) the underlying and (b) the systems causes of the incident; [24251]

(3) if he will make a statement on the scope of the inquiry by the Railway Inspectorate into the Cadoxton de-railment on 27 December 1997; [24253]

(4) if he will publish in full the report of the inquiry undertaken by the Railway Inspectorate into the Cadoxton derailment in the Vale of Glamorgan. [24245]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are no terms of reference for the investigation by the Health and Safety Executive's (HSE's) Railway Inspectorate into the incident at Cadoxton, South Wales. Following HSE's normal practice, the inspectorate will conduct a thorough investigation with a view to establishing both the immediate and any underlying causes, including systems failures; learning any lessons and taking any action which appears necessary to prevent a recurrence or to improve the way any future incidents are handled. The HSE have advised that the findings (and any recommendations) of HM Railway Inspectorate's investigation will be published by HSE.

Front Door Steps

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what account he has taken in respect of flooding when drafting regulations in respect of front door steps. [24173]

Angela Eagle: The risk of water ingress at front door steps, including flooding, is one of the considerations being taken into account in considering what guidance might be reasonable to make front doors accessible for disabled people, in the event of regulations being made to improve the accessibility of new housing for disabled people. It is hoped that it will be possible to make a fuller statement on this shortly.

Green Belt

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the objectives of the Government's policies for the Green Belt. [24172]

Mr. Prescott: The Government are committed to the Green Belt and our policy remains as set out in Planning Policy Guidance note 2 (PPG2). The fundamental aim of Green Belt policy is to prevent urban sprawl by keeping land permanently open for as far ahead as can reasonably be foreseen. The protection of Green Belts must be maintained as far as can be seen ahead, although local planning authorities may propose alterations to Green Belt boundaries in exceptional circumstances.

Scottish Executive

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Scotland to produce a concordat setting out arrangements for relations between his Department and the Scottish Executive after the establishment of a Scottish Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [23552]

Mr. Prescott: Officials from my department and the Scottish Office are discussing the need for a non-statutory agreement between the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and the Scottish Executive covering the exchange of information, advance notification and joint working in line with the principles set out in the White Paper "Scotland's Parliament".

Dereliction (Planning Powers)

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue guidance to local planning authorities on how they can use their planning powers to help prevent dereliction. [24523]

Mr. Caborn: We have, today, published Circular (02/98) which provides guidance to local planning authorities on the practical measures that they can take to help prevent land in their areas from becoming derelict.

The Circular also brings local planning authority's attention to new Regulations, the Town and Country Planning (Amendment) Regulations 1997(SI 1997/3006). These give powers to local planning authorities to place a charge on land in order to help them recover the costs incurred in clearing sites under the derelict land provisions of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990.

I believe that local authorities and developers will welcome these Regulations and the advice in the Circular as positive measures to help prevent and tidy up derelict sites.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Schengen Agreement

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the voting arrangement for admitting opt-out Schengen states applying to join Schengen were discussed at any point during the treaty negotiations at Amsterdam in the presence of United Kingdom delegates after the private meeting had taken place between the Dutch Presidency and the Spanish delegation. [23223]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Member to previous statements made on this subject, in particular my reply to the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard), 12 December 1997, Official Report, column 710.

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs at what hour (a) the Protocol integrating the Schengen Acquis into the Framework of the European Union (b) the protocol on the position of the United Kingdom and Ireland pertaining to Schengen and (c) Declaration 45 on Article 4 of the Protocol integrating the Schengen Acquis into the framework of the European Union, were noted as agreed during the course of the Amsterdam negotiations by the Presidency. [23224]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Presidency did not single out either the Protocol integrating the Schengen Acquis into the framework of the European Union or the Protocol on the Application of Certain Aspects of Article 7A of the Treaty Establishing the European Community to the United Kingdom and to Ireland as having been agreed separate from other elements of the text. Declaration 45 was agreed after the Amsterdam European Council by all Member States in the light of the differences of view over Article 4 of the Schengen Protocol and included in the final version of the Treaty signed by all Member States on 2 October 1997.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 11 December 1997, Official Report, column 649, what official response followed the letter of the Permanent Representative of the Netherlands to the United Kingdom Permanent Representative of 16 July last. [23612]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The official response was in the form of a letter from the UK Permanent Representative to the Permanent Representative of the Netherlands.

Turkey

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Turkish government as to the continuing imprisonment of elected members of the Turkish National Assembly; and if he will make a statement. [23801]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We have raised the imprisonment of the four former Democracy Party (DEP) MPs with the Turkish government on a number of occasions. We have made it clear to the Turkish authorities that the imprisonment of democratically elected politicians for the non-violent expression of their views can only damage Turkey internationally.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on compliance by Turkey with judgments under international conventions in respect of human rights. [23767]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Turkey is a State Party to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and is therefore under an obligation to comply with the judgments of the European Court of Human Rights. Responsibility for supervising the execution of the Court's judgments lies with the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe. We welcome the undertaking given by the Government of Turkey that they will honour their obligations in respect of the Convention and the judgments of the Court.

Afghanistan

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the level of civil and political rights afforded to women in Afghanistan. [23820]

Mr. Fatchett: There is little respect shown for civil and political rights in general in Afghanistan. Women and girls have suffered particularly in Taliban-held areas by being prevented from working and receiving education. We have urged all factions to respect human rights, especially the rights of women. We subscribe to a common donor position which ensures that support goes only to aid programmes which actively attempt to promote the equitable participation of both men and women.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the nature and extent of the United Kingdom's diplomatic contact with Afghanistan. [23821]

Mr. Fatchett: No UK diplomats are based in Afghanistan. UK diplomats based in London and at the High Commission in Islamabad regularly meet representatives of all the Afghan factions to raise human rights and other concerns. Afghanistan is represented in the UK by a Chargé D'Affaires with whom we have working level contact.

US-UK Mutual Defence Agreement

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he raised with Vice-President Gore, in this meeting on 15 January, the further joint release of official documents concerning the 1958 United States/United Kingdom Mutual Defence Agreement on Atomic Energy Matters. [23799]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary did not meet Vice-President Gore and did not raise this issue in his other meetings.

Multilateral Disarmament

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the record of the vote at the United Nations General Assembly on 9 December 1997 on the resolution on multilateral disarmament, indicating how the United Kingdom voted, and the reasons for its vote. [23838]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The United Nations General Assembly did not adopt a resolution on "multilateral disarmament" as such on 9 December 1997. The United Kingdom did, however, support resolutions tabled by Japan on the ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons, tabled by the USA and Russia on bilateral arms negotiations, and resolutions on Nuclear Weapon Free Zones in Central and South Asia, Latin America, the Middle East and Africa.

The United Kingdom also supported resolutions on anti-personnel land mines, small arms, the consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures, conventional arms control at regional and sub-regional level, and regional confidence-building measures. For the reasons given in my reply to the my hon. Friend the Member for Greenock and Inverclyde (Mr. Godman) on 24 November 1997, Official Report, column 398, the United Kingdom voted against a Malaysian resolution on the Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice on the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons.

Hong Kong

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to publish the second of the reports to Parliament on Hong Kong and the implementation of the Joint Declaration. [24719]

Mr. Fatchett: The second report in this series, covering the period July-December 1997, was published today and a copy of the report has been placed in the libraries of the House. The report includes a foreword written by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary. I commend the report to the House.

Ireland

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made on the potential areas for co-operation between the Republic of Ireland and the United Kingdom identified in the joint statement by the Prime Minister and the Taoiseach in the margins of the European Council at Noordwijk on 23 May 1997. [24720]

Mr. Robin Cook: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and the Taoiseach discussed progress in the margins of the European summit in Luxembourg on 13 December. Copies of their joint statement and report summarising progress since the European Council in May have been placed in the libraries of the House.

Human Rights

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the recommendations of the UN Committee on Social, Cultural and Economic Rights following its deliberations on the most recent United Kingdom Periodic Report; what response the Government will make to each; and to which Government departments, agencies and other bodies these recommendations have been, or will be, communicated. [24090]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Committee's written Observations in United Nations document E/C.12/1/Add.19 are currently being edited. When finalised, they will be available on the Internet. An unedited version has been placed in the libraries of the House.

Copies have been sent to the Departments involved in preparing the United Kingdom's report: the DfEE; DTI; Department of Health; DETR; DSS; Home Office; Northern Ireland Office; Scottish Office; Welsh Office; DfID; Office of Science and Technology; MAFF and DCMS. We will consider the Committee's Observations and will report on progress under them in our fourth periodic report in June 1999.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice he has received on measures required to take account of General Comment 5 on Article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights adopted by the UN Human Rights Committee. [24089]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are aware of the views of the Human Rights Committee as set out in their 1981 General Comment Number 5.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has made it clear that the introduction of a judicial element into the process for extending detention will be one of the matters considered in the forthcoming consultation paper on counter-terrorism.

Scottish Executive

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Scotland to produce a concordat setting out arrangements for relations between his Department and the Scottish Executive after the establishment of a Scottish Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [23548]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Officials from his Department and the Scottish office are discussing the need for a non-statutory agreement between the FCO and the Scottish Executive covering the exchange of information, advance notification and joint working in line with the principles set out in the White Paper "Scotland's Parliament".

Ethics and Morality (Policy)

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his holding answer of 15 January 1998, on the role of ethics and morality of his foreign policy, for what reasons he was not able to give a substantive answer on the day named. [24380]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: It is accepted practice to issue holding replies where circumstances merit it.

Correspondence

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what correspondence with (a) the Commission, (b) the General Secretariat of the European Council and (c) foreign ministries of European Union states has occurred as a consequence of the matters leading to the letter of the Permanent Representative of The Netherlands to the United Kingdom Permanent Representative of 16 July; and if he will make a statement. [23582]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Although there were contacts with a number of member States, the Council Secretariat and the Commission, correspondence in writing was with The Netherlands, which held the Presidency at the time of the Amsterdam European Council.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter dated 9 December 1997, concerning the husband of a constituent, reference IMM/D2969, and appeal reference TH/2894/96; and for what reason no acknowledgement was sent. [24109]

Mr. Fatchett: My noble Friend the Under–Secretary sent a letter to my hon. Friend about this application on 19 January.

Letters from Members have been acknowledged by a card since mid-November. My hon. Friend should have received such a card and I am sorry if this was not the case.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what powers of electronic intercept Europol will possess under the Treaty of Amsterdam; and if he will make a statement. [22672]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 12 January 1998]: I have been asked to reply.

Europol will have no such powers. It will be a central co-ordinating body within the European Union for the exchange and analysis of criminal intelligence. It will have no operational powers and its staff will have no executive policing functions. The Amsterdam Treaty envisages a developing role for Europol, but one centred on facilitation of and support for the operations of the member states' law enforcement agencies.

Immigration (Cubans)

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Cuban nationals granted entry visas in the past two years have exceeded the period of time in the United Kingdom specified in their visa. [22566]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have been asked to reply.

I regret that comprehensive information on the number of persons who overstay their period of leave is not available. Data are, however, available on the number of persons issued with a notice of intention to deport on the grounds that they have overstayed. No more than two Cuban nationals were issued with such a notice between 1 January 1996 and 31 December 1997. These data are provisional.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Scottish Executive

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Scotland to produce a concordat setting out arrangements for relations between his Department and the Scottish Executive after the establishment of a Scottish Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [23545]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have not yet had such discussions. However, they will take place as necessary in due course.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list all overseas visits made since 1 May 1997 on which he or any other Minister in his Department has been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code, indicating (a) who accompanied him (b) the cost to public funds of each such visit. [23261]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 15 January 1998]: There have been no overseas visits on which I or Ministers in my Department have been accompanied under rule 83 of the Ministerial Code.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Competitiveness White Paper

Mr. Hanson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on her dialogue with business in preparation for the Competitiveness White Paper. [24652]

Mrs. Beckett: This Government recognise that business itself is often best placed to advise on what it needs to prosper. That is why I am committed to forging a strong partnership with business to raise national prosperity.

The White Paper on Competitiveness, to be published later this year, will be a key element of that process, not least because, for the first time, it will be a White Paper drawn up in partnership and in consultation with business. The White Paper will set out the Government's policy towards business for the long term—based on promoting strong markets, modern companies and an enterprising nation.

The work of preparing for the White Paper is being carried forward through six business-led groups. They are looking respectively at how Government and business can work together to improve investment performance, encourage innovation, use best practice, adapt to the Information Age, and ensure that EU policies best serve our competitiveness needs.

The Working Parties comprise around ninety people. Their membership reflects the different strands and diversity of business in Britain today: people drawn from small business as well as large; people from different sectors, backgrounds and experience; people who have in the past had few opportunities to influence policy development; but above all people who can contribute practical ideas.

I have placed details of the membership of the Competitiveness Working Parities in the House of Commons Library.

Millennium Dome

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the Minister with responsibility for science and technology has invited (i) British scientists, (ii) scientific organisations and (iii) companies to contribute to the content of the Millennium Dome. [24374]

Mr. Battle: My officials have put specific proposals to the New Millennium Experience Company reflecting the view of companies, the science base and Foresight Panels that the Experience should be a showcase for British creativity, excellence in leading edge science and world class products and services. The Department is also promoting and funding the Millennium Products Awards Scheme to identify state of the art products and service, of which 200 will feature in the Dome.

Business Angels

Mr. David Heath: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to encourage business angels to invest in small private companies. [23553]

Mrs. Roche: My Department continues to look at ways of encouraging business angel activity in the UK. It is important to raise awareness of business angel finance and to provide effective mechanisms for bringing together business angels and businesses seeking this type of investment. My officials are working closely with business angel networks, clearing banks and others to encourage greater co-operation.

Coral

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions she has had with the Office of Fair Trading with regard to the purchase of Coral by the Ladbroke Group. [24368]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has had no discussions with the Office of Fair Trading concerning this merger.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what she expects the Office of Fair Trading to announce its decision on referral to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to Ladbroke Group with regard to their purchase of Coral. [24369]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: It is for the Director General of Fair Trading to advise my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on whether or not the merger should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. He will advise in time to allow a decision to be taken by the statutory deadline of 30 April 1998.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on her Department's policy on the purchase of Coral by the Ladbroke Group. [24370]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade will take a decision whether or not to refer the purchase of Coral by Ladbroke in the light of the advice of the Director General of Fair Trading.

My right hon. Friend has stated that her general policy will be to consider each case of its merits and to refer mergers to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission primarily on competition grounds.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list all overseas visits made since 1 May 1997 on which she or any other Minister in her Department has been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code, indicating (a) who accompanied him or her and (b) the cost to public funds of each such visit. [23265]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 15 January 1998]: Since 1 May, DTI Ministers have been accompanied at public expense on the following overseas visits:

The President of the Board of Trade was accompanied by Mr. Lionel Beckett.

		Cost £
15–22 November 1997	India and Australia	7,000
10–21 January 1998	China, Hong Kong and Pakistan	5,600

The Minister for Trade was accompanied by Lady Clinton-Davis.

		Cost £
21–29 September 1997	Korea and Japan	6,130

Indonesia

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 21 July 1997, Official Report, column 451, if the four licence applications for the export of sub-machine guns and other automatic weapons to Indonesia have been granted; how many weapons these applications cover; who they were destined for; and which company supplied them. [23050]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 15 January 1998]: Of these four applications, three have been refused and one is still pending a final decision. Inquiries are being made under the non-statutory Code of Practice on Access to Government Information as regards the disclosure of further information. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy of that letter in the Library of the House.

Directory Inquiries

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the benefits and disbenefits to the consumer of BT's monopoly of directory inquiries. [23380]

Mrs. Roche: The regulation of directory inquiries is a matter for OFTEL. OFTEL is currently carrying out a review of telecoms directory services and products. In September, OFTEL issued a consultative document which assesses customers' needs and privacy concerns, whether these needs are met by current arrangements, whether they would be better met by introducing competition into this market, and what the barriers to competition are. The document sets out proposed remedies to address these barriers so that competitors can enter the market. OFTEL is due to issue a Statement on directory information services and products this year and the Department will consider it at that time.

Minimum Wage

Dr. Gibson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received on the effects of the minimum wage on the pay of women in East Anglia. [23284]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have received representations on the effect of the national minimum wage on women's pay from a number of organisations who share the Government's view that women throughout the United Kingdom will benefit from its introduction.

Aviation Industry

Ms Osborne: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on Government investment in the aviation industry in Scotland, including air traffic control. [24124]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

As my hon. Friend is aware, the major new air traffic control project in Scotland is the New Scottish Air Traffic Control Centre at Prestwick. This is being developed under the Private Finance Initiative, and will not involve Government investment, but will nonetheless provide a state of the art service, with the capacity to deal with increasing levels of air traffic well into the next century. The Government have also approved more than £30 million of projects in connection with the New Scottish Centre; these projects will connect the Centre with the rest of the UK's air traffic control network, and allow it to realise its full potential.

Financial support to the aviation industry is also made available by the Scottish Office in the 1997–98 financial year as follows:

(i) Up to £7 million to Highlands and Islands Airports Ltd.; and

(ii) £350,000 in support of lifeline air services currently operated by Loganair Ltd.

The Department of Trade and Industry's Civil Aircraft Research and Technical Demonstration programme and Launch Aid scheme also provide support to companies throughout the UK that meet the criteria.

London Art Market

Mr. Swayne: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the state of the London art market. [21462]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 19 January 1998]: My Department has received representations about the Commission's proposals to harmonise artists' resale right in the EU, and the liberalisation of auctioneering services in France.

TREASURY

Budget Date

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what account he took of (a) public holidays in any part of the United Kingdom in fixing the date of his Budget and (b) the relevant precedents. [24170]

Mr. Gordon Brown: A number of factors are taken into account in deciding the date of the Budget. These include the availability of economic data; international meetings; the timetable for developing budgetary policy and national events including public holidays. On balance, I decided that 17 March would be the most suitable day for this year's Budget. The Budget was also held on 17 March in 1987.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what increase in national average earnings would result from a national minimum wage at one half of average earnings with (a) full restoration of differentials, (b) half restoration of differentials and (c) one-quarter restoration of differentials; [24413]

(2) what increase in national average earnings would result from a national minimum wage at 40 per cent. of average earnings with (a) full restoration of differentials, (b) half restoration of differentials and (c) one quarter restoration of differentials. [24412]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The effect of the minimum wage on national average earnings will depend on a number of factors, including the level it is set at, its coverage, and the state of the labour market when it is introduced. The terms of reference of the Low Pay Commission ask it to take into account the wider effects on the economy, including the effects on inflation and employment, in making its recommendations on the minimum wage.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if the Government will exempt earnings up to the level of the minimum wage from income tax; [24298]

(2) if he will raise tax thresholds to a level which ensures that no-one pays income tax on pay up to the minimum wage level. [24297]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: Decisions on tax are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget statement.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to change the basis for the calculation of the Retail Prices Index. [23394]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 19 January 1998]: The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) advises me on methodological questions concerning the Retail Prices Index (RPI) and also services an RPI Advisory Committee (RPIAC) to which I refer major methodological issues. The RPIAC is convened if and when required.

The ONS recalculates weights for the constituent elements of the RPI at the start of each year using the latest available figures from the Family Expenditure Survey (FES). For example, from February 1998, the RPI weights will use information from the FES for the period July 1996 to June 1997. This allows the ONS to reflect the most up to date spending patterns available and to introduce new goods and services into the index.

Ministerial Travel (Trains)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [22936]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 15 January 1998]: I last used a train in the course of my official duties on 10 November 1997, when I travelled to Birmingham for the CBI Conference.

Advance Corporation Tax

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment his Department made of the likely changes to the capital structure of companies arising as a result of the abolition of repayable tax credits on dividends received by pension funds and from the abolition of advance corporation tax prior to these changes being introduced. [22893]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The capital structure of companies depends on many factors. The changes in company taxation announced in the July 1997 Budget and the proposals made in the Pre-Budget report in November are unlikely to have a significant impact in the short term. Longer term effects are expected to reflect the benefits to the economy and to companies of deciding their capital structure under a more neutral tax system.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's estimate of the corporation tax revenue consequences arising from the change to the capital structure of companies resulting from the abolition of repayable tax credits on dividends received by pension funds and from the abolition of advance corporation tax. [22889]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The current view remains that any change in capital structure would not significantly affect the published estimates of corporation tax revenues.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate his Department made of the corporation tax revenue consequences arising from the change to the capital structure of companies resulting from the abolition of repayable tax credits on dividends received by pension funds and from the abolition of advance corporation tax at the time of making these changes. [22890]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: Any change in capital structure would not significantly affect the published estimates of corporation tax revenues.

Publicly Financed Bodies

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to ensure that all publicly financed bodies comply with accounting standards on off-balance sheet transactions. [23459]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The relevant accounting standard for dealing with off-balance sheet transactions is Financial Reporting Standard 5 "Reporting the substance of transactions", which forms part of Generally Accepted Accounting Practice (GAAP) in the UK.

The Treasury already requires departments, agencies and non-departmental public bodies to prepare their accounts and public expenditure returns in accordance with GAAP, to the extent that it is meaningful and appropriate in the public sector context. It is the duty of the responsible Accounting Officer to ensure that this requirement is adhered to.

Insurance Premium Tax

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has for the anticipated revenue from (a) insurance premium tax and (b) higher rate insurance premium tax for the year 1997–98. [22620]

Dawn Primarolo: The latest estimate for receipts of insurance premium tax in 1997–98 is £1.1 billion. No separate estimate is available for receipts at the higher rate.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the number of jobs lost in the (a) travel agency sector and (b) retail sector since the introduction of higher rate insurance premium tax. [22622]

Dawn Primarolo: I have received a number of representations from the travel agency and retail sector about this tax measure, some of which express concerns about the possibility of consequential job losses. I have not received any representations about actual job loss which can be attributed to this measure.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the (a) benefits and (b) disadvantages of reintroducing a single rate of insurance premium tax to remedy distortions in the insurance market. [22624]

Dawn Primarolo: The higher rate of insurance premium tax, set at the same rate as the standard rate of VAT, has prevented the tax loss (and distortion of trade) previously suffered where suppliers of taxable goods and services switched margins into ancillary sales of VAT exempt insurance. To return to a single, low rate of insurance premium tax would re-open this tax loophole and there are therefore no plans to go down this path. However, the impact of this tax measure is being kept under review.

DEFENCE

Arms Sales

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide a breakdown of arms sales to the Philippines in each of the last five years. [22995]

Mr. Spellar: The estimated value of UK defence sales, including services, to the Philippines in each year since 1993 is as follows in £ million:

1993: 0.85
1994: 0.05
1995: 83.71
1996: 3.34
1997: 0.65.

These figures are based on voluntary returns from industry, are expressed in current prices, and relate to new contracts signed rather than to financial receipts or actual deliveries.

The figure for 1997 may not be complete as full final quarter information will not be available until April of this year.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the value of arms sales by each member of the European Union in each year since 1990. [22809]

Mr. Spellar: The value of UK defence exports in each year since 1990, in £ billion, is estimated at:

1990: 4.8
1991: 3.6
1992: 5.3
1993: 7.1
1994: 4.5
1995: 5.0
1996: 5.1
1997: 5.2

These figures are expressed in current prices and relate to contracts signed rather than to receipts or actual deliveries, and are based on voluntary returns from industry.

Other EU countries publish export figures on various bases, but no consistent and comprehensive official figures for EU-wide exports have been published. The World Military Expenditures and Arms Transfer, published by the US Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, provides details on world defence equipment deliveries.

Eurofighter

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what expenditure, in which financial years, was committed by the recent signing of the Memorandum of Understanding on the European Fighter Aircraft project; what proportion of the total estimated expenditure on EFA this represents; whether such expenditures will be subject to exchange rate variations, and what is the present estimated unit cost of each of the 232 EFAs. [22983]

Mr. Spellar: Signature of the Memoranda of Understanding (MOU) on 22 December 1997 committed the UK and its collaborative partners to the Production Investment (PI), Production and Support phases of the Eurofighter programme. We estimate the cost to the UK of PI/Production and initial support will be approximately £11.5 billion (at 1997 prices) which is some 72 per cent. of the total procurement cost. Contractual negotiations are currently being finalised with the aim of signing the relevant contracts in the coming weeks. Expenditure will occur during the period 1998 to 2014 when the last aircraft is scheduled to be delivered to the Royal Air Force. Aircraft will be ordered in three tranches and, with a few exceptions, the underlying funding principle is that each nation will pay for the work carried out in its own country. The extent of expenditure which will be subject to exchange rate variation, therefore, will be relatively small. The Unit Production Cost of each aircraft is some £40.2 million at 1997 prices.

Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the projected maximum (a) offensive payload, (b) range and (c) cost of (i) the Joint Strike Fighter and (ii) the Sea Harrier. [22895]

Mr. Spellar: US Department of Defence projections for the Short Take Off, Vertical Landing variant of the Joint Strike Fighter include a maximum offensive payload in excess of 15,700 lbs, a range of at least 550 miles and a unit production cost of $35 million (£21.6 million) at 1994 prices. Comparable figures for the Sea Harrier F/A2 are 5,000 lbs, 300 miles and £14.5 million.

MV Gaul

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any naval personnel were on the fishing vessel Gaul on its final fishing trip; whether any had sailed on her on earlier trips in the 1970s; and whether any of his Department's equipment was installed on her. [23529]

Dr. Reid: No Royal Naval personnel were on board during the Gaul's last voyage. There is no evidence that personnel or equipment had been embarked on the vessel at any time.

Poor People

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will carry out an assessment of the impact of his Department's current policies on the (a) income, (b) employment opportunities and (c) living standards, of the poorest 30 per cent. of the population. [23334]

Dr. Reid: We have no plans to do so. The Department carries out assessments of the impact of its policies in terms of overall value for money and upon the defence industries and regional employment. Such assessments do not attempt to separate the effects upon the poorest 30 per cent. of the population, or any other sub-division of the population by income.

Helicopter Pilots

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances the instrument flying qualifications of Army helicopter pilots are recognised by the Civil Aviation Authority. [23942]

Dr. Reid: The CAA recognises the training given to Service helicopter pilots, which, after qualification, permits military helicopters to fly in most civil controlled zones. Once they have left the Services, helicopter pilots who wish to obtain a civil licence, must re-test to gain the appropriate CAA qualification.

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training to fly, using instruments in bad weather conditions, helicopter pilots receive. [23937]

Dr. Reid: Instrument flying training for potential helicopter pilots starts at the Joint Elementary Flying Training School where about five and one half hours of instrument training is given. Helicopter pilots then receive 23 hours of theoretical, simulator and flying training at the Defence Helicopter Flying School, RAF Shawbury. After instrument flying qualification, helicopter pilots receive further instrument training on particular helicopter types at respective Service training squadrons. Indicative examples are as follows:

	Simulator	Actual flying
Royal Navy Sea King ASW	9 hours	9 hours 15 mins
Army Lynx	7 hours	6 hours 12 mins
Royal Air Force Chinook	11 hours	3 hours 30 mins

Thereafter, all military helicopter pilots undertake regular further training and are tested every 12 to 13 months on a common tri-Service instrument rating.

Intelligence Gathering

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Hull Trawlermen signed the Official Secrets Act in the 1970s. [23944]

Dr. Reid: This information is not available.

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1997, Official Report, column 214, concerning intelligence gathering by trawlers, which three Hull trawlers were used for specific intelligence gathering; on what date in 1973 these operations ceased; and how many trawlers were used in non-specific intelligence gathering. [23948]

Dr. Reid: MV Arctic Galliard, MV Lord Nelson and MV Invincible were used for specific intelligence gathering on a combined total of five occasions in the 1960s and 1970s. The last such use was in September 1973.

Incidental intelligence gathering occurred throughout the Cold War period as trawlers went about their normal business of fishing. No records have been found of the names of the trawlers concerned.

Trident

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what amount was allocated from the Trident (a) procurement and (b) operating budget towards the cost of the order for Trident-related equipment placed with the United States of America for US fiscal year 1998. [23978]

Mr. George Robertson: Trident procurement orders for the UK during US fiscal year 1998, which include the seven missile bodies announced last October, are currently expected to cost up to $157 million over the duration of the various contracts. Orders placed this year by the US in respect of the operation of the UK Trident programme are expected to take the total up to some $260 million, but such costs are in support of the programme at large and are not tied to an individual year's procurement.

"The Armed Services Forum"

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what editorial independence will be granted to the editor of the journal "The Armed Services Forum". [24095]

Dr. Reid: No constraints, other than those laid down in Queen's Regulations, will be placed on the independence of the editor of the Armed Services Forum by the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which serving officer or civil servant gave permission to Major Eric Joyce to publish the journal "The Armed Services Forum". [24093]

Dr. Reid: Individual Service personnel do not need formal authority to publish such a journal. All Army personnel are entitled to publish any magazine, journal or periodical provided publication does not contravene Queen's Regulations.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what costs to his Department will be incurred by the publication of the journal "The Armed Services Forum". [24096]

Dr. Reid: The proposed publication of the Armed Services Forum will be an entirely private venture. No additional costs will accrue to the Department.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the members of the editorial board of the journal "The Armed Services Forum". [24094]

Dr. Reid: The proposed publication of the journal "The Armed Services Forum" is a private venture and the composition of the editorial board will be a matter for the publisher.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what ministerial responsibility he had for the decision to give permission to Major Eric Joyce to publish the journal "The Armed Services Forum". [24097]

Dr. Reid: Major Joyce does not need formal authority to publish his journal "The Armed Services Forum". His request was clearly a matter for the Military authorities and was dealt with in the normal way, without consulting Ministers. All Army personnel are entitled to publish any magazine, journal or periodical provided publication does not contravene Queen's Regulations.

Journals and Magazines

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the guidance given to serving officers who edit journals or magazines about current British defence policy and the organisation and culture of the armed forces. [24098]

Dr. Reid: No specific guidance exists for serving officers who produce defence related journals or magazines on defence related subjects. Queen's Regulations cover the requirement for clearance before publication. A copy of QRs is in the Library of the House.

Scottish Executive

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Scotland to produce a concordat setting out arrangements for relations between his Department and the Scottish Executive after the establishment of a Scottish Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [23549]

Mr. George Robertson: My right hon. Friend and I have agreed that there is likely to be a need for a non-statutory agreement between the Ministry of Defence and the Scottish Executive covering the exchange of information, advance notification and joint working in line with the principles set out in the White Paper "Scotland's Parliament".

NORTHERN IRELAND

Museums

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the arrangements applying to the merger and reorganisation of museums in Northern Ireland. [22737]

Mr. Worthington: I refer my hon. Friend to the draft Museums and Galleries (Northern Ireland) Order 1997 which is currently before Parliament for consideration. The draft Order was considered by the House of Commons Standing Committee on 10 December 1997 and is due to be considered in another place in the near future. The Museums will shortly announce the appointment of a Director-Designate and, following the recent public advertisement, the Government are moving towards the appointment of the Trustees of the merged institution, in accordance with the public appointment procedures.

Maze Prison

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she relaxed the search regime for visitors to HMP Maze between 1 May and 25 December 1997. [24372]

Mr. Ingram: No.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many head counts took place in each block of HMP Maze between 1 May and 25 December 1997. [24371]

Mr. Ingram: Each day there are two formal head counts a.m. and p.m. These took place on every day during the period in question except for four occasions when non co-operation by prisoners resulted in sanctions being applied by management.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many times she has (a) visited RUC headquarters and (b) met the Chief Constable of the RUC. [22176]

Marjorie Mowlam: Since I took office I have met the Chief Constable on 40 occasions at different locations. I have not yet visited RUC headquarters.

PRIME MINISTER

Cabinet Committees (Legislation)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 12 January 1998, Official Report, column 42, if he is prepared to treat all proposals for primary legislation as questions which significantly engage the collective responsibility of the Government because they raise major issues, or because they are of critical importance to the public, as set out in the Ministerial Code. [23535]

The Prime Minister: The way in which proposals for primary legislation are considered by my Government will depend on the nature of the proposals.

Welfare State Roadshows

Mr. Webb: To ask the Prime Minister what will be the cost to the Exchequer of the series of welfare state roadshows which he announced on 11 January. [23134]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 January 1998]: The cost of visits to promote understanding of the Government's policy on welfare reform will be met from the Prime Minister's existing visits budget. A final figure for this cost is not yet available. The cost of visits to promote understanding of the Government's policy on welfare reform within the Labour Party will not fall to the Exchequer.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Prime Minister if paragraph 83 of the provisions of the ministerial code concerning travel at public expense by Minister's spouses also applies to such travel by Minister's partners who are not spouses in circumstances where the Minister has a spouse; and if he will make a statement. [23384]

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish guidelines to govern the arrangements applying when a Minister's personal friend other than a spouse may accompany him on official business at public expense. [23486]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The guidance on travel in the Ministerial Code remains unchanged. Public funds may be used only where it is in the public interest and with my prior consent.

Chemical, Biological and Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what position Her Majesty's Government took and for what reasons, at the International Criminal Court Preparatory Committee meeting held in New York in December 1987 in respect of (a) chemical weapons, (b) biological weapons and (c) nuclear weapons. [23408]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 January 1998]: At the Preparatory Committee meeting in December 1997, the UK delegation supported proposals to include within the jurisdiction of the new International Criminal Court war crimes under existing customary international law. For that reason, the delegation supported the inclusion of the use of warfare of a nature to cause superfluous injury or unnecessary suffering; these included bacteriological (biological) agents or toxins for hostile purposes or in armed conflict, and chemical weapons as referred to in the 1993 Chemical Weapons Convention. For the same reason, the delegation did not support the inclusion of the use of nuclear weapons.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish any written permission given under paragraph 70 of the Ministerial Code for the travel of Mrs. Gaynor Regan at a cost to public funds. [23849]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 January 1998]: No. It is not the practice to publish exchanges of ministerial correspondence.

Strategic Communications Unit

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if the predominant flow of information in respect of deciding initiatives will be from individual departments to the Strategic Communications Unit or vice versa; [24365]

(2) if the Strategic Communications Unit can decide which government policies merit the greatest promotion; [24315]

(3) what will be the role of the Strategic Communications Unit in determining the timing of announcements by other departments; [24366]

(4) whether individual departments will be required to clear press statements and news releases with the Strategic Communications Unit before their issue. [24314]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) on 14 January 1998, Official Report, columns 233–40.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what is the role of the Minister without Portfolio in the Strategic Communications Unit. [24367]

The Prime Minister: The Strategic Communications Unit will report to me via my Chief Press Secretary. The Minister without Portfolio will have an interest in the work of the Unit in view of his responsibilities for co-ordinating the overall presentation of Government policy.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what budget has been allocated to the Strategic Communications Unit, in respect of (a) personnel costs, (b) administrative costs, (c) the costs of publications and (d) other costs. [24313]

The Prime Minister: The budget of the Strategic Communications Unit has not yet been finalised.

Correspondence

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Prime Minister what proportion of letters addressed to him by hon. and right hon. Members which receive replies are signed by him; and upon what basis he decides to reply personally. [24401]

The Prime Minister: My office aim to acknowledge correspondence within three working days and provide a substantive response within 15 days. The response to any correspondence is considered on an individual basis.

Unpaid Bills

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Prime Minister what percentage of government and public agency bills and of what total value were not paid within 30 days over the last six months. [24244]

The Prime Minister: The information is not held centrally in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Government departments and their agencies are required to aim to pay all their bills on time and to monitor the percentage of bills paid on time. Figures for departmental payment performance for the period 1 June 1996 to 31 March 1997 were given by my hon. Friend the Paymaster General on 27 November 1997, Official Report, columns 662–63. Figures for 1997–98 will be published before the Summer Recess.

The Government take the issue of late payment very seriously and are introducing legislation on a statutory right to interest on the late payment of commercial debt to address the problem.

Scottish Executive

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what guidelines he has issued concerning the format and policy aims of concordats between Whitehall Departments and the proposed Scottish Executive; and if he will make a statement; [23556]

(2) what discussions he has had with ministers concerning concordats between Whitehall Departments and the proposed Scottish Executive; and if he will make a statement. [23557]

The Prime Minister: The principles upon which we expect non-statutory agreements between Departments of the UK Government and the proposed Scottish Executive to be based are set out in paragraph 4.13 of Scotland's Parliament. I took part in discussions which led to the publication of that White Paper.

SCOTLAND

Glasgow City Council

4. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Glasgow City Council about the state of finances in the Council; and if he will make a statement. [21715]

Mr. Dewar: I have had a number of discussions with Glasgow City Council in recent months.

Highlands and Islands

12. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the European Union regarding future financial assistance for the highlands and islands. [21723]

Mr. Macdonald: My right hon. Friend met Commissioner Wulf-Mathies on 8 January 1998 and 9 October 1997, Commissioner Flynn on 1 December and President Santer on 18 September 1997. Discussion of European Structural Funds formed part of the agenda on all occasions.

Scottish Parliament

13. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to meet the Confederation of British Industry in Scotland to discuss the future role of the Scottish Parliament. [21724]

Mr. McLeish: My right hon. Friend will meet key figures in the CBI in Scotland on 30 January to consider the role that the CBI can play following the establishment of the Scottish Parliament. This follows on from meetings my right hon. Friend and Ministerial colleagues have had with CBI representatives since 1 May to discuss the Government's plans to establish a Parliament.

15. Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on his estimate of the cost of setting up a Scottish Parliament. [21726]

Mr. McLeish: The Scottish Office has received a total of 10 letters; eight from members of the public and two from hon. Members.

28. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the costs of a Scottish Parliament. [21740]

Mr. McLeish: My right hon. Friend announced on Friday 9 January that the Parliament would be sited at Holyrood in Edinburgh. The estimated construction costs of the building will be around £50 million. Site acquisition costs, fees and VAT must be added to this. The actual costs will depend on the final design, the level of fees negotiated and the price of construction, which will be determined by competitive tender.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in what circumstances a Minister answerable to the Parliament of Scotland would (a) attend with a United Kingdom Minister and (b) lead in European Union Council meetings. [21725]

Mr. Dewar: The Government intend that Ministers of the Scottish Executive will have a role to play in relevant Council meetings and could speak for the UK in appropriate cases, at the discretion of the UK Minister. This would mainly arise in cases where EU business is being discussed which predominantly affects devolved areas.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his statement of 12 January, 1997, Official Report, column 29, on what basis he maintains that relations between Edinburgh and London will be based on consent and co-operation in the matter of financial resources. [23308]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The creation and operation of a Scottish Parliament within the framework of the United Kingdom can take place only on the basis of consultation, consent and co-operation. The financial arrangements are no exception to this.

Local Government Finance

16. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the 1998–99 revenue support grant settlement for Scottish local authorities. [21728]

Mr. Macdonald: My right hon. Friend and I have received a number of letters from hon. Members, local authorities and members of the public. We also have regular meetings with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and with individual councils.

Inward Investment

18. Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with Scottish Enterprise regarding inward investment. [21730]

Mr. Wilson: Locate in Scotland's policy is overseen by a Supervisory Board which I chair and on which Scottish Enterprise is represented by its Chairman and its Chief Executive. The Board meets regularly to discuss inward investment and related issues.

20. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future of inward investment projects in Scotland from south-east Asian countries. [21732]

Mr. Wilson: Most of our inward investors from the Far East are well established, are serving buoyant European markets, and source many of their inputs locally. There is no reason to believe that their Scottish operations will be adversely affected by the current turmoil in Far Eastern financial markets.

22. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to meet the CBI in Scotland to discuss the future of Locate in Scotland. [21734]

Mr. Wilson: My right hon. Friend will be meeting representatives of CBI Scotland on 30 January to continue the excellent dialogue between the Government and CBI Scotland on matters important to Scotland's economic well being. Inward investment and the work of Locate in Scotland regularly feature in these discussions.

EU Fisheries Council

19. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many meetings of the EU Fisheries Council he has attended since 2 May 1997. [21731]

Mr. Macdonald: My noble Friend the Minister with responsibility for agriculture, the environment and fisheries has attended both of the EU Fisheries Councils convened since 2 May 1997, on 30 October and 18–19 December.

Welfare to Work

21. Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on progress with the welfare-to-work package in Scotland. [21733]

Mr. Wilson: The New Deal for 18-24 year-olds was launched in the Tayside Pathfinder area on 5 January and arrangements for implementing the programme in the rest of Scotland from the beginning of April are already well advanced. The New Deal for the 25 years and over age group is due to commence in June.

The New Deal for Lone Parents is already available to those claiming Income Support in the Clyde Valley and will be expanded nationwide from October of this year.

Public Spending

23. Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums of money are to be transferred to the Scottish block for public spending in Scotland in consequence of the inclusion of council tax benefit and housing benefit. [21735]

Mr. Dewar: The Scottish Block will include expected expenditure on housing benefit and council tax benefit at the time the Scottish Parliament comes into operation.

Education Funding

24. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the discretion which local authorities will have in the use of additional funding for education. [21736]

Mr. Macdonald: Local authorities have indicated that they share the Government's priority for education and agree that the additional revenue funding included in the 1998–99 revenue settlement should be used to improve the quality of Scotland's schools. I therefore expect that authorities will use their discretion to do so. The additional capital grants of £8.9 million this year and £26.7 million in each of the next four years are being made available only for capital spending to improve the fabric of schools in Scotland for the installation of information and communications technology equipment. It has been made clear to authorities that this should be additional to the capital they would otherwise have spent on schools.

Public Services (Funding)

25. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has (a) made and (b) evaluated in respect of the scale of funding for Scottish public services relative to that elsewhere in the UK. [21737]

Mr. Dewar: None.

Food Hygiene

26. Mr. Roy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Government expect to implement the recommendation of the Pennington report into food hygiene matters. [21738]

Mr. Galbraith: The Government have accepted all the recommendations of the Pennington Report and most have now been implemented.

Out of an extra £19 million available for Great Britain I have allocated £5.8 million in Scotland to allow increased enforcement and help to accelerate the implementation of Hazard Analysis and Critical Control Point (HACCP) food safety systems, both of which were major recommendations of the Pennington Report.

A Consultation document proposing a licensing scheme for butcher's shops will be issued shortly.

Traffic and Transport

27. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the traffic and transport problems of Aberdeen and the north-east of Scotland. [21739]

Mr. McLeish: The Scottish Office supports a range of research into the transport needs of Aberdeen and its surrounding areas including the Aberdeen Sustainable Transport Study currently being undertaken in partnership with local transport operators and Aberdeen City and Aberdeenshire Councils. This work will inform our proposals for an integrated transport system appropriate to the needs of Scotland which will be contained in our White Paper to be published in the spring.

Tuition Fees

29. Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received in support of the Government's plans to introduce tuition fees for university education. [21741]

Mr. Wilson: The Government's proposals to introduce a student contribution towards the cost of tuition, building on the recommendations of the National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education, received support from a range of bodies. In Scotland, they included the Committee of Scottish Higher Education Principals (COSHEP), the Association of Scottish Colleges, Bell College of Technology, Highlands and Islands Enterprise, and Renfrewshire Council.

Other Government Departments have also consulted widely on the Government's proposals.

Designed to Care

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many responses he has received to his White Paper "Designed to Care". [21729]

Mr. Galbraith: Since the White Paper "Designed to Care" is not a consultation paper, no formal responses to it have been received. General reactions to it have been very favourable.

Road Traffic Offenders Act

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will amend the Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988 to bring the procedures for issuing fixed penalty notices in Scotland into line with those in England and Wales. [22533]

Mr. McLeish: Differences in the procedure for issuing fixed penalty notices between Scotland and England and Wales reflect differences in legal systems. We have no plans for altering Scottish procedure in order to bring it into line with that in England and Wales. The arrangements for the conditional offer of fixed penalties for endorsable offences in England and Wales, introduced from 1 July 1992 under the Road Traffic Act 1991, are however similar to Scottish arrangements for fixed penalties, in that inspection of driving licences will be a matter for the courts rather than the police, as is required for other fixed penalties.

Nursing

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he has sent to the Royal College of Nursing's representations that there should be one United Kingdom-wide system of registration and regulation of the nursing profession. [23305]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The Scotland Bill provides for legislative competence in respect of the regulation and registration of the nursing professions to be reserved to the United Kingdom Parliament. The Royal College of Nursing is aware of this position.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Calendar

34. Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Council what representations she has received on establishing procedures to allow for advance publication of the dates of parliamentary recesses. [21746]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: I am well aware of the desire on both sides of the House for predictability about the dates of recesses. I indicated last Thursday that the next recess will fall in the week beginning 13 April and that I would give more precise details nearer the time.

35. Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Council what representations she has received regarding reform of the parliamentary calendar; and if she will make a statement. [21747]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The Modernisation Committee is currently considering what improvements can be made to the parliamentary calendar. Inevitably the representations received from a variety of Members are not all compatible.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Council what is the Government's policy on restructuring the parliamentary calendar. [21756]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The Government await the Modernisation Committee's recommendations on the parliamentary calendar.

Parliamentary Day

37. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the President of the Council what recent representations she has received relating to the timing of events within the parliamentary day. [21750]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The Modernisation Committee has received a number of suggestions about the timing of parliamentary business, including the sitting times of the House.

Smoking (Palace of Westminster)

38. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, what progress he has made in developing a comprehensive policy on smoking in the Palace of Westminster. [21752]

Mr. Kirkwood: The Commission is responsible for the terms and conditions of the staff of the House and their working environment. Currently individual heads of the six House departments seek to agree an acceptable smoking policy with staff. The Board of Management is carrying out a review of this policy, at the request of the Commission.

Policy on smoking in shared areas of the parliamentary estate, such as corridor and lifts, is a matter primarily for the Administration Committee. Smoking policy in restaurants is a matter for the Catering Committee. Smoking in the offices of hon. Members' and their staff is a matter for Members themselves.

Office Costs Allowance

39. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Council what steps she is taking to review the office costs allowance. [21754]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: I would not expect this issue to be revisited until the Senior Salaries Review Body's next scheduled review of parliamentary pay and allowances in the year 2000. However, in its 1996 report the SSRB did make a number of Development Recommendations related to the Office Costs Allowance and work has been continuing on these.

European Legislation

40. Mr. Rammell: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement on the House of Commons scrutiny of European legislation. [21755]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: I shall very shortly be publishing a memorandum on Scrutiny of European Union Business.

Minister without Portfolio

42. Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Council if she will create a slot for oral questions to allow the Minister without Portfolio to answer to the House on his wider responsibilities beyond those relating to the millennium dome. [21751]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: I have already announced that the period for the Minister without Portfolio to answer questions on the Millennium Experience will be extended to 10 minutes from Monday 9 February 1998. My hon. Friend has no other responsibilities for which he is the lead Minister accountable to the House.

Limited-term Contracts

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, what proportion of the House of Commons Commission's employees are on limited-term contracts. [21748]

Mr. Kirkwood: There are approximately 1,300 (1,292) House of Commons Commission staff in post, of whom 85 (6.5 per cent.) are on limited-term contracts of some form, including casual staff, staff on period appointments for up to five years and staff on secondment from Government Departments or other organisations.

Research Assistants (Passes)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what assessment she has made of the adequacy of the present system of allocating passes to hon. Members' research assistants. [21749]

Mrs. Roe: The principles underlying the issue of photo-identity passes to Members' staff were last considered by the Administration Committee in February 1996, in the context of requests by individual Members for extra Research Assistants' passes. The then Committee continued to endorse the recommendations of the Services Committee, contained in its Second Report of Session 1987–1988 (HC 850), as agreed by the House on 30 January 1989.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, what is the latest estimate he has made of the total cost of millennium compliance in the House of Commons. [23642]

Mr. Kirkwood [holding answer 16 January 1998]: A working group of technical staff has been established to address the compliance issue for systems provided for departments of the House. An estimate of the costs of corrective action will be available after the completion of the programme of tests, later this year. The Finance and Services Committee is monitoring progress.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, how many staff are working on the millennium compliance of all systems in the House of Commons. [23643]

Mr. Kirkwood [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The size of the working group of technical staff is currently six, representing each department of the House. The number of staff required to ensure compliance of all systems will be determined by the outcome of the testing programme. Members are responsible for the compliance of their own information technology equipment.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Key Stage 2

Mr. Dorrell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish the results of the latest Key Stage 2 tests in English, Maths and Science in a form which allows the performance of each school in a local education authority area to be assessed. [23526]

Ms Estelle Morris: Each local education authority in England is required to publish the results of Key Stage 2 assessment in 1997 in the form referred to on or before Friday 23 January.

Scottish Executive

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Scotland to produce a concordat setting out arrangements for relations between his Department and the Scottish Executive after the establishment of a Scottish Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [23546]

Mr. Blunkett: Officials from my Department and the Scottish Office will be discussing the need for a non-statutory agreement between the Department for Education and Employment and the Scottish Executive, covering the exchange of information, advance notification and joint working in line with the principles set out in the White Paper "Scotland's Parliament".

Tuition Fees

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what factors underlay his decisions (a) to pay tuition fees for medical and dental students in the fifth and subsequent years of their courses and (b) not to pay tuition fees for veterinary and architecture students in the fifth and subsequent years of their courses. [24246]

Dr. Howells: The decision to pay tuition fees for medical and dental students domiciled in England in the fifth and subsequent years of their courses is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

The Government cannot, however, take responsibility for the supply of those professionals such as vets and architects who are employed predominantly in the private sector. That is a matter for their employers, who will be free to introduce bursary schemes for tuition fees or other arrangements to support students, if they wish. We shall, however, continue to meet the majority of the costs of veterinary and architecture courses through grant provided to institutions by the Higher Education Funding Councils.

Polish A Levels

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the number of students entered for A level Polish for each of the last 10 years broken down by examination board. [24108]

Dr. Howells: The numbers of students that attempted GCE A level Polish since 1992, the earliest year for which data are available, are:

1992: 73

1993: 93

1994: 105

1995: 106

1996: 110

1997: 98.

The only entries in any year for GCE A level Polish were with Edexcel (Education in Excellence), formerly ULEAC (University of London Examinations and Assessment Council).

Sign Language

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment by what means the Government intend to improve the literacy levels of deaf children of primary school age whose first language is Sign Language.[23347]

Ms Estelle Morris: All mainstream primary schools, and the majority of special schools, will be involved in the implementation of the National Literacy Strategy, which begins this year. The strategy is an ambitious programme for achieving our national literacy target for 2002: it will be overseen by a group including Special Educational Needs interests. Part of the group's role will be to ensure that the widest possible range of children benefit, including those with all types of disability.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what resources are available from central Government to produce bilingual educational video materials for primary school children whose first language is Sign Language. [23348]

Ms Estelle Morris: Schools and local education authorities are responsible for meeting the needs of all children with special educational needs, using the funding available to them including principally that channelled through the local government finance settlement. Some LEAs produce their own video materials for use by signing children; others use materials produced commercially.

Free School Meals

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of children in Northumberland schools are entitled to free school meals. [23993]

Ms Estelle Morris: In January 1997 15.3 per cent. of pupils in maintained primary and secondary schools in the Northumberland Local Education Authority area were known to be eligible for free school meals.

Pupil-Teacher Ratio

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the pupil-teacher ratio has been in Northumberland each year since 1992. [24020]

Overall pupil-teacher ratio for maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools

Northumberland local education authority area	1992–97
	Position in January each year
1997	18.6
1996	18.9
1995	18.7
1994	18.8
1993	18.4
1992	17.4

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Standards

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the Food Standards Agency will have responsibility for the controls over the sales of food and dietary supplements. [24309]

Mr. Rooker: The White Paper 'The Food Standards Agency: A Force for Change' proposes that the Food Standards Agency will take responsibility for policy and legislation on the compositional standards of foodstuffs and the labelling of food at the retail and catering level, and where appropriate propose legislation on nutritional aspects of food (including labelling and claims), dietary supplements sold as food, fortified foods and functional foods. The general enforcement of legislation in these areas will continue to be carried out by local authorities.

Agenda 2000

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the consistency of the Agenda 2000 proposals for CAP reform with the requirements of the World Trade Organisation. [24312]

Mr. Rooker: The Government believe that the Agenda 2000 proposals for CAP reform are a welcome step in the right direction. The proposals will generally address the problems which arise from the EU's current WTO commitments arising from the part of the GATT Uruguay round. In our view, however, they would not prepare EU agriculture fully for the next round of WTO trade negotiations, which are due to start at the turn of the century.

International Whaling Commission

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who will represent the United Kingdom at the intersessional meeting of members of the International Whaling Commission to be held in Antigua. [24099]

Mr. Morley: The United Kingdom will be represented at the intersessional meeting of IWC Commissioners, to be held in Antigua from 3 to 5 February, by the UK Commissioner, Mr. C. I. Llewelyn.

Beef

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the occasions since 1 January on which Customs and Excise personnel have inspected loads of imported beef to ensure compliance with standards applied in the United Kingdom. [23775]

Mr. Rooker: Checks to ensure that imported beef meets the necessary health requirements are not the responsibility of Customs and Excise officers. Checks are carried out by the Department or authorised local authority officers at Border Inspection Posts and at places of destination. Details of the number of checks are not kept centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Whales

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what assessment he has made of the likely impact on the populations of each whale species of the Irish proposals presently before the International Whaling Commission; [23542]

(2) what assessment he has made of the likely level of trade in illegal whale meat should the Irish proposals before the International Whaling Commission be accepted. [23402]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 19 January 1998]: It is not possible to assess the impact of the Irish proposals until more detail is available on how they might be implemented. The Government have serious reservations about some aspects of the Irish proposals, in particular the possible authorisation of coastal whaling. As I have made clear, we would consider changes to existing IWC rules only if these contributed positively to whale conservation and led to a significant reduction in the number of whales currently being killed.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reassurances he has (a) sought and (b) received from (i) South Korea, (ii) Indonesia and (iii) Taiwan that they will not resume commercial whaling should the present Irish proposals before the International Whaling Commission be accepted. [23401]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 19 January 1998]: The Government are opposed to a resumption of commercial whaling, and we have not approached these countries on this issue. Taiwan and Indonesia are not, in any case, members of the International Whaling Commission, and are not legally bound by the IWC's moratorium on commercial whaling.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent communications he has had with (a) Norway and (b) Japan in respect of the Irish proposals before the International Whaling Commission; and if he will make a statement. [23541]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 19 January 1998]: I have had no recent communications with the Norwegian or Japanese Governments on whaling issues. The proposals put forward by Ireland at the last IWC annual meeting in Monaco are to be discussed further at an intersessional meeting of IWC Commissioners in Antigua from 2 to 5 February. The UK will be attending this meeting. We have already expressed our reservations about these proposals.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the likely impact of (a) climate change, (b) ozone depletion, (c) air pollution and (d) industrial fishing on whale populations over the next 10 years. [23400]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 19 January 1998]: The IWC's Scientific Committee has established a Standing Working Group on Environmental Concerns which has identified eight topics of particular importance to its work on effects of environmental change on cetaceans: climate/environmental change; ozone depletion and UV-B radiation; chemical pollution; impact of noise; physical and biological habitat degradation; effects of fisheries; Arctic issues; disease and mortality events. At its latest annual meeting the IWC endorsed the work of the Scientific Committee and the Standing Working Group and asked those bodies to produce detailed scientific proposals for future work on environmental concerns on a multi-annual basis. The UK has played a leading role in encouraging the IWC and the Scientific Committee to examine the effect of environmental factors on cetaceans, and will continue to be actively involved in this work.

Pigs

Mr. Thompson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will assess the advantages of introducing a quota system for pig herds. [23843]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 19 January 1998]: No. I have no intentions of introducing a quota system for pig herds because it would not be in the interests of the pigmeat sector to do so.

Mr. Thompson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what factors underlay his Department's decision to impose a stall and tether ban on the pig industry; and what account was taken of practices in other European Union countries in formulating this policy. [23845]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 19 January 1998]: That the use of close confinement systems for pigs presents welfare problems has been recognised for a number of years. In 1991, following overwhelming parliamentary support for a Private Member's Bill introduced by the hon. Member for Boston and Skegness (Sir R. Body), the then Government made Regulations banning these systems from 1 Janaury 1999. It is our intention to seek at least equivalent standards in the forthcoming review of the EU Directive on pig welfare.

Mr. Thompson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has evaluated into injuries arising from the loose housing of pigs. [23844]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 19 January 1998]: The Department funds a substantial programme of research and development on pig welfare. This covers a wide range of issues including the avoidance of aggression, and resultant injuries, in various dry sow group housing systems.

Agricultural Workers

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many agricultural workers are currently covered by the provisions of the Agricultural Wages Order; how many of these he estimates have a disability; and how many incapacity permits under the Order are currently in force. [23739]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 19 January 1998]: It is estimated that at June 1997 some 170,000 workers were covered by the provisions of the Agricultural Wages Order in England and Wales. It is not known how many have a disability.

The Agricultural Wages Act 1948 does not define disability but defines an incapacitated worker as a person who "is so affected by any physical injury or mental deficiency, or any infirmity due to age or to any other cause, that he is incapable of earning that [the agricultural minimum] rate".

At 31 December 1996, 102 permits issued to incapacitated agricultural workers were in force in England and Wales.

Factortame Judgment

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the names of the persons who are entitled to receive compensation from Her Majesty's Government as a result of the Factortame judgment, with the amounts of the entitlement in each case and the likely date of payment. [23603]

Mr. Morley: The Divisional Court ruled in July 1997 that the Government were in principle liable to pay damages to the applicants in the Factortame litigation. The Government are appealing against that judgment, and the appeal is due to be heard in March. No detailed claims for damages have yet been received.

HEALTH

Nursing and Midwifery

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 12 December 1997, Official Report, column 735, (1) what Students' Union facilities will be made available in Portsmouth to students on courses administered by Southampton and Bournemouth universities under the new contract; [22908]

(2) if the provision of Students' Union facilities were part of the contract specification for pre-registration nursing and midwifery education; what were the minimum standard set; and how they are to be met by the new contract. [22909]

Mr. Milburn: The provision of Students' Union facilities has never been included in contract specifications for pre-registration nursing and midwifery education in the Portsmouth area. Arrangements for the provision of these facilities are a matter for the educational institutions concerned and the local branch of the National Union of Students, which is independent of the University.

Dentistry

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health from what budget the £9 million initiative for National Health Service dentistry is being funded. [22993]

Mr. Milburn: Funding for the Investing in Dentistry initiative has been added to the overall financial provision for the General Dental Services.

Hip Replacements

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the maximum waiting time for hip replacements in the Somerset Health Authority area. [23527]

Mr. Milburn: Information from Somerset Health Authority indicates that the maximum waiting times for hip replacement operations at the main hospitals in the Somerset Health Authority area are 10 months at Taunton and Somerset Hospital and 12 months at Yeovil District Hospital.

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average maximum waiting time for hip replacements on the NHS in England and Wales. [23528]

Mr. Milburn: Information on current maximum waiting times for hip replacement operations for all health authorities in England is not available centrally.

Questions relating to Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many powered indoor-outdoor wheelchairs have been provided since April 1996. [23329]

Mr. Boateng: Health authorities have reported that 1,276 powered indoor/outdoor wheelchairs were issued between April 1996 and March 1997; and a further 2,179 were reported to have been issued between April 1997 and September 1997.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much funding has been distributed to health authorities in respect of the powered indoor/outdoor wheelchair scheme since April 1996. [23330]

Mr. Boateng: Health authorities received £6 million in respect of the powered indoor/outdoor wheelchair scheme in 1996–97; and will receive £7 million in 1997–98, £8 million in 1998–99 and £6 million in 1999–2000.

Mental Health Action Zones

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to create mental health action zones; and if he will make a statement. [23474]

Mr. Boateng: In our guidance on Health Action Zones (HAZs), we stated that HAZs may wish to include a focus on one or more client groups including people with mental health problems. We anticipate that this will be a feature in some of the bids for HAZ status due in by 23 January.

Poor People

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will carry out an assessment of the impact of his Department's current policies on the (a) income, (b) employment opportunities and (c) living standards, of the poorest 30 per cent. of the population. [23335]

Ms Jowell: We have asked the former Chief Medical Officer, Sir Donald Acheson, to carry out an independent inquiry into inequalities in health. His remit is to review the latest information on inequalities and thus identify priority areas for future policy development. His report will be published later this year and will be used to develop the White Paper on the Government's new health strategy, alongside the responses to public consultation on the Green Paper "Our Healthier Nation", which we expect to publish soon.

We envisage that action to reduce inequalities in health will be developed through the establishment of health action zones, healthy living centres and health improvement programmes, as well as by other means.

Utting Report

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Health when the Government will publish their response to the Utting Report; and if he will make a statement. [23371]

Mr. Boateng: A Ministerial Task Force is being established to address the recommendations in Sir William Utting's report "People Like Us". We shall announce the terms of reference and membership of the Task Force shortly. The first job of the Task Force will be to prepare the full Government response to Sir William's report.

Electromagnetic Fields

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the current research into the health risks of electromagnetic fields created by overhead electricity lines or electricity sub-stations. [23912]

Ms Jowell: The Department obtains advice on the health implications of exposure to electromagnetic fields from the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) and other sources including its own funded research. The primary focus of concern has been on power lines and childhood cancer where the results have not shown a proven link. The NRPB's Advisory Group on Non-ionising Radiation conducted an extensive review of the subject in 1992 and concluded that there was no firm evidence of a carcinogenic hazard from exposure that might be associated with residence near major sources of electricity supply, the use of electrical appliances or work in the electrical, electronic and telecommunication industries. The Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment has endorsed the Advisory Group's report. A supplementary report in 1994 was published by the NRPB to take into account the results of epidemiological studies from Scandinavia, France and Canada. Copies of the Advisory Group's report and the supplementary documents are available in the Library.

Several epidemiological studies are currently under way to investigate childhood cancer in relation to various possible causes including electromagnetic fields. The largest study of this type in this country is the United Kingdom Childhood Cancer Study which is funded in part by the Department with technical support provided by the NRPB. The Department is also funding two pilot studies, one of adults and one of children, looking at cancer incidence near power lines.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when Kent County Council may expect reimbursement for sums paid to asylum seekers; and if he will make a statement. [23774]

Mr. Boateng: We expect to lay Special Grant Reports before the House at the end of this month and will hope to receive approval by the end of February. Local authorities will be invited to make claims for grants by the end of February and, provided that approval is given, payments should be made before the end of this financial year.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total sum paid through East Kent Social Services to asylum seekers resident in the (a) Thanet travel-to-work area and (b) Dover travel-to-work area since 1 December 1997. [23772]

Mr. Boateng: It is not possible to give these details as the Department will not know the number of asylum seekers receiving support, or the total expenditure, until claims for grants are received from authorities. Local authorities are not required to supply a breakdown of expenditure by area so, even once claims for grants are received from Kent County Council, it will not be possible to supply the breakdown requested.

Cannabis

Mr. Fabian Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the legalisation of the use of cannabis for therapeutic purposes. [21753]

Mr. Boateng: Since 1 September 1997, the Department of Health has received representations from members of the Alliance for Cannabis Therapeutics, 28 Private Office cases from Members of Parliament and 38 Treat Official correspondence from members of the public and voluntary organisations. The British Medical Association has also presented its report on the therapeutic uses of cannabis to the Government.

Breast Cancer Screening

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will establish an inquiry into breast cancer screening in the South Humber Health Authority area, following the recent recall of women who have been screened. [24107]

Mr. Boateng: Problems with the quality of a small number of mammograms taken on one machine in Humberside were identified quickly by the regional quality assurance programme. In the light of this, the trust, local health authorities and regional office took swift action in ordering a re-reading exercise of 15,000 mammograms. A number of women have now been called for another mammogram as a precautionary measure, and they should have their results within two weeks. The machine used to take the initial mammograms is being replaced and is no longer in use.

We are pleased that the regional office, the local health authorities and the trust concerned have acted quickly to minimise distress to the women involved. We are also pleased that the quality assurance system in place in Humberside did its job properly in identifying the problem promptly, enabling rapid action to be taken to put it right.

We do not plan to instigate an investigation. A review of the performance of all breast screening programmes is currently under way in response to the results of investigations into the breast screening service in Exeter and arrangements for quality assurance for the breast screening service as a whole. These reviews will be completed by the end of this month, and, where necessary, action plans to improve the quality and dependability of the service will be agreed by the end of February.

Vitamin B6

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been identified as suffering from excess vitamin B6 in the last 10 years. [24308]

Ms Jowell: We do not formally collect information on people exposed to excess vitamin B6.

Junior Hospital Doctors

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the lowest annual salaries for junior hospital doctors. [24252]

Mr. Milburn: The annual salary for doctors in training comprises a basic rate of pay plus additional duty hours, paid at the rates appropriate to their contracted working pattern. The rates listed show the minimum rates of pay (as of 1 December 1997) for a junior doctor with no additional duty hours and then the minimum salary rate plus the normal number of additional duty hours (ADH) for an on-call rota:

£ per annum

	Minimum salary	Minimum salary plus ADH—on-call rota
House Officer	15,440	21,613
Senior House Officer	19,260	26,964
Specialist Registrar	21,530	30,142
Senior Registrar	24,800	34,717

Scottish Executive

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Scotland to produce a concordat setting out arrangements for relations between his Department and the Scottish Executive after the establishment of a Scottish Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [23547]

Ms Jowell: Officials from the Scottish Office and the Department of Health are discussing the need for a non-statutory agreement covering the exchange of information, advance notification and joint working in line with the principles set out in the White Paper "Scotland's Parliament."

SOCIAL SECURITY

Claimant Statistics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each non-means-tested benefit (a) the number of people currently receiving the benefit and (b) if it is taken into account for claims for (i) income support, (ii) housing benefit, (iii) council tax benefit and (iv) assessment of tax; and if he will indicate the date from which each benefit was taken into account in respect of (i) to (iv). [22082]

Mr. Denham: Information about the number of recipients of non-means-tested benefits is in the table.

Benefit	Total recipients
Attendance Allowance[1]	1,199,000
Disability Living Allowance[1]	1,924,000
Invalid Care Allowance[2]	371,000
War Disablement Pension[3]	262,305
War Widow's Pension[3]	58,364
Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit[4]	244,798
Incapacity Benefit[5]	1,718,400
Severe Disablement Allowance[5]	368,560
Retirement Pension[6]	10,709,300
Widow's benefit[6]	283,600
Child Benefit[7]	6,954,575
Child Benefit (lone parent)[7]	1,049,325
Guardian's Allowance[8]	2,206
Child's Special Allowance[8]	38
Jobseeker's Allowance (contribution-based)[9]	251,000
Statutory Maternity Pay[10]	90,000
Statutory Sick Pay[10]	305,000
Maternity Allowance[11]	11,860

[1] Source is 5 per cent. data and figures relate to 31 August 1997.
[2] Source is 100 per cent. data and figures relate to 1 October 1997.
[3] Source is 100 per cent. data as at November 1997.
[4] Figures are based on a 10 per cent. sample and include a rating factor for late returns. Figures are at 30 March 1996.
[5] Figures are taken for a 5 per cent. sample and exclude a small number of cases held clerically. Figures are at 31 August 1997.
[6] Figures are based on a 5 per cent. sample as at 30 November 1997.
[7] Figures are based on a 4 per cent. sample as at 3 December 1997.
[8] As at 31 December 1996, figures are based on a 100 per cent. count.
[9] As at February 1997 from a 5 per cent. sample. This excludes cases with underlying entitlement who receive income-based Jobseeker's Allowance.
[10] Figures are not available as this information is not collected for Statutory Maternity Pay or Statutory Sick Pay.
[11] Figures as at 31 May 1997.

Income Support and Housing Benefit were introduced in 1988 and Council Tax Benefit from 1992. Assessment of entitlement to these benefits has always taken account of non-income-related benefits, with the exception of Attendance Allowance and Disability Living Allowance[1]. In addition, £10 week of a War Disablement Pension or War Widow's Pension[2] is disregarded. Certain other allowances paid with the War Pension may also be disregarded—for example, those based on the need for care or mobility and the supplementary pension payable to those widows of members of the Armed Forces whose service ended before 31 March 1973. Guardian's Allowance is fully disregarded in Council Tax Benefit and Housing Benefit.

The following only non-income-related benefits are taxable. These benefits, with the year of their introduction, are Incapacity Benefit (after 28 weeks) (1995), Invalid Care Allowance (1976), Jobseeker's Allowance (contribution-based) (1996), Retirement Pension (1948), Statutory Sick Pay (1983), Statutory Maternity Pay (1987), and Widow's Benefit (1988).

Note:

[1] The position with regard to Attendance Allowance (AA) and Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and Income Support is slightly more complex. A person in receipt of Income Support with preserved rights in a residential care home will have their AA or DLA care component fully taken into account when assessing their Income Support.

[2] When calculating entitlement to Housing Benefit or Council Tax Benefit local authorities have discretionary power to operate a local scheme which enables them to disregard, in total or part, any war disablement or war widows pension not subject to the mandatory disregards.

Asbestos-related Disease

Dan Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations she has received on protection for asbestos-related disease sufferers, aside from mesothelioma victims, in relation to the provisions of the Social Security Bill in respect of the backdating of claims to one month. [22691]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We have received a number of representations about the proposed changes to the backdating rules in the Social Security Bill regarding claims to benefit from asbestos related disease suffers. Representations include those from TUC, Occupational and Environmental Diseases Association, a number of MPs and other individuals.

Supported Housing

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she expects the review of funding for supported housing to be complete; if she will estimate (a) the total numbers of those dependent on the housing costs which form part of the review in each region and nation and (b) the percentage of those who are over pensionable age; and if she will make a statement. [23648]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the form requested. We hope to have more information about the numbers of benefit recipients in supported accommodation from research which is currently under way.

We have recently sought stakeholders' views on the best means of translating our objectives for the long-term funding of supported accommodation into a modern, practical and sustainable funding system. Over 200 responses were received which are being considered. We are looking to implement a sustainable funding system as a matter of urgency although I cannot, at this time, say when the review will be complete.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the estimated cost to the Exchequer, in a full year, of extending the payment of invalid care allowance to all carers for eight weeks after the death of the person cared for in line with the eight week extension of carers' premium paid under similar circumstances to those in receipt of income support. [23555]

Mr. Denham: The estimated programme cost of such a measure is £5 million.

Source:

Invalid Care Allowance (ICA) Unit Quarterly Statistics; DSS ICA cessation forecasts.

Note:

Costs are net of impact of income-related benefits in payment but assume no change in the income-related benefit rule whereby the carer premium can continue for a further eight weeks after ICA ceases.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will require payments to asylum seekers to be made through benefit offices rather than through social services offices. [23773]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Those asylum seekers who are eligible to claim Income Support, Jobseeker's Allowance (Income Based), Housing Benefit and Council Tax, are paid through the Benefits Agency's network of local offices and through local authorities.

The Courts have ruled that local authority social services departments have a duty to support and accommodate destitute asylum seekers under the National Assistance Act 1948. Decisions about the provision of personal social services are the responsibility of local authority social services departments.

We are committed to reviewing all aspects of arrangements for asylum seekers, including the provision of accommodation and support. The review will set the direction for the future. In the meantime, the current mix of social security benefits and social services support will continue to ensure that no asylum seeker needs to be left destitute.

Under-Secretary of State for Women

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the official engagements which the Under-Secretary of State for Women has undertaken since 1 December 1997 and how many days she was in the Department between 1 December 1997 and 12 January 1998. [24255]

Ms Ruddock: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave her on 20 November 1997, Official Report, columns 292-94, and 11 December 1997, column 669 respectively.

Contract Cleaners

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what rates of pay are offered to contract cleaners in (a) South Western and (b) North Eastern DSS offices. [24411]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is commercial in confidence.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter dated 1 December 1997, concerning a constituent, reference 4/3644/15. [24110]

Mr. Denham: A reply will be sent to my hon. Friend by the end of the week, following detailed inquiries about his constituent's case.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Uganda

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what projects her Department has supported in Uganda to promote democracy. [23946]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development is supporting democracy in Uganda through a £250,000 civic and voter education project to improve Ugandans' awareness of their democratic rights and responsibilities, and to strengthen the capacity of the Ugandan Electoral Commission. A project is also under preparation which will improve the administrative capacity available to the Ugandan Parliament.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

E-mail

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what assessment he has made of the accessibility of Government Ministers and civil servants by e-mail; [23570]

(2) how many (a) Cabinet and (b) other Ministers have an e-mail address. [23567]

Dr. David Clark: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave the hon. Member for North Essex (Mr. Jenkin) on 10 November 1997, Official Report, column 441.

In addition, I would add that officials in CITU and CCTA are currently reviewing the situation in conjunction with Departments and agencies. Once this review has taken place, we will be looking at the most appropriate way of placing a comprehensive listing of ministerial e-mail addresses in the public domain.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of civil servants have an e-mail address. [23568]

Dr. David Clark: Whilst this information is not held centrally, I am pleased to report that there are nearly 2,000 departmental, agency and NDPB connections to the CCTA e-mail service, many of which act as shared e-mail addresses for teams of civil servants rather than for individual officials.

In addition, just over 4,000 civil servants currently have e-mail access to the Government Secure Intranet. On present estimates this figure is expected to rise to between 10,000 to 15,000 by mid 1998.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he proposes to increase the proportion of Ministers and civil servants who are connected to the Internet. [23569]

Dr. David Clark: This is essentially the responsibility of individual departments. However I am pleased to report that the Central IT Unit in my Department has established a Government Secure Intranet service which will increase the proportion of Ministers and civil servants who are connected to the Internet. I intend to make a further announcement of this matter in due course and I will write to my hon. Friend at that time.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crown Dependencies

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for a review of financial regulation in the Crown Dependencies. [24698]

Mr. Straw: I have today invited the Home Office and the Island Authorities to carry out a review of the financial legislation and regulatory systems in Jersey, Guernsey and the Isle of Man. The purpose of this review is to assess the contribution made by the current laws and systems to the economic and social well-being of the Islands themselves, and the United Kingdom.

The review will be conducted by Mr. Andrew Edwards, formerly of Her Majesty's Treasury, who will work alongside the Constitutional Unit of the Home Office and the Island authorities. it is expected to take about six months. Its terms of reference are:

Objective

To review with the Island authorities their laws, systems and practices for:

(i) regulating banking, insurance and financial services business and collaborating with overseas regulators;

(ii) deterring, investigating and punishing financial crime, including money laundering and fiscal offences, particularly cases with an international dimension;

(iii) registering companies;

with a view to assessing the contribution which they make to the economic and social well-being of the Islands themselves and of the United Kingdom.

Area to be Covered

The review will cover the following main areas:

(i) Financial Regulation and International Regulatory Co-operation.

Description and assessment of the current legal and institutional arrangements for licensing, supervising and regulating the full range of financial business, including banks, investment banks, other credit institutions, insurance companies, investment services companies, bureaux de change, international business companies and company registration agents and accountants and lawyers carrying on financial business (e.g., providing custody services or investment advice):

Examination of practical implementation of these activities and the resources devoted to them, in relation to the number and size of firms regulated and the nature of the business;

Arrangements for the regulatory authorities to share their own confidential information with overseas regulatory authorities, and vice versa;

Arrangements for the authorities to obtain other confidential information to assist overseas regulatory authorities with their investigations and vice versa.

(ii) Financial Crime

(a) Money Laundering

each Island's money laundering legislation:

the number of suspicious transactions reports received in each Island each year and how these are dealt with;

arrangements for collaboration between the Island Authorities and overseas authorities including the sharing of suspicious transactions reports;

(b) Criminal Investigations collaboration between the Island Authorities and overseas authorities in investigating suspected financial crime (including fiscal offences); the willingness or otherwise of the authorities to secure prosecutions;

(c) Asset Confiscation

collaboration between the Island authorities and overseas authorities in tracing, freezing or confiscating assets held by suspected or convicted criminals based overseas.

(iii) Company registrations

each Island's legislation, systems and practices for registering companies.

Consultation and Comparisons

In undertaking these tasks:

(a) to have regard to other examples of offshore regulatory laws, systems and practices, such as Gibraltar and other United Kingdom dependencies;

(b) to consult Her Majesty's Treasury and others as necessary.

Departmental Reviews

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the reviews being undertaken by his Department, the dates on which they were announced and, in the case of those which have been completed, the date of their completion. [23196]

Mr. Straw: The information requested about reviews is set out in the table:

Review	Announcement	Expected completion date
Joint review with Northern Ireland Office to consider permanent UK wide counter terrorism legislation	Autumn 1997	Autumn 1998
Review of the law relating to bribery and corruption. "Prevention of Corruption—Consolidation and Amendment of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1889—1916: A Government Statement"—issued June 1997	June 1997	Early 1998
Strategic Review of National Police Training	12 March 1997	Ongoing
Inter-Departmental Review of Police Pensions	23 October 1993	Ongoing

The Future Role and Funding of Local Civil Protection in England and Wales	24 July 1997	Ongoing

Review	Announcement	Expected completion date
Control of Unscrupulous Immigration Advisers	Manifesto Commitment	Not yet known. Consultation paper being prepared for publication in January
Review of Immigration and Asylum Appeals	Internal Review	Internal Review completed; results to be published for consultation; consultative document being prepared.

In addition, my Department is carrying out a Comprehensive Spending Review, and contributing to cross-Departmental reviews of the criminal justice system and of illegal drugs, in accordance with my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury's statement of 11 June 1997, Official Report, columns 1143–44. The statement said that these reviews were expected to take 12 months to complete. My Department is also carrying out a review of those non-Departmental Public Bodies (NDPBs) for which the Home Office is the sponsoring Department. This review is part of a Government-wide exercise which is referred to in the Government's public consultation paper "Opening Up Quangos" issued in November 1997.

High Security Prisons (Cutlery)

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in which high security prisons stainless steel cutlery is routinely supplied for the use of prisoners. [22912]

Ms Quin: None of the six dispersal prisons in England and Wales, which hold the highest security category prisoners, routinely supplies stainless steel cutlery for use of prisoners. For reasons of security, cost and hygiene, plastic cutlery is provided for inmates' use.

Human Rights Bill

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the impact of the proposals in the Human Rights Bill on (a) the Church of England and (b) the Church of Scotland. [24300]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We gave an assessment of the implications of the Bill for the Churches in the course of proceedings on the Bill at Report Stage in Another Place on 19 January.

Animal Procedures Committee

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if in respect of the Advisory Panel, which advises on appointments to the Animal Procedures Committee, he will list members' (a) names, (b) qualifications and (c) other employments; and how often the Advisory Panel meets. [24303]

Mr. George Howarth: To date, the Advisory Panel has only met to consider candidates for the post of Chairman of the Animal Procedures Committee. The members of that panel were as follows:

Miss Carolyn Sinclair—Director of the Constitutional and Community Policy Directorate in the Home Office.

Mr. William Mumford CB—Deputy Under-Secretary of State for Research Establishments, Ministry of Defence, (retired); Chairman's Panel, Civil Service Selection Board, 1989–95.

Professor Margaret Brazier LLB OBE—Chairman, Animal Procedures Committee; Professor of Law, University of Manchester.

A new panel will be convened shortly to consider candidates for appointment as members of the Committee. It is expected that the new panel will consist of the new Chairman of the Committee. Professor Michael Banner MA DPhil, Mr. William Mumford and an official from the Home Office. Professor Banner is the FD Maurice Professor of Moral and Social Theology at King's College, London.

The Advisory Panel will not meet regularly. It will meet only when new members of the Committee need to be appointed.

Street Traders and Pedlars

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he expects to announce the outcome of the review of the legislation applying to street traders and pedlars; [23769]

(2) with which bodies he has consulted on the review of the legislation applying to street traders and pedlars; and on what dates; [23771]

(3) what plans he has to review the Pedlars Act 1871. [23770]

Mr. George Howarth: Deregulation reviews of street trading legislation and the Pedlars Acts 1871 and 1881 were undertaken by the previous Government. I have not yet had an opportunity to look closely at the issues arising out of those reviews but I hope to be able to make my views known during the next few months. Copies of the consultation letters dated 1 July 1994 and 31 October 1994, together with the names of the bodies consulted, have been placed in the Library.

Handguns

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has issued a D notice in respect of moneys to be paid in compensation for the ban on full-bore handguns. [24171]

Mr. Michael: No, and no such consideration has ever been given. There has been a great deal of misinformation circulating about matters relating to the new firearms legislation and its implementation. The operation of the Compensation Scheme has always been transparent, with the terms of the Scheme itself having been subject to Parliamentary scrutiny and regular and bona fide reports on payments progress issued to the public on request and to Parliament through answers to Parliamentary Questions and letters to MPs.

Defence Advisory Notices are agreed by the Defence, Press and Broadcasting Advisory Committee. I understand that there are six standing notices, none of which has been—nor could be—applied to the Firearms Compensation Scheme.

The Defence Advisory Notice System is a means of providing advice and guidance to the media about defence and counter-terrorist information, the publication of which would be damaging to national security. The six standing notices are issued by the Defence, Press and Broadcasting Advisory Committee to editors, publishers, programme makers and officials and form the basis of the voluntary code designed to avoid the publication of detail which would damage national security. Guidance on the application of the notices to particular circumstances is given by the Secretary to the Committee.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by how many the number of asylum seekers now resident in the (a) Thanet travel-to-work area and (b) Dover travel-to-work area has changed since 1 December 1997; and what is the total number of asylum seekers now resident in each area. [23768]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret that the information requested is not available and it is not possible to calculate this information from the data held without disproportionate use of officials' time.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the risks faced by police forces if they have year 2000 problems within their business and operational processes and systems. [24381]

Mr. Michael: It is for individual chief officers of police to assess the risks for their administrative and operational functions of the Year 2000 problem. They are currently assessing the scale of the problem and taking action where appropriate, with the help of the Police Information Technology Organisation. Police forces are also pursuing Year 2000 compliance with the other bodies responsible for systems whose failure might have policing implications. If, during their audit of information technology systems, a force establishes that there is a problem which cannot be, or is unlikely to be, resolved before the millennium it will be expected to establish contingency plans to ensure the continued delivery of policing services.

Immigration

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to answer the letter of 14 July 1997 from the hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon regarding the case of Mr. Mikhail Nikoniko (Home Affairs Reference Number: 13529/97). [23491]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I wrote to the hon. Member on 15 January 1998. We had a draft of an earlier reply but I was unhappy with some of the details and asked for some further consideration and this has caused some delay.

Diarmuid O'Neill

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the forthcoming report of the Police Complaints Authority on their investigation into the circumstances surrounding the shooting of Diarmuid O'Neill. [24092]

Mr. Michael: No. The courts have ruled that investigating officers' reports, which are submitted to the Police Complaints Authority (PCA) and the appropriate disciplinary authority, are covered as a class by public interest immunity. The completed report will be sent to the Coroner for the purposes of the inquest and to the Crown Prosecution Service to consider whether there are grounds for criminal proceedings against any person. The PCA will also consider the report to decide whether any disciplinary action should be taken.

We have made it clear that we wish to increase public confidence in the complaints system by introducing more openness, and we are examining how this might best be done in the light of the recently published report by the Home Affairs Select Committee on police complaints and discipline.

Terrorists

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that the United Kingdom cannot be used as a haven for persons planning or preparing for terrorist activities in foreign countries; what plans he has to introduce legislation similar to that proposed in the Jurisdiction (Conspiracy and Incitement) Bill in the 1996–97 session of Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [23319]

Mr. Straw: Countering the activities of those who may be seeking to assist terrorism outside the United Kingdom is a high priority for the police and Security Service. If there is evidence that organisations or individuals are supporting terrorism, action is taken under the criminal law or under Immigration Act powers.

On 30 October last year, I announced the Government's intention to publish a consultation document which will propose permanent United Kingdom-wide legislation designed to deal with all forms of terrorism, including foreign terrorist groups and their supporters. The Government also intend to bring forward legislation to make it illegal to conspire in the United Kingdom to commit terrorist acts abroad.

Overseas Domestic Workers

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has held since 1 May concerning the immigration status of persons allowed into the country as personal servants of foreign residents; what recent information he has as to the possible abuse of such persons by their employers; and what plans he has to introduce steps to alter their status or otherwise increase the protections available to them. [23320]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have held several meetings with Kalayaan, the organisation which represents overseas domestic workers and which continues to report cases of abuse, and with Anti-Slavery International. We are reviewing the conditions under which overseas domestic workers accompanying employers to the United Kingdom are admitted with the aim of increasing their protection and reducing the possibilities of abuse.

Pronto Lottery

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Government's policy towards Pronto; how this relates to its policy towards gambling on fruit machines; if he will set out the reasons for the differences in policy; and if he will make a statement. [23856]

Mr. George Howarth: I set out the Government's policy towards frequent lottery draws in my reply to a Question from my hon. Friend the Member for Stretford and Urmston (Ms Hughes) on 13 November 1997, Official Report, columns 639–40.

I subsequently published a draft Bill to restrict their frequency on 7 January, inviting interested parties to comment by 30 January.

Successive large scale on-line lottery draws, running in a rapid series through the day and operating simultaneously in a large number of different outlets, would have many of the characteristics of hard gambling. It is long-standing public policy that the harder forms of gambling should be confined to premises specially licensed and appropriately controlled for that purpose. The Government do not wish to see other types of premises become significant gambling venues.

Gaming machines in pubs are restricted to £10 maximum prizes and subject to other strict statutory controls which ensure that they remain an ancillary facility there.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what factors lay behind his decision to impose restrictions on the new Pronto lottery game; and what representations he has received in respect of his decision to impose these restrictions. [23187]

Mr. George Howarth: I set out the Government's policy towards frequent on-line lottery draws in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Stretford and Urmston (Ms Hughes) on 13 November 1997, Official Report, columns 369–40.

I subsequently published a draft Bill to restrict their frequency on 7 January, inviting interested parties to comment by 30 January.

I will report the outcome of the consultation exercise after the responses have been received and evaluated.

Scottish Executive

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Scotland to produce a concordat setting out arrangements for relations between his Department and the Scottish Executive after the establishment of a Scottish Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [23551]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend has had no such discussions, but I expect that they may take place in due course between the Home Office and Scottish Office on the need for a non-statutory agreement with the Scottish Executive.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what specific improvements for the public will be forthcoming following the loss of 1,200 jobs at the Immigration and Nationality Directorate and the introduction of a new computer system, with special reference to the length of time taken to deal with applications and inquiries; and if he will make a statement. [23916]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Over time, the Immigration and Nationality Directorate's customers will benefit from a faster and more consistent response to both applications and inquiries. The actual levels of services which will be provided in any year will depend on the available resources and demand. The implementation timetable for the new system, casework performance targets, staffing levels and the number of job reductions for 1998–99 have not been finalised.

Cannabis

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions for possession of cannabis there were in each year since 1971. [24041]

Mr. George Howarth: Information for 1986 and 1995 (the latest available) is given in the table. Data are not available in the form requested prior to 1986.

Number of prosecutions for possession of cannabis, United Kingdom, 1986–1995

Year	Number of prosecutions
1986	11,493
1987	11,878
1988	14,049
1989	17,654
1990	19,281
1991	18,470
1992	14,875
1993	18,846
1994	24,025
1995	24,386

Prison Sites

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many sites in the North-West region were considered as possible sites for prison building prior to the selection of a site at Winwick; and what discussions were held with Warrington Borough Council and other local authorities prior to the selection of this site. [23316]

Ms Quin [holding answer 16 January 1998]: As part of a national review, 81 sites have been assessed in the North- West. There were no discussions with Warrington Borough Council prior to the selection of Winwick Hospital as a possible site for the construction of a new prison.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are currently used by the Prison Service to decide between various possible sites for prison development; and what plans he has to change those criteria. [23315]

Ms Quin [holding answer 16 January 1998]: New prisons must be located conveniently for the centres of population or regional catchment areas that they will be required to serve. A site's shape, size, topography and the availability of services must support an economic and practical development. The ownership and availability of land are key factors in choosing a potential site. Crown-owned land is considered along with commercially available sites. There are no plans to change these criteria.

Prison Places

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of prison places likely to be required over the next 10 years for people from (a) Warrington, (b) the North-West, (c) Manchester and (d) Liverpool. [23317]

Ms Quin [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The Prison Service's current practice is to forecast eight years in advance. The figures that follow are therefore forecast for eight years and not 10 years. The number of prison places forecast for males in 2005 is: 380 from Warrington, 12,700 from the North-West; 2,700 from Manchester; and 1,620 from Liverpool. The estimated figures are only for the male population as the female population is too small to project in a regional local way as requested.

Mobile Phones

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what controls exist over the holding and supply of data by mobile phone companies of information pinpointing the locations from which calls are made from individually identifiable mobile phones. [23619]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 19 January 1998]: The circumstances under which the four mobile telephone operators may disclose personal information which they hold on computer for their own purposes (including for billing, fraud prevention and statistical analysis) are regulated by the Data Protection Act 1984, by the Telecommunications Act 1984, and by the terms of their Telecommunications Act Licences which require them to take all reasonable steps to ensure the confidentiality of consumer information.

Section 45 of the Telecommunications Act, as amended by the Interception of Communications Act 1985, provides that public telecommunications operators commit an offence if they disclose any information concerning the use made of their telecommunications services by any other person except where disclosures are made for the prevention or detection of crime, for the purpose of any criminal proceedings, in the interests of national security or in pursuance of the order of a court. It is for the individual operator to satisfy himself that one or more of those exceptions apply before releasing any such information.

European Parliamentary Elections

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his oral statement of 25 November 1997, Official Report, columns 812–13, whether he will publish the calculations on which his statement, regarding the proportionality of the Sainte-Lague and d'Hondt divisors, was based; if he will calculate the number of seats that would be won by each party in Scotland under the (a) d'Hondt and (b) Sainte-Lague divisors using the 1994 European Election results; and if he will make a statement. [23498]

Mr. George Howarth: The calculations were based on the votes cast in the 1994 elections to the European Parliament in six of the 11 regions for which the European Parliamentary Elections Bill provides.

In five of the six regions the choice of divisor made no difference to the final allocation of seats. In Scotland, the effect was as follows:

d'Hondt:
4 Labour, 1 Conservative,
3 Scottish National Party
Sainte-Lague:
3 Labour, 1 Conservative,
1 Scottish Liberal Democrat
3 Scottish National Party.

During the Bill's Second Reading debate, I gave the House figures which suggested that the two divisors produced different results in the London region.

Revised calculations show that both divisors produce the same result in London. I apologise for the original error.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what divisors were used to calculate the allocation of seats between the regions of England in the European Parliamentary Elections Bill. [24043]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 19 January 1998]: No divisors were used. The allocation of seats to the English regions set out in Schedule 1 to the European Parliamentary Elections Bill was arrived at by dividing the total English electorate by the number of English seats (71) to produce an average figure. Seats were then allocated to regions in such a way as to ensure that the sum of the divergencies from this figure was as low as possible.

Gurkha Wives

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the outcome of the review into the position of Gurkha wives seeking to join their husbands when stationed in the United Kingdom. [23510]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As a concession outside the Immigration Rules, the spouse (together with any dependent children under the age of 18) of a Gurkha serviceman stationed in the United Kingdom would normally be admitted to the United Kingdom and allowed to remain here for the duration of her husband's posting.

Metropolitan Police

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the estimated cost to the Metropolitan Police of its work in combating terrorism in each of the last three years. [23509]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that, for reasons of security, it is the policy of the Metropolitan Police not to publish the costs of combating terrorism. All Metropolitan Police officers have a part to play in combating terrorism.

The Metropolitan Police receive a special payment in recognition of the fact that they incur costs relating to their national and capital city functions. The report of the recent "Review of the Special Payment to the Metropolitan Police Service", conducted by the Home Office, identifies the current costs of the national and capital city functions of the Metropolitan Police, including some anti-terrorist costs. A copy of this report is available in the Library.

Emergency Services

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many uniformed police officers were on patrol and how many vehicles were in service in a 24 hour period in (a) London and (b) Twickenham at (i) the latest date for which figures are available and (ii) the same date in the previous year. [23506]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis has provided the following information:

Uniform constables performing street duty

	Twickenham	Metropolitan Police Service
Average per day in September 1997	56.5	[1]4,155.0
Average per day in September 1996	57.1	[1]4,306.9

[1] As a result of problems with the Met's computer system these figures do not include the following Divisions: Brixton, Chingford, Forest Gate, Hackney and Shoreditch and Golders Green.

Number of available vehicles

	Twickenham	Metropolitan Police Service
Average per day in January 1998	21.4	3,734
Average per day in January 1997	21.0	3,760

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fire-fighting appliances are currently on operational duty in London; and how many there were for each of the last five years. [23507]

Mr. George Howarth: I understand from the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority that there are currently 177 pumping appliances and 46 special appliances operational in London. The figures for the last five years are:

	Pumping appliances	Special appliances
1 January 1993	189	51
1 January 1994	189	43
1 January 1995	189	43
1 January 1996	189	43
1 January 1997	177	48

Prisoners (Health Care)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison establishments in England and Wales have a formal policy which states that the seclusion of mentally ill patients within the health care centre should be governed by guidance in the Code of Practice for Mental Health of 1983. [23854]

Ms Quin [holding answer 19 January 1998]: The seclusion of mentally disordered prisoners in health care centres is governed principally by guidelines issued to all establishments by the then Director of Prison Medical Services in Janaury 1990. Additional guidance, elaborating on those guidelines, has been issued subsequently.

Prison health care centres are not hospitals for the purposes of the Mental Health Act 1983. The care of mentally disordered prisoners in them is not directly governed by provisions in that Act, or guidance in the Code of Practice issued under it. Copies of the Code of Practice have, however, been issued for the information and consideration of prison doctors.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of prison establishments in England and Wales have produced a health care plan for prisoners setting out the aims and objectives of the Prison Health Service. [23853]

Ms Quin [holding answer 19 January 1998]: The aims and objectives of health care in prisons are set out in centrally published Health Care Standards which apply to all establishments. Many establishments reflect these aims and objectives and philosophy of care in patient information literature or other local plans. However, statistics are not available centrally about the proportion that do this.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce a patient's charter in respect of the provision of health care within the Prison Service. [23852]

Ms Quin [holding answer 19 Janaury 1998]: The provision of health care in prisons is governed by published standards. There is no national charter although some prisons have locally produced charters.

The Prison Service and the National Health Service (NHS) have established a joint working group to advise Ministers on the options for the future organisation of prison health care with a view to achieving standards and practices comparable to those in the NHS. The issue of a patient's charter for prisoners will be among the options the group will be considering.

Assaults

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that individuals reported to have assaulted their wives or partners should be automatically referred to the Police for investigation and possible prosecution. [23000]

Mr. Michael: Victims are urged to report crimes to the police. In respect of crimes not reported by the victim, the decision on whether to commence, or consider commencing, an investigation into the alleged criminal offence is an operational matter for the chief officer in whose force area such a breach of the law is alleged to have been committed.

Licensing Controls

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to relax licensing controls in central city areas; and what consultation he has had with residents of such areas. [23664]

Mr. George Howarth: We have no plans for such changes. Any proposals to amend the licensing laws would require wide consultation.

Security Service Files

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if files held by the Security Service showing the involvement of individuals with the Soviet International propaganda front network will be preserved for their historic value; and if the subsequent political careers of those individuals will be a factor in assessing the historic value of their files; [23673]

(2) if Security Service files on (a) the 1926 General Strike and (b) the 1984–85 miners' strike are to be preserved for their historic value; [23622]

(3) if files compiled by the Security Service and setting out the extent to which individuals co-operated with domestic or foreign fascist or communist organisations or regimes are to be preserved for their historic value; [23674]

(4) if Security Service files on the activities in the United Kingdom of (a) the World Peace Council, (b) the World Federation of Trade Unions, (c) the World Federation of Scientific Workers, (d) the World Federation of Democratic Youth, (e) the International Association of Democratic Lawyers, (f) the International Organisation of Journalists, (g) the International Union of Students and (h) the Women's International Democratic Federation are to be destroyed; [23677]

(5) if the Security Service files which are planned to be destroyed will be individually evaluated for their historical significance; [23679]

(6) what are the criteria for deciding that a Security Service file is of no historical value and should be destroyed; [23680]

(7) if the possible re-emergence of anti-democratic regimes abroad has been assessed as a factor in determining the policy towards destroying Security Service files on previous British supporters of such regimes; [23678]

(8) if Security Service files on the activities of (a) the British Union of Fascists, (b) the Communist Party of Great Britain, (c) the Union Movement, (d) the Communist Party of Britain, (e) the Revolutionary Socialist League/Militant Tendency, (f) the British Peace Assembly, (g) the British-Soviet Friendship Society, (h) the British Peace Committee, (i) the Workers' Revolutionary Party, (j) Class War and (k) the Revolutionary Communist Party of Britain (Marxist–Leninist) will be preserved for their historic value. [23676]

Mr. Straw: The Security Service retains only those records which it needs to carry out its functions or which are of historical importance. It is a matter for the Director General to decide upon the detailed criteria to be adopted in either case, taking account of the requirements of the Security Service Act 1989, the Public Records Act 1958 and central guidance on the identification of records likely to be of historical interest. The Service currently applies the following criteria in deciding whether a record is likely to be of historical interest, although each file is examined individually and considered on its merits as a whole:

(a) major investigations,

(b) important subversive figures, terrorists and spies,

(c) individuals involved in important historical events,

(d) causes celebres in a security context,

(e) files which contain original papers of historical interest,

(f) major changes of Service policy, organisation or procedures,

(g) files which are in some way "period pieces", e.g. they illustrate clearly Security Service attitudes/technique of the time.

(h) milestones in the Service's history.

It would be contrary to the interests of national security to confirm or deny whether the Security Service holds records on any particular individuals or organisations.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his letter of 8 December on Security Service files, what steps he will take to ensure that (a) no files are destroyed by the Security Service except after proper review and (b) files which are destroyed are those which are either no longer required by the service to carry out its statutory functions or are judged not to be of historical importance or both. [23675]

Mr. Straw: The Security Service Act 1989 provides that the operations of the Service are under the control of the Director General and it is a matter for him to decide which files should be destroyed in accordance with stated policy. I have every confidence that he will continue to carry out his responsibilities in this area with due regard to the operational needs of the Service and the requirements of the Public Records Act 1958, taking account of any central guidance on the preservation of records of likely historical interest.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the criteria which were adopted by the Security Service at the end of the Second World War for the preservation or destruction of files relating to sympathisers with the defeated adversary. [23620]

Mr. Straw: In November 1945, the Director General of the Security Service ordered a review of the Service's records to identify which could be summarised or destroyed. He set down the following principles to guide officers in the review process:

"(a) There is a paramount necessity to restrict the records of the Service to matters which are now its proper concern. Superfluous information impedes work rather than assists it. The test is whether or not the matter recorded would have any value if brought forward at a later date and if considered in a different context.

(b) In reviewing papers for destruction, due regard should also be given to the necessity for preserving information of historical interest, and also that which may be of value in a future emergency as showing how matters of policy and principle were decided. This applies also to methods of inquiry adopted in specific cases or classes of cases. The possible interest of Divisions and Sections not primarily concerned with a particular file must always be borne in mind".

Crime Statistics (Collection)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for ensuring that crime statistics are collected on a common basis by all police forces. [23457]

Mr. Michael: Statistics of recorded crime are based on rules for classification and counting which are standard for all police forces in England and Wales. A comprehensive set of counting rules is issued centrally and used by police forces to maintain the consistency of recording some of the more complex and potentially difficult offences, such as multiple, continuous and repeated offences.

Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary (HMIC) regularly look into recording practices during force inspections. The Home Office also has a police statistics liaison officer who regularly visits statistics officers in the forces to discuss current issues and to monitor current procedures.

Periodically, the Home Office rules and police recording practices are reviewed to ensure consistency and to determine whether updates are necessary. Recently, both HMIC and a joint Home Office/Association of Chief Police Officers working party have undertaken such reviews. Their recommendations are being adopted in a package of measures for implementation on 1 April 1998, which were announced by my right hon. Friend on 1 October 1997. More detail was given by the Home Office's Director of Research and Statistics on 14 October.

The main measures comprise the logical extension of the coverage of recorded crimes (or notifiable offences) to include all indictable and triable either way offences: the revision of the counting rules for certain offences; to move closer to the concept of one crime per victim; a move to financial year publication; and less emphasis in publications on the overall total of recorded crime in favour of individual offence groups.

Commission for Racial Equality

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much Government money was spent on the Commission for Racial Equality in (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97 and what estimate he has made of the annual gross costs of enforcing the Race Relations Act 1976 in (i) 1995–96 and (ii) 1996–97. [23473]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Total Government payments to the Commission for Racial Equality were (a) £16,006,000 in 1995–96 and (b) £15,436,000 in 1996–97. The Commission estimates that approximately one quarter of this was spent on enforcing the Race Relations Act. We have no way of estimating the gross costs of enforcing the Act which would include the activities of a wide range of organisations and individuals.

Pigot Report

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Video Evidence (The Pigot Report, 1989) will be implemented in full. [23372]

Mr. Michael: The recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Video Evidence which have not been implemented are currently being considered by the Steering Group on Child Evidence as part of the review of vulnerable or intimidated witnesses which was announced by my right hon. Friend on 13 June 1997.

Young Offenders Institute (Colchester)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish his response to the report by board of visitors to the young offenders institution at the Military Corrective Training Centre at Colchester. [23302]

Ms Quin: I will respond to the Colchester Board of Visitors' annual report once we have made a final decision about the future of the establishment. Ministerial responses to the Boards of Visitors' Annual Reports, which take the form of a letter to the Chairman of the relevant Board, are not ordinarily published. However, I do encourage those Boards who place their annual reports on to the Penal Lexicon similarly to place my response.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future of the young offenders institution at the Military Corrective Training Centre at Colchester. [23301]

Ms Quin: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) on 15 January 1998, Official Report, column 284.

Prison Site (Colchester)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to make a decision on the possible establishment of a prison at Colchester; and if he will name the site which has been under investigation. [23300]

Ms Quin: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 14 November 1997, Official Report, column 689.

If the Prison Service assessment indicates that the site involved offers potential, I shall write to the hon. Member.

Police (Complaints)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of complaints against the police have been (i) upheld (ii) dismissed and (iii) dropped by the complainant during the last year for which figures are available. [23536]

Mr. Michael: The proportion of completed complaints against the police which were upheld (substantiated) was 2 per cent. in the twelve months from April 1996 to March 1997. Twenty seven per cent. of complaints were investigated but found to be unsubstantiated, 32 per cent. were informally resolved and 39 per cent. were either withdrawn or granted a dispensation by the Police Complaints Authority.

Sunday Observance Act

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reform the Sunday Observance Act 1780; and if he will make a statement. [23471]

Mr. George Howarth: I am considering proposals from the entertainments industry to remove the prohibition in the Sunday Observance Act 1780 on charging for admission to public dances which are held on a Sunday.

Lewes Prison

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in respect of Lewes Prison, if he will list for each year from 1985 to 1997 inclusive (a) the budget available to the prison, (b) the (i) average and (ii) maximum number of prisoners, (c) the number of suicides reported and (d) the number of prison officers deployed on average; and if he will make a statement. [23727]

Ms Quin [holding answer 19 January 1998]: The management structure and retention of records have changed significantly over the past seven financial years and it is not possible to provide, without incurring disproportionate cost, the budget allocations prior to 1990–91. Table A details the allocations made to Lewes prison between 1990–91 and 1997–98.

The figures reflect the closure of wings for refurbishment in 1991–92 until the reopening of C and G wings in March 1997. The other critical factor affecting budget allocations is the increasing devolvement of cash allocations for operational requirements to local level from 1992–93 onwards. In view of this, it is difficult to draw comparisons between the different financial years.

It is not possible to provide the actual maximum number of prisoners held at Lewes between 1985 to date, but the operational capacity, which is the nominal maximum number, is shown in table B.

The term employed by the Prison Service to refer to an apparent suicide is self-inflicted death. This includes all those deaths where it is clear that the person has acted specifically to take his/her own life. Between 1985 and 1997, there have been a total of 10 self-inflicted deaths at Lewes. The details are as follows:

1986

One death—inquest verdict: accidental death

1989

One death—inquest verdict: suicide

1990

Two deaths—inquest verdicts: suicide and accidental death

1992

One death—inquest verdict: misadventure

1993

One death—inquest verdict: suicide

1995

One death—inquest verdict: suicide

1996

One death—inquest verdict: open

1997

Two deaths—inquest verdicts: suicide and accidental death.

Statistical data relating to the numbers of prison officers employed at Lewes between 1985 and August 1990 are not available. Table C details the information which is available from September 1990 to date.

Table A: Budget allocations for Her Majesty's Prison Lewes

1990–91 to 1997–98 — £ million

Financial years	Running cost budget allocation
1990–91	6,310,000
1991–92	3,763,000
1992–93	6,794,000
1993–94	8,320,000
1994–95	8,918,000
1995–96	8,870,000
1996–97	8,942,000
1997–98	9,192,000

1995+	306	325
1996+	303	334
January 1997 to November 1997 only[2]	447	496

[1] Given that operational capacities are always under review, these figures are an estimate.

[2] The decrease in the number of prisoners held at Lewes is because of the rolling programme of wing refurbishment.

Table C: Average number of prison officers at Her Majesty's Prison Lewes

1990–91 to 1997–98

Financial year	Average number of prison officers
September 1990 to March 1991	171
1991–92	176
1992–93	176
1993–94	170
1994–95	167
1995–96	170
1996–97	167
1997–98	162

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what budget he plans for Lewes prison for the forthcoming year; and what estimate he has made of the maximum number of prisoners that will be held in Lewes over that period. [23728]

Ms Quin [holding answer 19 January 1998]: The budget allocation of 1998–99 has not yet been decided for Lewes. The Governor was given an indicative budget allocation of £8,631,000 and £8,470,000 for 1998–99 and 1999–2000 in June last year and has made plans to operate the prison within this cash limit. He has also bid for additional funds to preserve some regime services. The outcome of these bids will be known later this month.

The Operational Capacity for Lewes prison is 496 and the Governor has based his planning assumptions on a 98 per cent. occupancy, a daily average population of 486 prisoners.

Internal Police Investigations

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will repeal those sections of the Local Government Act 1992 which prevent the publication of internal discipline investigations by individual police forces; [23412]

(2) what plans he has to make public reports relating to investigations into the sexual harassment of women police officers at Harrogate Police Station in the early 1990s; [23362]

(3) what plans he has to introduce legislation to ensure that internal police disciplinary investigations are not automatically subject to public interest immunity; [23364]

(4) what plans he has to allow individual police authorities to decide whether to publish the finding of internal discipline investigations within individual police forces. [23363]

Mr. Michael: None of the information relating to internal police investigations is held by my right hon. Friend and its disclosure is therefore a matter not for him but for the police authority or the chief constable.

Public interest immunity arises only in the context of court proceedings. It does not arise as of right but requires there to be both a risk of harm if disclosure did take place and a balance between the risk of harm and the interests of justice. So far, the courts have accepted that the risk of harm in disclosing public investigation reports justifies their non-disclosure but the matter has to be considered in the context of each case.

The publication of information under the Local Government Act 1992 relates to information on standards of performance. The Local Government Act 1972 gives the public a right to certain information, including information about meetings held by the police authority. It is not a free standing right to inspect documents held by the authority. Where information does fall to be disclosed under the 1972 Act, there are exemptions which prevent disclosure about certain matters which includes information about particular employees/office holders.

The Government are considering extending the range of information available to the public. Their proposals were set out in the White Paper "Your Right to Know" which was issued for consultation on 11 December 1997.

We have made it clear that we wish to increase public confidence in the complaints and discipline system and we will consider how this might be done in the light of the report published last week by the Home Affairs Select Committee.

CABINET OFFICE

New Millennium Experience Company

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what severance pay has been given to Mr. Stephen Bayley, former Creative Director of the New Millennium Experience Company. [23926]

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what severance pay has been granted to the former Creative Director of the New Millennium Experience Company. [23921]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) does not propose to make any severance payment to Stephen Bayley, the former creative consultant to the Company.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he plans to advertise for a replacement to the position of Creative Director of the New Millennium Exhibition Company. [23227]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company have no plan to replace Stephen Bayley as creative consultant to the Company.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will make a statement on the circumstances surrounding the resignation of the Creative Director of the New Millennium Exhibition Company. [23228]

Mr. Mandelson: Mr. Bayley and the New Millennium Experience Company jointly announced on Friday 9 January that the basis of Mr. Bayley's association with the project had been changed by mutual agreement.

Mr. Bayley's former role was to advise the New Millennium Experience Company on aspects of the content of the exhibition. The intention was that he would continue to advise the Company on an ad-hoc basis.

In the light of Mr. Bayley's subsequent comments, the New Millennium Experience Company will not be asking him to undertake any further work.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what is the date of the official launch of the New Millennium Exhibition Company. [23225]

Mr. Mandelson: I announced that Millennium Central Ltd. would be renamed the New Millennium Experience Company on 26 June 1997 at the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors. The Company's Articles of Association were amended as a result on 30 June 1997.

Millennium Experience

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what meetings he has had with members of the ethnic minority communities to discuss the contents of the Millennium Dome. [23577]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company fully recognises the importance of making the Millennium Experience at Greenwich relevant and accessible to all sections of society, including ethnic minority communities, and is considering a number of proposals from ethnic minority groups. In February, I shall be attending a meeting of the Churches and Other Faiths sub-group of the Millennium Co-ordinating Group, on which all the main faith communities are represented. Various organisations which have strong ethnic minority representation, such as the Evangelical Alliance, the Inner Cities Religious Council, the Inter Faith Network and the Council of Churches for Britain and Ireland, are also members of the group.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio when he plans to announce the nature of the exhibition in the Millennium Experience Dome. [23715]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company plans to reveal further details of the Millennium Experience in the first quarter of this year.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Minister without Portfolio which British women's groups he has invited to contribute to the content of the millennium dome. [24256]

Mr. Mandelson: A number of eminent women—on the Board of the New Millennium Experience (NMEC) and within the design companies contracted to NMEC—are involved in the creation of the content of the Millennium Dome. As Ms Jennie Page—the Chief Executive of NMEC—confirmed to the Minister for Women at a meeting on 18 December 1997, the Company is convinced that the involvement of such women will ensure that women's interests are addressed.

Disney Corporation

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what meetings took place in the United Kingdom between representatives of the Disney Corporation and the New Millennium Experience Company during the course of 1997; when and where such meetings took place; which (a) Ministers, (b) officials and (c) representatives of the New Millennium Experience Company were present at the meetings; and what was discussed. [23933]

Mr. Mandelson: I have had one meeting in the UK with a senior executive from the Disney Corporation since taking up my appointment as shareholder of the New Millennium Experience in June 1997. No officials or representatives of the New Millennium Experience Company were present at the meeting.

A range of discussions, meetings and site visits between senior staff at NMEC and various Disney enterprises have taken place on matters of mutual interest.

Select Committee on Culture, Media and Sport

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio when he plans to give a substantive response the Second Report of the Culture, Media and Sport Select Committee (House of Commons Paper No. 340), 11 December 1997. [23216]

Mr. Mandelson: I will publish a response to the Culture, Media and Sport Select Committee Report on the Millennium Dome, including a timetable for the implementation of its recommendations, before the end of February, the deadline set by the Committee.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 21 January 1998

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

IT Equipment

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Council what is her Department's policy regarding the recycling of information technology equipment within her Department and relevant agencies and to other government departments or agencies; and what arrangements have been made in this respect. [23247]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: My Department's policy for the recycling and disposal of information technology equipment is to determine the most cost effective option. Consideration is given to retention for spares, or sale to staff or to commercial or charitable organisations. I am not responsible for any agencies.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

IT Equipment

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Attorney-General what is his Department's policy regarding the recycling of information technology equipment within his Department and relevant agencies and to other Government departments or agencies; and what arrangements have been made in this respect. [23238]

The Attorney-General: The policy regarding the recycling of information technology equipment in the Departments for which I am responsible is to redeploy the equipment within the relevant Department or, if it is past its useful life, to destroy it. Surplus equipment which is of value may be sold. All data are erased for security purposes.

TREASURY

Business Angels

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to introduce tax incentives for business angels to put loan capital into small private companies. [23554]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 20 January 1998]: Business angels already receive tax incentives to invest in small companies through the Enterprise Investment Scheme and Venture Capital Trusts.

Interest Rates

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what interest rate increase would be needed to keep to the inflation target if earnings rise by 1 per cent. more than the Government's forecast. [24296]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 20 January 1998]: Interest rates are set by the Monetary Policy Committee (MPC) of the Bank of England to meet the Government's inflation target of 2½ per cent. The MPC bases its interest rate decisions on a range of evidence, and its response to higher than expected earnings growth would depend on how it affected the outlook for inflation.

Pension Returns

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his oral answer of 15 January 1998, Official Report, column 478, if he will publish the figures his Department has collated on pension returns for (a) 1996 and (b) 1997. [24129]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 20 January 1998]: I refer to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for East Ham (Mr. Timms) on 16 January 1997, Official Report, column 322–24. The Treasury did not publish any pensions returns figures for 1996.

Scottish Executive

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Scotland to produce a concordat setting out arrangements for relations between his Department and the Scottish Executive after the establishment of a Scottish Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [23550]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 20 January 1998]: Officials from my Department and the Scottish Office are discussing the need for a non-statutory agreement between the Treasury and the Scottish Executive covering the exchange of information, advance notification and joint working in line with the principles set out the White Paper, "Scotland's Parliament".

Financial Services Authority

Mr. Colman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the mandate of the Financial Services Authority will include those who have neither a current bank account nor one with a building society. [23354]

Mrs. Liddell: The Financial Services Authority will be responsible for all aspects of financial regulation. It will acquire the regulatory responsibilities currently exercised by the Bank of England, the three Self-Regulating Organisations (the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation, the Personal Investment Authority and the Securities and Futures Authority), the Insurance Directorate of Her Majesty's Treasury, the Building Societies Commission, the Friendly Societies Commission and the Registry of Friendly Societies. The Financial Services Authority will also be given responsibility for the authorisation of those currently authorised to do investment business by virtue of their membership of a Recognised Professional Body.

Charity Trustees

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the Trustee Investment Act 1961; and what plans he has to change the current investment powers of charity trustees. [24423]

Mrs. Liddell: The Treasury has received a number of representations on reform of the Trustee Investments Act.

The Government understand and accept in principle the case for reform. But any reform must provide a complete and lasting solution. It is unlikely that this could be achieved without primary legislation.

The Government are committed to reform in a number of areas and already have a full programme of legislation implementing its key policy priorities. Primary legislation to reform the TIA would need to compete for a space in this programme. The Government will keep the position under review and seek to make progress at the earliest opportunity.

Poor People

Mr. Pond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will carry out an assessment of the impact of his Department's current policies on the (a) income, (b) employment opportunities and (c) living standards, of the poorest 30 per cent. of the population. [23345]

Mrs. Liddell: Our society is more divided than it has been in generations: over the last 20 years the proportion of households without work has more than doubled from 9 per cent. Our policies are aimed at mending these divisions. Our objective is to raise the living standards of the many, not just of the few, and to offer education and employment opportunities for all.

The Government believe that the best way of improving the living standards of those with the poorest living standards is to help them into work. We are implementing a range of policies under the New Deal to help move those people from welfare into work in order that their living standards may rise.

The Government have also established a Social Exclusion Unit to help co-ordinate action across Government to find new and more integrated ways of tackling the worst problems. We continually evaluate our policies using a variety of methods.

Insurance Companies

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which registered United Kingdom insurance and reinsurance companies have ceased underwriting since January 1992; and which are paying less than 100 per cent. of claims. [23985]

Mrs. Liddell: Information on the status of UK authorised insurance companies as at 31 December 1996 is given in the Insurance Annual Report 1996 published by The Stationery Office, copies of which are in the Library. Appendix 3A indicates whether a company's authorisation to effect contracts of insurance has been withdrawn under section 11 of the Insurance Companies Act 1982, and if a company is in liquidation, provisional liquidation, or scheme or arrangements under section 425 of the Companies Act 1985. Companies in the last three categories will generally not be meeting claims in full. Other companies which remain authorised may in practice have ceased underwriting, but it is not possible to give a definitive list as the circumstances of each company differ.

Bank of England Bill

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the Explanatory Memorandum to the Bank of England Bill. [24941]

Mr. Darling: The Explanatory Memorandum to the Bank of England Bill will be altered to reflect new guidance on the treatment of cash ratio deposits in the National Accounts. On the basis of advice from Eurostat, the Bank of England's income on cash ratio deposits will not score as General Government Expenditure. This does not affect the position for the Financial Services Authority, whose costs will be General Government Expenditure.

Lloyd's

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the future regulation of Lloyd's. [24942]

Mrs. Liddell: In her statement of 23 July 1997, Official Report, column 676, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade announced that the supervision of insurance business, including that carried on at Lloyd's, would ultimately become a responsibility of the proposed Financial Services Authority (FSA). Since then, I have been considering the options for the future regulatory arrangements for Lloyd's in the context of the comprehensive reforms which we will implement in the forthcoming financial services reform Bill. As we have already made clear, we intend to publish a draft Bill for consultation in the Summer.

Holders of insurance policies underwritten at Lloyd's should enjoy the benefits of the same kind of supervisory regime as those with policies issued by other insurers. I intend as part of the modernisation of the prudential supervision powers currently available to the Treasury under the Insurance Companies Act 1982, that the FSA will have much more extensive supervisory powers in relation to Lloyd's. I intend that these should include enhanced powers of intervention and a requirement for authorisation by the FSA of managing agents, who are responsible in practice for running underwriting syndicates. I also intend that the FSA should have reserve power to undertake direct authorisation and supervision of Members of Lloyd's, should that prove to be appropriate in due course.

Certain activities at Lloyd's are similar to business which is currently regulated by the Financial Services Authority under the Financial Services Act 1986. Members' agents advise Members of Lloyd's about which syndicates they should participate in and I intend that their activities should be subject to authorisation by the FSA. In addition, the emerging secondary market in syndicate capacity resembles markets subject to control under the 1986 Act. I intend that the FSA should oversee the operation of the market under a regime similar to that currently in place for recognised investment exchanges.

These arrangements will continue to allow scope for a major role by the Council of Lloyd's in ensuring that Lloyd's continues to be a well-regulated, successful and important part of the UK financial services industry. They will however provide, for the first time in many areas, a major element of external regulatory accountability.

Deaths

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total number of deaths in each of the last five years resulting from ingesting (a) heroin, (b) alcohol, (c) ecstasy, (d) speed, (e) nicotine, (f) glue, (g) Temazepam, (h) cannabis and (i) LSD. [23390]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 19 January 1998]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 21 January 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me, as Director of the Office for National Statistics, to answer your recent question asking for the total number of deaths in each of the last five years resulting from ingesting[1] (a) heroin, (b) alcohol, (c) ecstasy, (d) speed, (e) nicotine, (f) glue, (g) temazepam, (h) cannabis and (i) LSD.

Data for 1992 may be obtained from Table 10 of "Mortality Statistics: Injury and Poisoning 1992", Series DH4 no. 18, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library. This table lists all substances mentioned in the records of deaths assigned to accidental and other poisoning by solid or liquid substances.

The attached table shows the remaining data for 1992 and also data for 1993–1996.

The figures in brackets are those deaths with a mention of alcohol and are included in the non-bracketed figures.

[1] The route of administration (i.e., whether swallowed, injected, inhaled etc.) of toxic substance is not usually specified on the death certificate. The data above represent all mentions of drugs, however administered, where the death was certified is due to poisoning, drug dependence or non-dependent abuse of drugs.

[2] If, for example, both heroin and cannabis are mentioned on a death certificate, the death will occur twice in the table, once under 'Heroin with other drugs' and once under 'Cannabis with other drugs'.

[3] Data supplied by St. George's Hospital Medical School and are those deaths involving all volatile substances, including glue.

[4] Data relate to United Kingdom. This is the latest Department of Health estimate.

[5] Deaths certified as due to alcoholic psychoses, alcohol dependence syndrome, non-dependent abuse of alcohol, alcoholic cardiomyopathy, chronic liver disease and cirrhosis, and toxic effects of alcohol.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of (a) alcohol-related deaths, (b) tobacco-related deaths and (c) cannabis-related deaths in each of the last three years. [23182]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 21 January 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me, as Director of the Office for National Statistics, to answer your recent question asking for an estimate of the numbers of (a) alcohol-related deaths, (b) tobacco-related deaths and (c) cannabis-related deaths occurring in each of the last three years.

The following table shows the data for the latest three years for which figures are available:

Deaths occurring in England and Wales, 1994–96

	1994	1995	1996
Alcohol-related deaths[1]	3,853	4,235	4,489
Tobacco-related deaths[2]	n/a	120,000	n/a
Cannabis-related deaths[3]	10 (2)	10 (3)	4 (2)
Cannabis alone	2 (–)	1 (–)	— (–)
In combination with other drugs	8 (2)	9 (3)	4 (2)

[1] Includes deaths assigned to codes 303, 305.0, 291, 425.5, and 980 of the International Classification of Diseases (9th Revision).
[2] United Kingdom figures, based on the latest Department of Health estimate.
[3] Figures in brackets are those cannabis-related deaths with a mention of alcohol and are already included in the non-bracketed figures. Thus, in 1994, there were 10 deaths of which 2 had a mention of alcohol.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how may people have died in the United Kingdom in each of the last 20 years for which figures are available from (a) tobacco-related illness, (b) alcohol-related illness, (c) road traffic accidents and (d) vitamin B6 overdoses; and if he will make a statement. [23512]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Dr. Vincent Cable, dated 21 January 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me, as Director of the Office for National Statistics, to reply to your question concerning the numbers of people in the United Kingdom who have died in the last 20 years from (a) tobacco related illness, (b) alcohol related illness, (c) road traffic accidents and (d) vitamin B6 overdoses.

Deaths in the United Kingdom 1977–1996

Taxpayers

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the distribution of (a) households and (b) taxpayers in each quartile of income in the United Kingdom and in each of the regions and nations of the United Kingdom. [22978]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Jim Cousins dated 21 January 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), to your recent question asking for the distribution of (a) households and (b) taxpayers in each quartile of income in the United Kingdom and in each of the regions and nations of the United Kingdom.

The figures requested are in the attached tables. Owing to the nature of the question, it has been necessary to use two different data sets to produce the answer. This means that the figures for the two parts of the answer are compiled on different bases and are not strictly comparable.

(a) Distribution of households for each income quartile of individuals in Great Britain, split by region

Standard region	Bottom quartile	Second quartile	Third quartile	Top quartile (percentages)	Total households (=100 per cent.) (millions)
Before housing costs
North (including Cumbria)	30	29	24	16	1.4
Yorkshire and Humberside	29	27	24	21	2.0

Wales	31	28	22	18	1.3
Scotland	29	24	24	22	2.0
Great Britain	25	25	24	26	23.4

(a) Distribution of households for each income quartile of individuals in Great Britain, split by region

Standard region	Bottom quartile	Second quartile	Third quartile	Top quartile (percentages)	Total households (=100 per cent.) (millions)
After housing costs
North (including Cumbria)	30	27	25	18	1.4
Yorkshire and Humberside	27	27	24	23	2.0

Great Britain	26	24	24	26	23.4

Notes:

1. The data come from the Department of Social Security's Households Below Average Income (HBAI) Series, based on the Family Resources Survey (FRS) for the 1995–96 financial year and covering Great Britain. Data from the FRS were used to answer this question because it has a considerably larger sample size than the alternative data source, the Family Expenditure Survey (FES), enabling statistically more precise results to be obtained. The FRS covers only Great Britain, so no estimates are available for Northern Ireland.
2. The income measure used is weekly net (disposable) equivalised household income. The definition of income used follows that in the HBAI series for FRS based results; figures are given both before and after housing costs in line with usual HBAI practice.
3. It should be noted that the HBAI series does not take regional price differences into account.
4. Each quartile of the income distribution contains exactly 25 per cent. of all individuals in Great Britain. Due to different household sizes, each quartile group does not necessarily contain 25 per cent. of all households.

(b) Distribution of taxpayers for each income quartile of households in the United Kingdom

	Bottom quartile	Second quartile	Third quartile	Top quartile (percentages)	Total taxpayers
United Kingdom	9	21	33	37	100

Notes:

1. In this part of the answer, each quartile group contains 25 per cent. of the households. The figures show the proportion of all taxpayers in the households in each of the quartile groups.
2. The data come from the Office for National Statistics' Effects of Taxes and Benefits on Household Income series, based on the Family Expenditure Survey for the 1995–96 financial year and covering the United Kingdom.
3. Data from the FES were used to answer this part of the question as the information about taxpayers was not available on the FRS database. Accurate estimates of the distribution of taxpayers by quartile for the regions and countries of the United Kingdom could not be obtained from the FES because of its small sample size.
4. The income measure used to rank the households is equivalised disposable household income. For a complete definition, see Economic Trends, Number 520, March 1997.

Employment (Northumberland)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many males aged 50 to 65 years were in full-time employment in Northumberland in each of the last three years; and what percentage this was in each year of all males in that age group in that area. [24034]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Ronnie Campbell, dated 21 January 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as Director of the Office for National Statistics, to your recent question on men aged 50–65 working full time in Northumberland.

The figures are shown in the table below. Please note that the analysis is based on men aged 50–64. Sixty five year olds have been excluded because they are above the minimum state retirement age for men.

Please note that estimates from the Labour Force Survey, as in the case of any sample survey, are subject to sampling variability.

Men aged 50–64 living in Northumberland working full-time[1] as an employee or in self-employment

Spring to winter of each year	Working full-time (000s)	Working full-time as percentage of all aged 50–64

Women Earners

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of women of child-bearing age in the United Kingdom who earn more than (a) £100,000 and (b) £1 million annually. [23792]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mrs. Jackie Ballard, dated 21 January 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as the Director of the Office for National Statistics, to your recent question on number of child-bearing age women by annual earnings.

For the purposes of this response, I have taken child-bearing age as 15-44 years. The number of women in this range earning more than £100,000 per annum is too small to allow a precise estimate from statistical sources. The New Earnings Survey for April 1997 collects information on female employees and these data suggest that the number is unlikely to exceed 1500, and is likely to be much less. I cannot be more precise. Also, I cannot provide an estimate for the self-employed, nor for earnings in excess of £1 million per annum.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all overseas visits made since 1 May 1997 on which he or any other Minister in his Department has been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code, indicating (a) who accompanied him or her, (b) the cost to public funds of each such visit. [23256]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 15 January 1998]: The rules and practice on foreign travel by Ministers have not changed and are the same as those followed under the previous Administration.

I was accompanied to Hong Kong for the handover from 27 June to 1 July by my wife at a cost to public funds of £2,901.

I was accompanied to Dublin on 3 November by my partner, Ms Gaynor Regan. There was no cost to public funds.

My hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson) was accompanied by his partner, Miss Geraldine Daly, to Luxembourg from 25–26 October at a cost to public funds of £571.24.

My hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) was accompanied by Mrs. Fatchett to Australasia and the Pacific from 12–22 September at a cost to public funds of £7,558.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each overseas journey he has made at public expense since 1 May 1997 and indicate the date, purpose and cost of each journey. [24133]

Mr. Robin Cook: For details of my overseas visits undertaken during the period 1 May to 10 November 1997, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 11 November 1997, Official Report, column 502–04. My visits overseas since then are listed in the following table:

Date	Venue	Purpose of visit	Total cost (£)
November
19–20	Geneva	P4 Meeting on Iraq
20–21	Luxembourg	Extraordinary European Council Meeting on Employment	35,140.15

Schengen Agreement

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he was informed that procedures for joining the Schengen Agreement under the Treaty of Amsterdam would be subject to unanimity. [24054]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We learnt of the change to the text when we received the revised Treaty text (CONF 4001/ 97) on 19 June.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the conclusions of the investigations by the presidency of the European Council on the circumstances surrounding the negotiations at Amsterdam, pertaining to voting procedures used in the admission of states to the Schengen area. [24052]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Presidency's view was that the treaty text (CONF 4001/ 97) was an accurate reflection of discussions at the Amsterdam Summit. This text was deposited in the Libraries of the House at the time of receipt.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the negotiations at Amsterdam, pertaining to the voting procedures used in the admission of states to the Schengen area, have been raised (a) at the Council of Ministers and (b) bilaterally; and by whom. [24055]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This issue was raised at all levels on a number of occasions following the Amsterdam Summit, including in several bilateral exchanges with other Member States, in particular the Presidency.

BBC World Service

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received in favour of the placing of BBC World Service programmes on the Internet. [24051]

Mr. Fatchett: Some World Service output is already available on the Internet. In collaboration with BBC News, the World Service has launched an online news service in English, and is developing other online news services in Arabic, Mandarin, Russian and Spanish. In addition, World Service programmes can now be heard live in English, Spanish and German as a result of various rebroadcasting agreements.

Algeria

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his Minister's recent visit to Algeria on behalf of the European Union; and what new initiatives he proposes. [24477]

Mr. Fatchett: The European Union (EU) Troika visited Algeria on 19 and 20 January in order to open up the current political dialogue between the EU and the Algerian Government; to provide a public demonstration of the European people's sympathy for the suffering of their neighbours in Algeria; to emphasise the EU's condemnation of terrorism and to improve our understanding of the situation in Algeria. The mission made progress in achieving those objectives.

Foreign Minister Attaf agreed in principle to accept my invitation to visit the UK during our Presidency to continue the dialogue. The Troika urged the Algerian Government to be open about the situation in Algeria, and in particular to allow an early visit from the UN Special Rapporteurs. It was disappointing that the Algerian Government have so far been unable to agree to the latter. We agreed with the Algerian Government to increase the number of parliamentary exchanges. The EU's offer of humanitarian assistance to the Algerian people was not taken up but remains on the table. I will also be reporting to the General Affairs Council who will consider further how the EU might help Algeria.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Algerian government to accept initiatives of the international community to end human rights abuses in Algeria. [24442]

Mr. Fatchett: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary urged Mr. Attaf, the Algerian Foreign Minister, to accept a visit by UN Special Rapporteurs when they spoke on the telephone on 16 January. During the EU Troika mission to Algiers on 20 January, I reinforced that message with Mr. Attaf and Prime Minister Ouyahia.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice his Department is giving to the Home Office about the human rights situation in Algeria in relation to people seeking asylum from that country. [24444]

Mr. Fatchett: The Home Office is familiar with the human rights situation in Algeria and seeks FCO advice in relation to specific circumstances that affect asylum applications. That advice covers the internal security situation in particular areas and any threat to particular sectors of society.

IT Equipment

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy regarding the recycling of information technology equipment within his Department and relevant agencies and to other Government departments or agencies; and what arrangements have been made in this respect. [23278]

Mr. Fatchett: This Department and its one agency aim to recycle as much material as is cost justified. Classified elements of surplus information technology equipment which cannot be redeployed within the Department are destroyed. Unclassified elements are sold either in working condition or for scrap.

Antarctica

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Governments of (a) South Africa, (b) Spain and (c) Panama concerning illegal fishing around Antarctica; and if he will make a statement. [24131]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The question of illegal fishing was discussed extensively at the annual meeting in November 1997 of the Commission for the Conservation of Antarctic Marine Living Resources (CCAMLR), of which both South Africa and Spain are Members. Through the Chairman of the Commission, and on a bilateral level, approaches have been made to the authorities in Panama.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made on the siting of the Antarctic Secretariat. [24132]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Antarctic Treaty Parties have made no further progress since the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meeting in New Zealand in May last year when issues relating to the Secretariat were discussed.

Official London Residence

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who has stayed in his official London residence since 1 May 1997. [24135]

Mr. Robin Cook: The public rooms at 1 Carlton Gardens are used for a variety of official business. I have a private flat at the top of the building in which no official guests have stayed since 2 May.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what improvement works are planned for his official London residence; and what is the estimated cost of each item. [24136]

Mr. Robin Cook: The exterior paintwork of 1 Carlton Gardens was refurbished over the summer at a cost of £45,000. The decision to undertake this work was made in early 1997 under the previous Government.

The FCO are obliged under the terms of the lease from the Crown Estate to maintain the building according to a set timetable and strict standards and to comply with statutory requirements in respect of its Grade I listing status.

The budget inherited from the previous Government included provision for £70,000 for internal redecoration. None of this has been spent and there are no current plans for internal redecoration.

Preliminary work is currently in hand to bring the ventilation of the gas fires in the building into line with recent statutory safety legislation. Costs are not yet available for this work. There are no other plans for improvement works.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Lottery Awards

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what percentage of all the Lottery Capital Scheme awards value has been granted to (a) the London region and (b) the Yorkshire and Humber region. [23378]

Mr. Banks: To date £3.18 billion has been awarded to Lottery capital projects. Of these, awards to the London region account for 17 per cent. (£543.8 million). Capital awards to the Yorkshire and Humber region (£214.7 million) account for 6.7 per cent. of the total.

Information on successful Lottery applicants can be found on the Department's website www.lottery.culture.gov.uk.

Rugby League

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his assessment of the effect on amateur and junior rugby league of the recent changes to the management of the Super League. [23499]

Mr. Banks: The structure and management of rugby league is a matter for the rugby league authorities. The English Sports Council are working closely with the rugby league authorities, through a Joint Policy Board, which has overseen the establishment of a Youth Commission to develop and promote opportunities for young people to play the game at all levels.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of participation levels in rugby league at all levels of the sport. [23500]

Mr. Banks: According to the governing bodies for rugby league, there are around 1,000 professional rugby league players at 34 professional clubs, and approximately 35,000 amateur rugby league players at 400 amateur clubs in this country. The Government, through the English Sports Council, actively encourage all governing bodies of sport to have programmes in place which promote our policy of "sport for all" and increase participation levels in all sports, from grass roots through to elite competitors.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the current state of rugby league in the light of the recent changes to the senior management of the Super League; and if he will make a statement. [23498]

Mr. Banks: The structure and management of rugby league is primarily a matter for the rugby league authorities, who establish and implement rules and regulations which they consider to be in the best interests of the game as a whole. I am certain my hon. Friend will make his views known and I am always ready to listen to them.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the financial and participative future of First and Second division rugby league clubs. [23501]

Mr. Banks: I have not yet made an assessment and believe it is primarily a matter for the rugby league authorities although I would be interested in discussing the matter at an appropriate All Party Group meeting.

Digital Television

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the number and location of sites in Wales that will provide digital television services; and if he will indicate how many television viewers in Wales will not be covered by digital service transmitters. [23825]

Mr. Fisher: The BBC and the Independent Television Commission's plans for the launch of digital terrestrial television services are based on 81 transmission sites in the UK. In Wales, the following sites are included in the launch plan: Wenvoe, Blaen Plwyf, Llanddona, Moel y Parc, Aberdate, Kilvey Hill, and Pontypool. It is not possible to provide a precise number of television viewers in Wales who will not be able to receive an adequate digital service from these transmitters until the transmissions begin. However, the ITC estimates that approximately 766,000 people in Wales (26 per cent. of the total population of Wales) may be unserved from the 81 site plan.

Following the completion of the launch phase of digital terrestrial television, the BBC and ITC, in consultation with my Department, will determine how best to extend digital television services to those remaining unserved, whether by additional terrestrial transmitters or by other means.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if the Government will subsidise the provision of set-top boxes to allow (a) the elderly and (b) the disabled to continue receiving television signals after the cessation of analogue broadcasts. [23686]

Mr. Fisher: Digital terrestrial broadcasting has yet to begin and the Government have no plans to subsidise the provision of set top boxes. However, multiplex licences granted to British Digital Broadcasting plc by the Independent Television Commission contain conditions relating to the promotion of the acquisition of digital receivers and this may include direct subsidy. Analogue terrestrial transmissions will not be discontinued until the spread of digital receivers throughout the population is as universal as that of analogue terrestrial services now.

Television Broadcasting

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with satellite television broadcasters on the inclusion of terrestrial television channels in their services. [23941]

Mr. Fisher: Government have no authority to determine which services are carried by satellite broadcasters. It is for the broadcasters, including those currently broadcasting their signals terrestrially, to discuss carriage of their services direct with satellite operators. I understand, however, that the BBC and Channel 5 intend that their terrestrial services should be available on digital satellite once transmissions begin.

"Integrity in Football"

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if the findings of Sir John Smith's report "Integrity in Football" will be acted upon by the Government's Football Taskforce. [24062]

Mr. Banks: The issues raised in Sir John Smith's report do not fall within the Taskforce's remit. Rather, they are matters for the Football Association to consider in the first instance. I have written to the FA's Chairman, Mr. Keith Wiseman, welcoming Sir John's report, and encouraging the FA to respond as early as possible.

IT Equipment

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his Department's policy regarding the recycling of information technology equipment within his Department and relevant agencies and to other Government departments or agencies; and what arrangements have been made in this respect. [23282]

Mr. Tom Clarke: DCMS and its agencies all operate a policy of reusing IT equipment where this is practicable. Equipment which cannot be reused internally is sold for reuse or recycling or passed to organisations which can dispose of unusable products such as old toner cartridges.

DCMS has an arrangement with its IT contractors to undertake the disposal of IT equipment. Its two agencies, the Historic Royal Palaces Agency and the Royal Parks Agency both have, at present, informal arrangements for disposal of their equipment through various organisations. It is expected that these will be formalised in the coming year.

Accommodation Register

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to introduce a statutory register of accommodation; and if he will make a statement. [24944]

Mr. Chris Smith: The new, harmonised accommodation rating schemes, which are being introduced in 1998 for full implementation by 2000 by the English Tourist Board, the Automobile Association and the Royal Automobile Club, represent a big step forward.

We intend to assess the impact of these voluntary measures before deciding whether statutory registration is also needed. We shall do so on the basis of consultation with the Tourism Forum. The strategy for tourism, which I am currently developing in consultation with the Forum, will specifically consider how to raise and maintain quality in all aspects of tourism, including accommodation.

Welsh Language Television

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his estimate of the cost to his Department of providing Welsh language television in the latest year for which figures are available. [21988]

Mr. Fisher: The Welsh Fourth Channel Authority (S4C), is funded by the Department for Culture, Media and Sport. The grant is paid on a calendar year basis and, for 1998, it is £74.895 million. The level of the grant is determined by a statutory formula set out in the Broadcasting Act 1996.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Power Stations Emissions

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what were (a) the total annual emissions in kilotonnes and (b) the emissions per unit of electricity generated, in g/kWh, of (i) carbon dioxide, (ii) sulphur dioxide, (iii) oxides of nitrogen, (iv) hydrogen chloride, (v) dust and (vi) other substances, for the last 10 years from each of the coal or gas-fired power stations in the United Kingdom. [22860]

Angela Eagle: I have placed the tables which provide the data requested insofar as they are available in the Library of the House. The data have been obtained primarily from records held by the Environment Agency in England and Wales, the Scottish Environment Protection Agency and the Northern Ireland Department of the Environment. Where there are gaps in the data from Agency sources, they have been filled in a number of ways.

Data have also been obtained from reports published by the power generators, and from correspondence between those companies and the National Atmospheric Emissions Inventory. In some cases emissions have been estimated by combining reported or derived fuel use estimates and aggregate emission factors. Where carbon dioxide emissions were not recorded they have been estimated using the relationship with the emissions of oxides of nitrogen.

There are still many gaps in the tables. For the most part, this is because many power stations have closed down during the last ten years while others have opened only relatively recently. In other cases, such as for many of the pollutants in 1988, no data were recorded and no estimates can be made. Finally, emissions for some pollutants from stations fuelled by certain fuels are not considered significant and are not included in the tables, e.g. data are recorded for hydrogen chloride from coal fired stations only.

Particulate matter emissions have been reported in place of those requested for "dust", as the former is what is actually measured. Gas fired power stations do not emit significant quantities of particulate matter and therefore do not figure in the tables for this pollutant.

No other pollutant data are regularly collected for each power station, and therefore no tables have been provided for "other substances".

Air Traffic Control

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for each month for the last 12 months the dates and times that the air traffic control centre at West Drayton failed, together with the length of the system failure, the estimated number of aircraft involved and the reason for the failure. [23197]

Ms Glenda Jackson: National Air Traffic Services Ltd., who are responsible for operations at the London Area and Terminal Control Centre (LATCC) at West Drayton, inform me that there were no system failures within the last 12 months.

There were, however, two engineering related occurrences which resulted in short term capacity reductions. Neither incident resulted in a degradation of safety levels.

On 5 August 1997 two sectors at LATCC had to be temporarily combined following reports of an electrical problem on one of the consoles. The duration of the incident was 148 minutes and no flights were delayed by more than 30 minutes. On 2 September a software problem caused a partial system failure lasting 68 minutes—24 flights were held up for over an hour, and 107 flights for between 30 and 59 minutes. Statistics for flights delayed by less than 30 minutes are not kept for performance review purposes because such delays could be attributable to a range of factors, not just air traffic control problems.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for each month for the last 12 months the number of aircraft delayed in (a) taking off and (b) landing as a result of air traffic control delays at (i) Heathrow Airport and (ii) Gatwick Airport. [23198]

Ms Glenda Jackson: National Air Traffic Services Ltd., who are responsible for Air Traffic Control operations at Heathrow and Gatwick, have provided the following statistics relating to the total number of flights, and the number and percentage experiencing delays on take-off and landing at the two airports for each of the past twelve months. It should be noted that these statistics relate to flight delays on departure and arrival for whatever reason (e.g. weather, runway capacity, late passengers, as well as Air Traffic Control). A breakdown to show delays exclusively attributable to Air Traffic Control could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Air Misses

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many air misses took place in the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years; and how many fatalities resulted from air traffic control errors in the last 10 years in the United Kingdom. [23580]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Civil Aviation Authority, who are responsible for air space management in the United Kingdom, have supplied figures for Risk-Bearing Airprox incidents which are given in the table below. There were no fatalities resulting from air traffic control errors in the last 10 years in the United Kingdom.

Year	Risk-Bearing Airprox (P)	Risk-Bearing Airprox (C)
1987	65	—
1988	81	—
1989	71	—
1990	69	—
1991	61	25
1992	49	24
1993	69	21
1994	64	20
1995	48	30
1996	59	—

1. A Risk-Bearing Airprox incident is one categorised as A (real risk of collision), B (possible risk of collision) or C (slight risk of collision).
2. 1997 figures have not yet been verified as to whether they are Risk-Bearing.
3. Airprox (P) are incidents reported by pilots, Airprox (C) are incidents reported by air traffic controllers.
4. Airprox (C) data have been collected only since 1991.

Car Driving Test Failures

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the percentage of failures in car driving tests in (a) 1996 and (b) 1997; and in what proportion a reason for failure was that driving was too slow. [23508]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The percentage of failures in car driving tests in 1996 was 56 per cent. Figures for 1997 are available only from the period January to June because of problems with the computer system collating test data at the Driving Standards Agency. During that period the failure rate was 53 per cent. The Agency hopes to have rectified the problems relating to the IT systems in the near future.

Statistics showing what proportion of failures was caused by driving too slow are not currently available. The Agency is developing management information systems that will allow comprehensive analyses to be undertaken of faults committed by candidates. It is hoped that this facility will be operational from early next month.

Rail Services (Penalty Fares)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list for each of the train operating companies serving Greater London (a) the number of penalty fares issued and (b) the income generated by penalty fares since the companies began operating; [23656]

(2) if he will list for each of the train operating companies serving Greater London the number of appeals against penalty fares and the proportion of these that were successful for each year since the companies began operating. [23657]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This information is not held centrally. Information supplied by or on behalf of Train Operating Companies is set out in the table. This shows the number of penalty fares issued by the Train Operating Companies serving greater London, the number of appeals received and the proportion of these that were successful.

Company	Penalty fares issued 1996–97	Appeals received	Total appeals successful per cent.
LTS Rail	9,330	745	57
Great Eastern Railway	43,717	5,083	53
Connex South Central	42,789	2,317	59
Connex South Eastern	100,031	11,203	63
Silverlink Train Services[1]	10,031	1,113	61
South West Trains	49,227	4,160	47
Thameslink	20,855	1,007	81
Thames Trains	23,979	1,967	65
Chiltern Railway	4,475	344	62
West Anglia and Great Northern	50,000	2,660	20

[1] Denotes a company which no longer applies penalty fares.

Figures for income generated by penalty fares since the companies have been operating are unavailable. The primary purpose of penalty fares is not to generate income but to address the problem of ticketless travel. I understand that in 1990 the ticketless travel rate was four per cent. The implementation of penalty fares has, for most companies, driven down ticketless travel to 1.5 per cent. or less.

Roadside Trees

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review circular 52/75 regarding inspection of trees. [23297]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Circular Roads 52/75 will be withdrawn upon the issue of new and revised advice in the Trunk Road Maintenance Manual. These revisions are planned for publication later this year.

The manual is provided to the managing agents for the trunk road network in England under the direction of the Highways Agency. The requirements for the inspection of trees are set out in volume 2, part 1, chapter 11 and are broadly similar to the advice given in the Circular 52/75.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people have (a) died and (b) been injured as a result of falling roadside trees in each of the last five years. [23296]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Statistical Branch of DETR produces a number of annual publications which incorporate a wide variety of accident data, but because of the inevitable limit on the number of categorisations of accidents, no separate statistics are maintained on injury accidents resulting from falling trees. There are no immediate plans to identify this data but this will be reconsidered when an overall review is undertaken within the next five years.

Insulin-dependent Drivers

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on those very exceptional circumstances referred to in Point 10, Annexe III, of EC Directive 91/439/EEC wherein insulin-dependent drivers might be granted licences to drive minibuses and transit vans. [23355]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The relevant provision in the Directive, relating to the driving of vehicles in group 2 (lorries over 3.5 tonnes and vehicles with more than eight passenger seats), says that

"only in very exceptional cases may driving licences be issued to or renewed for applicants or drivers in this group suffering from diabetes mellitus and requiring insulin treatment, and then only where duly justified by authorised medical opinion and subject to regular medical check-ups."

The advice of the Secretary of State's Honorary Advisory Panel on Diabetes and Driving is that there are, in their judgment, no exceptional cases which medical opinion would recognise as being lower risk than others. The Panel have recently confirmed their considered view that granting licences to drive Group 2 vehicles to those who are insulin-treated is not in the interests of road safety.

Hedgerows

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had, and with which bodies, on the protection of hedgerows in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [23288]

Angela Eagle: The official group set up to review the Hedgerows Regulations 1997 comprises representatives from a wide range of interests, including statutory agencies, local authorities and the main farming and conservation bodies.

The protection of hedgerows in England and Wales is raised from time to time in Ministerial discussions with these and other interested groups.

I will write to my hon. Friend with a full list of the review group's membership.

Office of Water Services

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what recent assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the water regulator; [23696]

(2) if he will take steps to strengthen the regulatory powers of OFWAT. [23698]

Mr. Meacher: My overall assessment of OFWAT is that they do a good job within the existing framework of regulation. The Government are currently undertaking a review of the regulation of the utility industries with the objective of setting a long-term stable framework for utility regulation which is seen as fair by all the interest groups involved, particularly by consumers. Among other issues, the review has been considering whether any legislative changes are required to meet this objective. Our proposals will be published in a Green Paper in due course.

MV Gaul

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 16 December 1997, Official Report, columns 151–52, concerning the 13 reports received on the possible location of the wreck of the Gaul, what were the dates of each report; and if he will publish the reports in full. [23947]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Dates are recorded on existing files only for the following reports of the possible location of the Gaul:

Poseidon: 21 May 1974

HMS Rhyl: 22 May 1974

Lord Nelson: 31 May 1974

Rairo: 15 November 1975

Marbella: 2 March 1977

Ella Hewitt: 19 September 1997.

The other reports of location are undated, being referred to only in official correspondence and file notes. The references to reported locations are not in a form suitable for publication.

But if my hon. Friend would like to contact the Chief Inspector of Marine Accidents he will be happy to make arrangements for my hon. Friend to have access to the relevant files at his offices in Southampton.

Coach Seat Belts

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what grants are available to enable coach operators to fit seat belts in coaches used in transporting children to and from school; and if he will make a statement. [23995]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are no grants available to coach operators to cover the coasts of fitting seat belts in their vehicles. Operators can, of course, take these costs into account, along with other overheads, when tendering for transport contracts. The additional costs to local authorities of implementing the new requirements on safety of school transport has been taken into account when determining the Education Standard Spending Assessment (SSA) in local government finance settlements since 1995–96.

Footpath (Barrow upon Soar)

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received about footpath I18 in Barrow upon Soar, Leicestershire; and if he will make a statement. [23830]

Angela Eagle: Ten representations have been received about Leicestershire County Council's temporary closure of footpath I18. I understand that the closure is necessary because a retaining wall next to the footpath is in a dangerous condition but that there is a legal dispute between the County Council, Railtrack and private residents about who is responsible for the works. I also understand that the County Council is considering taking legal proceedings to require the works to be carried out and in the meantime is considering interim engineering proposals that may enable the footpath to be reopened pending those works.

New Motorway Construction Costs

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the present average cost of constructing one mile of new motorway; and what are the figures in cash terms for (a) 1988, (b) 1978 and (c) 1968. [24226]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The average cost of constructing one mile of new, dual three lane motorway is £17.1 million. The figures in cash terms for 1988, 1978, and 1968 are £11.8 million, £6.1 million and £1.7 million respectively.

Commission for Local Administration

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the performance of the Commission for Local Administration. [24242]

Ms Armstrong [holding answer 20 January 1998]: A fundamental review of the Commission for Local Administration in England concluded in 1996 that the Commission was cost-effective in its determination of complaints. A number of the review's recommendations required legislation and we shall be considering how to take these forward. In determining individual complaints, the Commissioners, appointed by Her Majesty on the recommendation of the Secretary of State, are wholly independent of central and local government.

IT Equipment

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his Department's policy regarding the recycling of information technology equipment within his Department and relevant agencies and to other Government departments or agencies; and what arrangements have been made in this respect. [23243]

Angela Eagle: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions follows internal procedures for the redeployment of information technology equipment within the Department and the Agencies. Surplus equipment is disposed of in accordance with Treasury Guidelines.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the Year 2000 compliance of the CAA's computer systems. [24786]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) on 19 June 1997, Official Report, column 277, and to the reply the Minister for Roads gave to the noble Lord Gainford on 10 December 1997, Official Report, House of Lords, columns 30–31.

Aviation Movements

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the total number of civil aviation movements over the last five years in United Kingdom controlled airspace. [24484]

Ms Glenda Jackson: National Air Traffic Services Ltd. (NATS) have provided us with the following figures for the total number of aircraft movements handled at each of their Area Control Centres for each of the last five years:

Aircraft movements handled by NATS Units (Year to 31 March)

(000s)

Centre	1993	1994	1995	1996	1997
LATCC	1,288	1,331	1,411	1,494	1,560
MACC	264	273	361	374	394
ScACC	380	390	405	404	415
Oceanic	224	231	235	252	265

Note:
The figures are subject to a degree of double-counting where aircraft are passed from one centre to another.
Key:
LATCC = London Area and Terminal Control Centre.
MACC = Manchester Area Control Centre.
ScACC = Scottish Area Control Centre.
Source:
NATS Annual Report and Accounts 1997.
Civil Aviation Authority Report and Accounts 1995 and 1996.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the rate of change of the impact of aviation movements on airprox incidents over the last five years. [24482]

Ms. Glenda Jackson: The Civil Aviation Authority, who are responsible for air space management in the United Kingdom, have supplied figures expressed in terms of Commercial Air Transport Aircraft Reported in Risk-Bearing Airprox incidents per 100,000 hours flown as an illustration of the impact of aviation movements on airprox incidents. The figures, for each of the last 5 years for which figures are available, have remained relatively constant despite significant increases (over 20 per cent.) in air movements over the period and are given in the table.

Commercial Air Transport Aircraft Reported in Risk-Bearing Airprox incidents per 100,000 hours flown

Year	Airprox (P)	Airprox (C)
1991	0.7	2.9
1992	0.4	2.5
1993	0.9	2.2
1994	1.5	2.0
1995	1.0	2.8
1996[1]	0.7	2.8

[1] 1996 figures are provisional and cover the first nine months of the year.
1. Airprox (C) are incidents reported by Air Traffic Controllers, and Airprox (P) are incidents reported by pilots.
2. Risk-bearing Airprox incidents are those falling in categories A (real risk of collision), B (possible risk of collision) and C (slight risk of collision). It excludes category D (no risk of collision) incidents.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number of airprox incidents in United Kingdom controlled airspace for the last five years. [24483]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Civil Aviation Authority, who are responsible for air space management in the United Kingdom, have supplied the following figures for the total number of airprox incidents reported in the United Kingdom for each of the past five years.

1993: 217

1994: 212

1995: 208

1996: 211

1997: 209.

Note: The above figures cover pilot-reported—Airprox(P)-incidents, and controller-reported—Airprox(C)—incidents and in the case of Airprox(P) incidents not just in controlled airspace (to obtain the breakdown would involve disproportionate cost). All reported incidents are given—i.e. both Risk-Bearing and Non Risk-Bearing.

Road Safety (Variable Speed Limits)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the value of variable speed limits in the M25 controlled motorway pilot scheme, in terms of (a) overall journey times and (b) road accidents and casualties. [24480]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The value of variable speed limits in the M25 controlled motorway pilot schemes is being monitored by the Transport Research Laboratory. The results from their first year assessment, the report for which was released in February 1997, indicate that:

(a) during the first 12 months of operation of the pilot, the scheme had accommodated traffic increases in weekdays of 1.3 per cent. during the morning peak period on the clockwise carriageway, and of 3.7 per cent. during the afternoon peak period in the anticlockwise carriageway, without measurable increase in journey times. However, the natural variability of traffic behaviour had masked any overall reduction in journey times; and

(b) police records up to August 1996 showed a 30 per cent. reduction in injury incidents and a 25 per cent. reduction in damage only accidents compared to the previous year.

The results from the second year of operation are expected to be available in about two months' time. Indications are that the pilot is continuing to provide worthwhile benefits to motorists in terms of both traffic operation and safety, while contributing to pollution reductions through smoothing traffic flow.

Vessels (Fire Services)

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many vessels sought the assistance of fire services in (a) territorial waters and (b) international waters in each of the past five years; of those what was the proportion of (i) bulk-carriers, (ii) coastal vessels, (iii) tankers, (iv) warships, (v) fishing vessels and (vi) pleasure craft; and if he will make a statement. [23033]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, we can advise that, during the last ten years, fire fighting teams have been deployed on 61 occasions in the UK Search and Rescue Region.

Traffic Calming (Colchester)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what sums were contributed from Government funds through (a) the Highway Authority, (b) English Heritage and (c) others towards the traffic calming measures undertaken in Colchester High Street; and what proportion of these represent the total cost of the measures. [24488]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have awarded Essex County Council £1.2 million towards the Colchester local transport package in each of the last two years, with a further allocation of £600,000 in the 1998–99 local transport settlement announced in December last year. Resources allocated to packages for minor works are not targeted on specific projects. It is therefore for the County Council to determine the most appropriate use for their allocations within the package area. I understand from the County Council that in 1996–97 some £302,000 of the package allocation was spent on the High Street scheme. In addition, the County and Borough Councils provided £390,000 while English Heritage contributed £100,000. In 1997–98, £150,000 of the allocation is being spent on High Street works, with the Councils contributing £418,000. The total costs of the High Street works are estimated at £2.4 million.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Administration of Justice Act

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the Government plan to bring into force sections 23 to 28 of the Administration of Justice Act 1982. [22991]

Mr. Hoon: There are no plans to bring these sections into force. I understand that the present system for the deposit and safe-keeping of the wills of living persons operated by the Principal Registry of the Family Division under section 126 of the Supreme Court Act 1981 is effective, efficient and increasingly widely used.

Solicitors

Ms Perham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to review the legislation concerning solicitors' fees; and if he will make a statement. [22987]

Mr. Hoon: I have no present plans to review the legislation concerning solicitors' fees. If the hon. Lady has any particular changes in mind perhaps she would care to write to me.

Ms Perham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will review the regulations governing the appointment by solicitors as executors for an estate of their own firm to carry out the administration. [22986]

Mr. Hoon: This is a matter for the Law Society. The Department has no plans to review this area.

Mr. Jonathan Aitken

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 397, if he will take steps to recover from Jonathan Aitken the full costs of laying on the trial arising from the libel action he brought against The Guardian newspaper; and if he will make a statement. [23036]

Mr. Hoon: I have no powers to take steps to recover from Jonathan Aitken the full costs of laying on the trial. The appropriate court fee was paid as required under the Supreme Court Fees Order 1980 (as amended).

Judges

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has made to eliminate discrimination in the selection of judges. [23178]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor's policy is to appoint to judicial office on merit those who appear to him to be best qualified regardless of ethnic origin, gender, marital status, sexual orientation, political affiliation, religion or (subject to the physical requirements of the office) disability.

The Lord Chancellor recognises the value of consultations with judges and the profession but has taken steps to modernise and improve procedures. He has arranged that allegations of misconduct must be made known to the individual concerned and has made clear that sexual orientation is not a relevant consideration. He has announced his intention to invite applications for appointment to the High Court Bench, and to provide for appropriate flexibility in part-time sittings arrangements where, for example, women or men have taken career breaks for family reasons. He will increase the upper age limit for appointment as an Assistant Recorder from 50 to 53. He is looking too at longer term improvements, for example an ombudsman to examine complaints from anyone who feels unfairly treated by the appointments process. In the meantime, he will himself investigate any claim of discrimination. He will be working with the judiciary to develop more effective forms of appraisal and assessment for part-time office-holders.

Officials are to develop a scheme whereby an individual can 'work shadow' a judge to find out what it would be like to sit judicially, and a mentoring scheme in which more senior members of the judiciary will advise and guide their more junior colleagues. The Lord Chancellor regards discrimination as wholly unacceptable and supports the joint working group on equal opportunities (on which there are officials from LCD, Bar and Law Society and groups representing women and ethnic minority lawyers) and awaits their proposals with interest.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what data the Lord Chancellor has collated about judges who are Freemasons; what assessment he has made of the influence of Freemasonry on the appointment of new judges; and if he will make a statement. [23177]

Mr. Hoon: Information from the United Grand Lodge about the number (but not names) of Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, Judges of the Supreme Court and Circuit Judges on the North-Eastern and Midland and Oxford Circuits belonging to the Freemasons was supplied by the then Lord Chancellor to the Home Affairs Select Committee in February 1997 for its inquiry on Freemasonry in the Police and the Judiciary and published in the Committee's report. No other information on this subject has been collated. The Lord Chancellor has no grounds for believing that Freemasonry has had any influence on the appointment of new judges. Judicial appointments are made strictly on merit and are in no way affected by membership or non-membership of the Freemasons.

Coroners Service

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what are the Lord Chancellor's functions in relation to the Coroner's Service. [23105]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor's functions in relation to the Coroners Service are set out in sections 3, 11 and 32 of the Coroners Act 1988. Section 3(4) provides that the Lord Chancellor may, if he thinks fit, remove any coroner from office for inability or misbehaviour in the discharge of his duty. Section 11(5)(c) provides that an inquisition leading to the removal of a coroner shall be in such a form as the Lord Chancellor may by rules made by statutory instrument from time to time prescribe. Section 32(1) provides that the Lord Chancellor may, with the concurrence of the Home Secretary, make rules for regulating the practice and procedure at or in connection with inquests and post-mortem examinations. The Lord Chancellor has no function regarding the appointment of Coroners, which is a matter solely for the Home Secretary.

Lord Chancellor's Speech

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the Lord Chancellor's speech of November 1997 to the Minority Lawyers' Conference; and if the speech represents Government policy. [23179]

Mr. Hoon: A copy of the speech will be placed in the Library. The speech represents Government policy.

IT Equipment

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is his Department's policy regarding the recycling of information technology equipment within his Department and relevant agencies and to other Government departments or agencies; and what arrangements have been made in this respect. [23242]

Mr. Hoon: Information technology equipment used in Lord Chancellor's Department Headquarters and the Court Service is now owned and maintained by the private sector suppliers of IT services, procured under Private Finance Initiative contracts. It is their responsibility to recycle and dispose of their own equipment. For other organisations reporting to the Lord Chancellor, a variety of methods are used, such as the re-use of some equipment for other purposes, public auction, disposal of very old equipment to authorised dealers and the recycling of reusable components such as printer cartridges.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Investment

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the Government will amend the Scotland Bill to clarify the powers of the (a) Secretary of State for Scotland, (b) the first Minister of the Scottish Executive and (c) the DTI concerning inward investment. [22651]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 12 January 1998]: The Bill as introduced already gives effect to the undertakings in the White Paper 'Scotland's Parliament' (Cm 3658 para 2.4) that financial assistance to industry and inward investment including the functions of Locate in Scotland would be devolved in Scotland. My Department's Invest in Britain Bureau will remain the national agency promoting the UK as a location for inward investment and will continue to work in partnership with Locate in Scotland under the Committee on Overseas Promotion. As also set out in the White Paper operation of these various powers will be subject to common UK guidelines and consultation arrangements to be set out in a published concordat.

Official Functions

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the annual budget for the services provided for the President's Admiralty flat. [23688]

Mrs. Beckett: The Service charge payable to the Cabinet Office for Flat 1, Admiralty House for the financial year 1997–98 is £84,166.80 plus VAT of £14,729.19.

Industrial and Manufacturing Base

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what actions she is taking to strengthen the industrial and manufacturing base in the Greater London area. [24076]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My Department supports a wide range of programmes and initiatives aimed at strengthening the industrial and manufacturing base of Greater London.

Examples include the DTI Smart programme, London Manufacturing Initiative (LMI), Made in London, and the Business Link and TEC led programmes that are designed and delivered locally.

London Art Market

Mr. Gibb: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received concerning the impact of European regulations on the London art market. [21456]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 19 January 1998]: The London art market has a turnover of around £2.2 million which makes it the largest art market in the European Union, and the second largest in the world. However, although the London art market continues to prosper, there are indications of an overall decline in the UK's share of world trade. This may, in some part, be attributable to changing market trends, which are difficult to isolate. However, I am concerned that the London art market should not lose its competitive edge, in particular as a result of new legislative burdens, and that this should be taken into account in current discussions on EU Single Market measures which impact upon the art market.

Newspaper Industry

Mr. Radice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what representations she has received in respect of potential abuses of a dominant position in the United Kingdom newspaper industry; and what action she proposes to take; [23981]

(2) if she will refer the newspaper industry to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in respect of predatory pricing; [23980]

(3) what representations she has received on predatory pricing in the United Kingdom newspaper industry; and if she will make a statement. [23979]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The Department of Trade and Industry has received a number of representations on alleged predatory pricing and abuse of a dominant position in the newspaper industry.

Under the competition legislation, responsibility for considering allegations of anti-competitive practices, abuse of monopoly power and restrictive trade practices lies with the Director General of Fair Trading, who is passed copies of all representations.

The decision on whether to make a reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission is also a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading.

IT Equipment

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her Department's policy regarding the recycling of information technology equipment within her Department and relevant agencies and to other Government departments or agencies; and what arrangements have been made in this respect. [23276]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: In arranging for the disposal of surplus IT equipment, the Department firstly considers whether the equipment could be used elsewhere within the Department to replace older equipment or to meet new business requirements. If this is not feasible, the equipment may be part-exchanged for new equipment, sold to staff at market value or sold to specialist companies which either refurbish the equipment for resale or use the parts for spares or recycling.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Indonesia

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on assistance given by her Department to Indonesia. [24230]

Clare Short: We are providing support for sustainable forestry management with an increased emphasis on benefits to poor people living in forest areas. In addition, we are developing proposals for a programme of support to trade unions in Indonesia and to NGOs in East Timor. Commitments entered into by the previous government, some of which run until the year 2000, are being honoured. These relate to technical co-operation projects in public administration, natural resources, the environment, energy and education and to support under the Aid and Trade Provision for projects in transport, energy and education. Expenditure in the current year, largely in respect of previous commitments, will be of the order of £30 million.

Kenya

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what democracy building programmes her Department has commissioned in Kenya since 1 May 1997. [24229]

Clare Short: We have funded four civic and voter education programmes run by Kenyan non-government organisations (total cost £182,000); two projects aimed at improving media coverage of the Kenya elections (total cost £28,000); and a national election observing programme by three Kenyan non-government organisations (British contribution £351,000).

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the human rights component of the training provided to senior management in the Kenyan police. [24330]

Clare Short: This assistance aims to improve the content and quality of training for police officers in human rights issues. Preparatory training of trainers and curriculum design is underway.

Montserrat

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress has been made in implementing the aid measures outlined in the joint statement between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Montserrat. [24236]

Clare Short: I presume that the right hon. Gentleman is referring to the statement made on 16 September. 105 houses will be completed by the end of February. This has released school buildings enabling full secondary education to resume in January. A Department for International Development mission to Montserrat last week discussed the composition of the next tranche of 50 housing units and the details of the soft mortgage scheme. An initial draft of the Sustainable Development Plan has been discussed at official level and a final draft will be circulated publicly in the next few weeks. A draft feasibility study for an airstrip is underway and we are in discussion with the Government of Montserrat on what further work is needed to produce the final report.

Non-governmental Organisations

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list by country the projects funded by the United Kingdom aid programme administered by non-governmental organisations. [24232]

Clare Short: Information on projects funded by Department for International Development which are administered by non-governmental organisations (NGOs) is not held centrally in the format requested. A full answer to the question could therefore be provided only at disproportionate cost.

I will arrange for a list to be made available in the Library giving details by country of around 1,800 UK NGO development projects funded through the Joint Funding Scheme.

Mixed Credits

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she expects the system of mixed credits to replace the aid-for-trade provision to be introduced; and if she will make a statement. [24234]

Clare Short: No separate scheme will be launched. Mixed credits could be one of a range of instruments deployed to deliver an agreed aid programme in any particular developing country. As the White Paper makes clear, to avoid the abuses of the past, any mixed credits will be managed within agreed country strategies with the primary aim of helping to reduce poverty.

North Korea

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps her Department is taking to help alleviate the famine in North Korea. [24228]

Clare Short: Details of our humanitarian assistance to North Korea were provided in my Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State's answer to the hon. Member for Altrincham and Sale, West (Mr. Brady) on 18 December 1997, Official Report, column 288. We are considering the latest reports on humanitarian needs in the current year and are discussing further assistance, including the latest World Food Programme appeal with the European Commission.

China

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if her Department has received requests for assistance following the earthquake in Zhangbein, China; and if she will make a statement. [24227]

Clare Short: Following a request for international assistance from the Government of China, we have contributed £200,000 to the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies (IFRC) for the procurement and distribution of relief items, such as food, shelter, medicines and quilts to 110,000 needy earthquake victims in Hebei Province. The IFRC are working with the Chinese Red Cross to manage this relief programme.

Bananas

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she had with members of the European Commission on the presidency's policy on future markets for Associated African and Caribbean States of the European Community, concerning the marketing of bananas; and what estimates Her Majesty's Government have made of the likely loss of income to small farmers arising from recent negotiations conducted by the Commission with the World Trade Organisation. [24050]

Clare Short: I have discussed this issue with Commissioner Pinheiro during his recent visit to London at the start of the UK Presidency and my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has also had discussions with the Commission.

Although it was disappointing that some parts of the regime have been found incompatible with World Trade Organisation (WTO) rules, the ruling did not exclude all preferences for the Africa, Caribbean and Pacific (ACP) banana producers. Work undertaken by the Government shows that the impact of the WTO ruling on the ACP banana producing countries will vary according to the details of the new arrangements which are put in place to comply with the WTO ruling.

The Commission has recently put forward some proposals to modify the EU banana regime; these are now being considered by member states. It is therefore not yet possible to make an estimate of the impact of the WTO ruling. None the less it seems likely that the Caribbean banana industry will face rather increased competition. There are plans to improve the competitiveness of the banana industry in the Windward islands and to provide EU funding to assist this adjustment.

Bilateral Assistance

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement concerning the proportion of the United Kingdom aid programme to be devoted to bilateral assistance. [24231]

Clare Short: In 1996–97, bilateral aid comprised 50 per cent. of external assistance programmes (excluding administration). The proportion in future years will be determined by decisions taken in our current Resource Allocation Round.

Great Lakes Region

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans her Department has to promote democracy and good government in the Great Lakes region of Africa. [24235]

Clare Short: Efforts to build sound and accountable government which gives the poor a voice are at the heart of my Department's implementation of the White Paper in the Great Lakes. We are working bilaterally and will also use our Presidency of the EU to encourage greater cohesion in the area of governance. We will take forward the EU joint action in support of democratisation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The Head of the EU Electoral Unit, Professor Vasconcelos, will visit Kinshasa later this month to see how we might best help the democratisation process. The EU Special Envoy, Ajello, has produced some useful and constructive ideas on governance issues in the Great Lakes. We will pursue these during the Presidency.

IT Equipment

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is her Department's policy regarding the recycling of information technology equipment within her Department and relevant agencies and to other Government departments or agencies; and what arrangements have been made in this respect. [23245]

Clare Short: We have recently replaced virtually all our printers and desk-top computers throughout the Department for International Development following our change to the Windows 95 operating environment, and as a result of the introduction of resource accounting. We negotiated buy-back clauses for our old equipment with the suppliers of the new equipment. The suppliers are then responsible for selling the equipment on or recycling it.

For more ad hoc exercises where buy-back is not an option, we are in contact with RECOMMIT, the recycling organisation, which specialises in recycling Information Technology equipment in the public sector.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Maintenance

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she intends to introduce a disregard of child maintenance payments when assessing a parent with carers income support entitlement. [23147]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The receipt of regular maintenance is a key part of this Government's strategy for helping lone mothers move off Income Support into work. We are looking closely at all aspects of the child support scheme to see where improvements can be made. We aim to bring forward proposals by the summer.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) when the child maintenance bonus was introduced; how many awards have been made to date; what publicity has been provided to ensure that staff and clients were aware of this scheme; and if she will make a statement; [23368]

(2) what steps she has taken to ensure that information leaflets on the child maintenance bonus are available in Benefit Agency offices throughout the country and that staff are briefed thereon. [23369]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The receipt of regular maintenance is a central part of the Government's strategy for helping lone parents move off income support into work. The Child Maintenance Bonus provides extra cash help towards the costs associated with starting work.

The Child Maintenance Bonus was introduced on 7 April 1997. At the end of December 1997, some 3,000 awards of the bonus has been made.

Everyone who joins the scheme receives a letter of welcome which explains how they can make a claim. Every six months the person with care of the child also receives a statement giving her an estimate of the amount the bonus would be if she returned to work at that time. Publicity for potential clients is provided through a general work incentives leaflet, the work incentives helpline and through leaflets and posters in Benefits Agency offices. All Benefits Agency offices received a supply of Child Maintenance Bonus leaflets before the scheme commenced in April 1997. Each office is responsible for ensuring that it maintains stocks of the leaflet.

The bonus has been publicised to Benefit Agency Staff using a variety of methods, including bulletins, articles in internal publications and the inclusion of the bonus in various Benefits Agency general information guides. In addition, there have been seminars to raise staff awareness. A Question and Answer briefing will also be issued shortly to remind staff of the scheme.

Family Resources Survey

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate of the number of higher rate tax paying (a) mothers and (b) fathers is provided by her Department's Family Resources Survey. [23108]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Family Resources Survey (FRS) does not provide direct information on the number of mothers and fathers who are higher rate taxpayers. An estimate for 1997–98 from the 1995–96 FRS-based Policy Simulation Model suggests there are around 120,000 mothers and 850,000 fathers who are higher rate taxpayers. The estimates should be treated with some caution as they are based on survey data which use current weekly income which may not accurately represent current annual tax liabilities. Estimates may also be influenced by sampling error and response rates.

Working Mothers

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the employment participation rate of (a) lone mothers and (b) mothers in two-parent families in each European Union country; and if she will estimate what percentage of working lone mothers and working two-parent household mothers are working part-time. [23666]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Notes:

1. For these figures part-time is up to 30 hours.
2. Figures used for Germany are updated figures and have not been published, therefore any interpretation of these figures should be treated with caution. The updated figures for the percentage of employed lone mothers and married/cohabiting mothers working part-time are not available.
3. The information for Greece is not available in the form requested. For 51 per cent. of women in the likely age group were economically active and 5 per cent. of working women worked part-time.
4. The figure for employment participation rates in Austria excludes 20 per cent. of lone mothers and 13 per cent. of married/cohabiting mothers who are on parental leave.
5. There are no data available on the percentage of working lone mothers and married/cohabiting mothers working part-time in Spain and Ireland.

IT Equipment

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her Department's policy regarding the recycling of information technology equipment within her Department and relevant agencies and to other Government departments or agencies; and what arrangements have been made in this respect. [23246]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The policy regarding recycling of information technology equipment is that in all items of equipment which become surplus in one area are redeployed elsewhere in the Department, subject to being fully operational and Year 2000 compliant.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she intends to introduce a fast-track scheme for carers of terminally ill people to claim invalid care allowance; and if she will make a statement. [24138]

Mr. Denham: There is already a prompt turn-around time, averaging some 19 working days, on all claims for Invalid Care Allowance (ICA). If, whilst waiting for ICA, carers are in financial hardship, they may be entitled to income-related benefits.

Low Pay

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the numbers and distribution of workers earning less than the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions (a) by gender and (b) by region and nation. [24354]

Mrs. Liddell: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 21 January 1998:

I have been asked to reply, as the Director of the Office for National Statistics, to your recent question on workers earning less than the lower earnings limit for National Insurance contributions.

Estimates from the Labour Force Survey are shown in the attached table. The average of the last four quarters have been used in order to provide a larger sample and therefore more reliable estimates than could be obtained from only one quarter. Earnings estimates for Northern Ireland are not available from the Labour Force Survey.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministerial Visit

19. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Prime Minister when he next expects to visit Banbury. [22010]

The Prime Minister: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Prime Minister how many (a) special advisers, (b) task force members and (c) review body members his Department employs; what is the total salary and benefits of (a) to (c); and what was the equivalent cost prior to 1 May. [19310]

The Prime Minister: My office employs 17 full-time and two part-time Special Advisers. It does not employ any Task Force or Review body members on a salaried basis, the same position as before 1 May.

A direct comparison of costs is not sensible, as the roles that my Special Advisers undertake are different from those of the previous Administration. For example I do not employ an Efficiency Adviser in No. 10, nor is there a Head of the Policy Unit, and some Special Advisers in the Policy Unit deal with areas which in the past have been covered by civil servants. Similarly the figures include a Special Adviser in the Strategic Communications Unit which has been funded by savings across Government Departments.

The projected cost of the No. 10 Special Adviser paybill for 1997–98 is £849,894. The figure includes Special Advisers in the Strategic Communications Unit who like all members of the Unit are funded by contributions from all Departments. The cost of the 7–8 Special Advisers in 1996–97 was £434,249.

Cabinet Committees

Mr. Healey: To ask the Prime Minister what new Ministerial Committees of the Cabinet have been established since 9 June 1997. [24434]

The Prime Minister: I have set out below the names and membership of the Cabinet Committees established since 9 June. In addition to the members listed, other Ministers are invited to attend meetings as necessary.

The Committee is chaired by the Prime Minister. Other Ministers and Liberal Democratic Spokesmen are invited to attend as necessary.

Terms of Reference: "To consider policy issues of joint interest to the Government and Liberal Democratic Party."

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Disabled Members

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Council what additional allowances are paid to Members with disabilities. [23352]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: None, although certain Members with disabilities are entitled to a higher limit of the Office Costs Allowance.

SCOTLAND

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ensure that the funding of further education colleges does not decrease in 1999–2000 because of changes in accounting for fees relating to the summer term 1999. [21876]

Mr. Wilson: Public expenditure decisions for 1999–2000, including those relating to further education, will not be taken until the Comprehensive Spending Review is completed later in the year.

Water Contamination

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what emergency procedures are in place in respect of (a) the East of Scotland and (b) the West of Scotland water authorities to deal with contamination to local water supplies. [22482]

Mr. MacDonald: Both water authorities have detailed emergency procedures to deal with contamination of local water supplies. In terms of East of Scotland Water Authority, these are called the Consolidated Waterborne Hazard Plan and in the West of Scotland Water Authority, these are called the Emergency Procedures Manual.

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Scottish Parliament will have the power to refuse to implement any United Kingdom tax proposals. [23306]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 16 January 1998]: It would not be for the Scottish Parliament to implement UK tax proposals. Under the proposals in the Scotland Bill, the Scottish Parliament will have full legislative competence over local taxation to fund local authority expenditure. In addition, the Scottish Parliament would be able to exercise the tax-varying power provided by Part IV of the Bill. Otherwise decisions on taxation will be for the United Kingdom Parliament and Government.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his current estimate of the costs of temporary accommodation and facilities for a Scottish Parliament in each year before a new building on the Holyrood site is completed. [23850]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 19 January 1998]: A number of venues are being considered but it is too early to say at this stage what the estimated costs will be. My right hon. Friend intends to make an announcement on temporary accommodation by Easter.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hon. Members were briefed about the details of the proposals for siting the Scottish Parliament at Holyrood before the decision was made on the site. [23538]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 19 January 1998]: My right hon. Friend had discussions with all the main Opposition Parties in Scotland before reaching his final decision.

IT Equipment

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's policy regarding the recycling of information technology equipment within his Department and relevant agencies and to other Government departments or agencies; and what arrangements have been made in this respect. [23235]

Mr. Dewar: My Department redeploys information technology equipment whenever it is cost-effective to do so. Where it is not cost-effective to redeploy equipment, it is traded in through an equipment broker against new purchases as part of our standard competitive tendering approach to IT procurement. The equipment which is traded in is generally refurbished for resale or is added to spares stock. My Department takes account of the environmental management policies of equipment brokers in deciding where to place this business.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what basis the Lord Advocate on 15 January claimed that the Professor of Scots Law in the University of Edinburgh, and a Queen's Counsel, had accepted money from Libyan connected sources concerning the Lockerbie case. [24486]

Mr. McLeish: My noble and learned Friend, the Lord Advocate made no such claim.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Abattoirs

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the factors underlying the transfer of payment of SRM costs from Government to abattoirs. [20260]

Mr. Rooker: The Government have concluded that the cost of Specified Risk Material (SRM) enforcement by the Meat Hygiene Service should no longer be borne by the taxpayer. It is in the industry's best interests that controls should be in place, that the costs should be shared fairly, and the industry should contribute towards the cost of enforcement as it already does with hygiene controls. We will be consulting shortly on the legislative proposals to introduce this change from 1 April 1998.

Vitamin Supplements

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from (a) consumers, (b) retailers, (c) manufacturers, (d) experts on nutrition and (e) right hon. and hon. Members about his proposals to restrict the retail sale of vitamin B6 supplements; how many and what percentage of those representations have opposed his proposals; what response he has made to those representations; and if he will make a statement. [23514]

Mr. Rooker: Since the beginning of July 1997, the Government have received approximately 11,500 items of correspondence, many in standard form, concerning its proposed controls on food supplements containing vitamin B6. Of those, approximately 1,300 have been received from right hon. and hon. Members. No separate record has been kept of the number of representations received from consumers, retailers, manufacturers and experts on nutrition. Nor has any record been kept of the number of representations received which oppose the proposed controls. However, almost all of the letters received have opposed, questioned the basis of, or expressed reservations about the proposed controls.

The Government's response to these representations will have varied according to the nature of the representation received, but in most cases it will have included an explanation of the background to the issue and a statement of the Government's policy on it.

The Minister for Public Health and I have met with representatives of certain organisations representing consumers, manufacturers and retailers of dietary supplements and complementary medicine interests to discuss the proposed controls. I have also met with a number of right hon. and hon. Members to listen to their concerns about this subject.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the main findings of the compliance cost assessment recently undertaken in connection with the proposed statutory instrument relating to new restrictions on the retail sale of vitamin B6 supplements; and what estimate was made of the cost to the National Health Service of consumers being required to obtain higher dose vitamin B6 supplements from a medical practitioner. [23513]

Mr. Rooker: The compliance cost assessment relating to the Government's proposals on food supplements containing vitamin B6 is still being prepared. The assessment will form part of the regulatory appraisal which, together with the draft regulations, will be circulated for consultation.

It is impossible to estimate the number of people who regularly take any dose of vitamin B6. Therefore, it is not possible to assess the resource implication for the NHS if the number of people seeking higher doses of vitamin B6 were to consult their general medical practitioner.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the period for consulting with interested parties on the forthcoming draft statutory instrument on the retail sale of vitamin B6; and if he will make a statement specifying the criteria by which he will assess the responses to that consultation exercise. [23516]

Mr. Rooker: We hope to issue the draft regulation and the regulatory appraisal for consultation in February. No final decision has yet been taken on the duration of the consultation period. We will consider responses on their merits.

Over-quota Fish

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the correct procedure for disposing of over-quota dead or dying fish that are caught as a mixture of species. [23744]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 19 January 1998]: Under the conditions set out in UK fishing vessel licences, over-quota fish must not be retained on board, transhipped or landed. Such fish should be returned to the sea. Where the discarding of fish is prohibited in the waters of third countries, any over-quota fish should be discarded immediately on return to Community waters.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what effect the establishment of the Food Standards Agency will have on the current role of local authorities in analysing food for food safety purposes. [24153]

Mr. Rooker: Under the proposals in the White Paper, "The Food Standards Agency: A Force for Change", local authorities will retain responsibility for enforcing general food law under the Food Safety Act 1990, and will therefore continue to need access to a high quality analytical service. A review of the structure of the Public Analyst Service in England and Wales, and the provision of scientific services to local authorities in Scotland, will be initiated early this year.

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the role of local authorities within the remit of the Food Standards Agency. [24154]

Mr. Rooker: The White Paper "The Food Standards Agency: A Force for Change" proposes that local authorities retain their current responsibility for the enforcement of general food law under the Food Safety Act 1990. The Government are discussing with local authorities measures to improve consistency and, where necessary, remedy any deficiencies in enforcement activity by individual authorities. Local authorities will also retain their current responsibilities for investigating food hazards and outbreaks of food-borne illness in conjunction with the relevant bodies, supported where appropriate by the Agency.

IT Equipment

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's policy regarding the recycling of information technology equipment within his Department and relevant agencies and to other Government departments or agencies; and what arrangements have been made in this respect. [23237]

Mr. Morley: Wherever possible, information technology equipment is redeployed within the Department and our Agencies, with equipment being upgraded or used (through recycled parts) to upgrade others as the need arises. These activities can take place through ad hoc programmes or during specific information technology upgrade projects. When redundant information technology equipment can be put to no other use, it is disposed of through a Third Party supplier, conforming with environmental protection requirements. Information technology recycling programmes are carried out separately from those of other Government departments or agencies.

Rendering and Slaughtering Industries

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire on 11 December 1997, Official Report, columns 680–81, (a) what surplus there was after all payments were made from the rendering industry support scheme 1996 and (b) what surplus he expects there to be after all payments are made from the 1997 rendering industry support scheme. [24382]

Mr. Rooker: Of the £118 million originally made available under the Rendering Industry Support Scheme 1996, around £97 million of support has been paid.

The purpose of the scheme was broadly to replace loss of income for the rendering industry in 1996–97 compared with 1995–96 and thereby to ensure that the animal waste chain continued to operate following the loss of the markets for the rendering industry's products in March 1996. This was achieved.

Support under the Rendering Industry Support Scheme 1997 is based on output of mammalian meat and bone meal and tallow. Of the £59 million made available for this scheme, it is not expected that there will be a significant underspend.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Work Force

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to ensure that the United Kingdom has a highly skilled workforce. [24487]

Dr. Howells: Our programme of work for this Parliament is aimed at ensuring that all young people enter employment with the highest possible skills and qualifications and at encouraging people to continue throughout their lives to develop new skills to improve their employability. The School Standards and Framework Bill and the Teaching and Higher Education Bill and our soon to be published White Paper on Lifelong Learning set out some of the key ways in which we plan to raise standards and obtain a highly skilled workforce.

We are also developing the National Skills Agenda and the Skills Task Force and a Skills Unit to identify where skills gaps exist and how they should be addressed.

IT Equipment

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his Department's policy regarding the recycling of information technology equipment within his Department and relevant agencies and to other Government Departments or agencies; and what arrangements have been made in this respect. [23240]

Dr. Howells: The Department's policy is to re-use information technology equipment. We so rarely have surplus equipment of any value to other Departments or agencies that no special arrangements are justified.

We have recently made new arrangements to give surplus desktop equipment to a non-profit organisation to recycle it for use by local education, training and employment bodies or projects. The first items of equipment recycled in this manner will be issued in the near future. Other surplus equipment is sold by public auction.

School Standards

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what numerical rating on Ofsted's scale 1 to 7 its inspectors are required to put in their official Judgment Recording Form subject reports, for each subject of the National Curriculum, when they judge the pupils' comparative standards of achievement to be (a) in line with national expectations at any National Curriculum Key Stage and (b) in line with any national average; [24139]

(2) what are the statistical correlations between Ofsted inspectors' ratings of Year 6 cohorts' comparative standards of achievement (a) on scale 1 to 7 in their official Judgment Recording Form subject reports and (b) on scale 1 to 5 in their PICSI reports in respect of the same cohorts' comparative standards of Key Stage 2 national SAT test achievement in the same year of inspection in (i) English, (ii) maths and (iii) science for all maintained primary schools first inspected in each school year since 1994–95; [24142]

(3) what proportion of those maintained primary schools first inspected by Ofsted in each school year since 1994–95 and cited as national models of excellence in Her Majesty's Chief Inspector's annual report have a rating on an appropriate statistical scale 1 to 7 in relation to the national averages for their pupils' comparative standards of achievement in attaining the nationally expected level or better in at least one or more of their Key Stage 2 SAT tests in (a) English, (b) maths and (c) science for the year of inspection that is different from the inspectors' ratings on

Ofsted's scale 1 to 7 in the official Judgment Recording Form subject reports of those same cohorts' comparative standards of achievement in those subjects; [24265]

(4) what proportion of those maintained primary schools first inspected by Ofsted in each school year since 1994–95 in each year have a rating on an appropriate statistical scale 1 to 7 in relation to the national averages for their pupils' comparative standards of achievement in attaining the nationally expected level or better in at least one or more of their Key Stage 2 SAT tests in (a) English, (b) maths and (c) science for the year of inspection that is different from the inspectors' ratings on Ofsted's scale 1 to 7 in their official Judgment Recording Form subject reports of those same cohorts' comparative standards of achievement in those subjects; [24267]

(5) what proportion of those maintained primary schools first inspected and also found failing by Ofsted in each school year since 1994–95 in each year have a rating on an appropriate statistical scale 1 to 7 in relation to the national averages for their pupils' comparative standards of achievement in attaining the nationally expected level or better in at least one or more of their Key Stage 2 SAT tests in (a) English, (b) maths and (c) science for the year of inspection that is different from the inspectors' ratings on Ofsted's scale 1 to 7 in their official Judgment Recording Form subject reports of those cohorts' comparative standards of achievement in those subjects; [24268]

(6) what are the statistical correlations of all maintained primary schools first inspected and found failing in each school year since 1994–95 between Ofsted inspectors' ratings of their Year 6 cohorts' comparative standards of achievement on Ofsted's scale 1 to 7 in their official Judgment Recording Form subject reports and Ofsted's ratings on its scale 1 to 5 as used in its PICSI reports of those cohorts' comparative standards of Key Stage 2 national SAT test achievement in the same year of inspection in (a) English, (b) maths and (c) science; [24269]

(7) what are the statistical correlations for all maintained primary schools first inspected in each school year since 1994–95 and cited as a national model of excellence in Her Majesty's Chief Inspector's annual report for that same year, between Ofsted inspectors' ratings of their Year 6 cohorts' comparative standards of achievement on Ofsted's scale 1 to 7 in their official Judgment Recording Form subject reports and Ofsted's ratings scale 1 to 5 as used in PICSI reports of those same cohorts' comparative standards of Key Stage 2 national SAT test achievement in the same year of inspection in (a) English, (b) maths and (c) science; [24270]

(8) for all Ofsted primary inspections in each separate school year of inspection since 1993–94 to date, what were the officially prescribed calibrated meanings of each of Ofsted's ratings 1 to 7 for the assessment of primary pupils' comparative standards of Key Stage 1 and 2 achievement in each subject of the National Curriculum of the relevant cohorts at the time of inspection, in terms of their proportions attaining the nationally expected levels or better for use in inspectors' official judgment recording form subject reports, all school inspections adhered to those meanings, and, if not, what proportion did not in each year. [24387]

Mr. Byers: These are matters for HM Chief Inspector of Schools. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member and place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in what number and proportion of maintained primary schools with Year 2 pupils 100 per cent. of pupils attained National Curriculum level 2 or better (a) in individual and (b) in all Key Stage 1 SAT tests in (i) 1995, (ii) 1996 and (iii) 1997. [24141]

Ms Estelle Morris: The number and percentage of maintained primary schools with 100 per cent. of Key Stage 1 pupils achieving National Curriculum level 2 or better (a) in individual and (b) in all Key Stage 1 assessments tests in (i) 1995, (ii) 1996 and (iii) 1997 are shown in the following table:

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in what number and proportion of all maintained primary schools with Year 6 pupils 100 per cent. of pupils attained National Curriculum level 4 or better in (a) English, (b) maths, (c) science Key Stage 2 SAT tests and (d) all of (a) to (c) in (i) 1995, (ii) 1996 and (iii) 1997. [24140]

Ms Estelle Morris: The number and percentage of maintained primary schools with 100 per cent. of Key Stage 2 pupils achieving National Curriculum level 4 or better (a) English, (b) maths, (c) science and (d) in all Key Stage 2 assessment tests in (i) 1995 (ii) 1996 and (iii) 1997 are shown in the following table:

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what were the results in (a) English, (b) maths and (c) science Key Stage 2 Sat tests trialed by the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority at The Strand Junior School in Grimsby in (i) 1993–94 and (ii) 1994–95 in terms of the percentages of Year six pupils attaining National Curriculum levels 1 to 6. [24266]

Ms Estelle Morris: Information on Key Stage 2 performance for 1993–94 and 1994–95 for named schools is not available.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Domestic Violence

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives the Government propose to address domestic violence; and what central government funding will be available for local and voluntary projects in this field in 1998–99. [23511]

Mr. Michael: The Government are committed to tackling domestic violence and are currently developing a strategy to combat it both through prevention and through support to those who have already been victimised. This will include improving public awareness of the issue and of the help that is available to victims.

Central Government provide core funding to the Women's Aid Federation in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland, and capital and revenue funding for women's refuge spaces. Through the Special Grants Programme, funding has also been made available to Women's Aid Federation (England) to develop training opportunities, resources and facilities for local refuges.

Other central Government provision for local projects includes funding through the Urban Programme for projects in Scotland to help women and children suffering from domestic violence and other forms of abuse: funding from the Welsh Office for local projects in Wales: and funding for local projects in England through the Single Regeneration Budget Challenge Fund.

Prison Education Budget

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the current prison education budget for prisons in England and Wales; and what was the outturn figure for 1995–96. [23289]

Ms Quin: The outturn figure for spend on prison education in 1995–96 was £36,956,000. That is very close to the outturn figure for 1996–97, which was £34,481,000. The Prison Service estimates that in 1997–98, it will have spent just over £36 million.

Each governor has responsibility for deciding how his or her establishment's budget should be allocated for all purposes, including education. But my right hon. Friend is aware of concerns at planned levels of education spending in some Prison Service establishments. The Government see education in prisons and Young Offender Institutions as an important part of the criminal justice strategy, and all policy priorities and spending plans are subject to the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Meanwhile:

- governors are being encouraged to make education provision more purposeful—targeting it specifically at achieving the overall aim of reducing re-offending;
- education is increasingly being provided as an integral part of a managed sentence with specific aims;
- there is a significant rise in the number of prisoners undertaking nationally accredited courses with clear start and finish points with the result that fewer prisoners are engaged in full-time education;
- alternative ways of delivering basic education are under development, such as training industrial instructional officers to teach basic skills in the workplace.

Obscene Material

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that on-line service and access providers, including telecommunications companies, take legal and administrative responsibility for ensuring that material which is transmitted or delivered by them does not include obscene material. [23578]

Mr. Michael: Generally, the position in law is that what is illegal off-line is illegal on-line. The Obscene Publications Act 1959 therefore applies to material published via the Internet as does specific legislation relating to child pornography (the Protection of Children Act 1978, as amended). Everyone, including service and access providers and telecommunications companies, bears responsibility for their own conscious acts and omissions and are responsible for the material published to the extent that they are aware of it.

It follows that there is a strong incentive for service providers to act to uphold the law. The Internet Watch Foundation—a self-regulatory body funded by the United Kingdom Internet industry—was established in September 1996. It provides a "hotline" to which anyone can report material on the Internet which they consider may be potentially illegal. If the material is likely to be illegal under United Kingdom law, and it originates outside the United Kingdom, a report is passed through the National Criminal Intelligence Service to the enforcement authority in the country of origin. If it originates in the United Kingdom, a report is passed to the relevant service provider as well as the relevant United Kingdom police force. Service providers may then ask the user to remove the material or cease the activity on United Kingdom servers; or ultimately may do this directly themselves.

I understand that service providers are diligent when they are made aware of illegal material and regularly co-operate with the police in the course of any investigation, for example, in identifying the originator of the potentially illegal material or activity.

Wheel Clamping

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to regulate the activities of wheel-clamping firms; and if he will make a statement. [23299]

Mr. Michael: The Government are considering the regulation of wheel-clamping in the context of the introduction of statutory measures to regulate the private security industry as a whole. We have recently conducted a consultation exercise seeking the views of the industry, the police and others on the type and scope of regulation which might be considered for the private security industry. A number of parties who have an interest in wheel-clamping, including the Automobile Association and the Royal Automobile Club, responded to this exercise. We intend to develop practical proposals which will protect the rights and safety of the public without introducing unnecessary bureaucracy.

Metropolitan Police

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost to the Metropolitan Police of supporting the work of (a) the Association of Chief Police Officers and (b) other outside organisations in the last year for which figures are available. [23984]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner tells me that the cost of the Metropolitan police's share of supporting the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) Secretariat in the financial year 1997–98 is £139,033. The cost of time spent by senior officers in the Metropolitan Police on ACPO business is not captured separately. The total cost to the Metropolitan Police of supporting the work of other organisations is not collected centrally. However, the financial cost to the Metropolitan Police of supporting any named organisation can be provided if it is needed.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the extra training costs (a) in respect of the Metropolitan Police and (b) nationally, as a result of the tenure policy; and what increases are planned in (i) recruitment and (ii) funding to take account of such retraining. [23964]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner informs me that there has been no increase in the Metropolitan Police's training budget as a result of the introduction of the tenure policy and that there are no plans to increase the number of recruits in response to the policy, although he plans to recruit 1,650 officers in the financial year 1998–99 from within existing budgets. Information in respect of other forces in England and Wales could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

No additional funding to police forces to take account of the introduction of tenure policies is planned, nor would we expect there to be any significant implications for training.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many uniformed officers were on beat duty (a) in London and (b) in Twickenham (i) at the latest available date and (ii) 12 months previously. [23963]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has provided the available information as follows:

Uniform Constables performing street duty

	Twickenham	Metropolitan police service
Average per day in September 1997	56.5	[1]4,155.0
Average per day in September 1996	57.1	[1]4,306.9

[1] As a result of problems with the Metropolitan Police's computer system, these figures do not include the following Divisions: Brixton; Chingford; Forest Gate; Hackney; and Shoreditch and Golders Green.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the recruitment targets for the Metropolitan Police Service in (a) 1997 and (b) 1998. [23935]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that he is currently planning the following staffing levels:

	Police officers	Civil staff	Traffic wardens
31 March 1998	26,800	13,488	1,180
31 March 1999	26,950	[1]13,372	1,020

The latest figure the Metropolitan Police has on recruitment of officers in the financial year 1997–98 is 1,181 officers. Strength as at 31 March 1997 was [2]26,677. The Commissioner tells me that in order to replace wastage and reach his 31 March 1999 police target, the Metropolitan Police plan to recruit 1,650 new officers during 1998–99 financial year.

[1] This includes the effect of major outsourcing contracts.

[2] This figure include officers seconded to the Metropolitan Police but not those seconded out to regional crime squads and central services.

Combined Emergency Service (London)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on discussions over the creation of a combined emergency service for London, involving the fire and ambulance services. [23932]

Mr. George Howarth: There are no discussions taking place about the creation of a combined fire and ambulance service for London. From time to time, the services discuss whether there are opportunities for co-operation, for example, in the use of accommodation or in the provision of emergency assistance to casualties, where a fire appliance is first in attendance at an incident. As part of the Home Office Comprehensive Spending Review, fire service interests in England and Wales have also been asked to consider whether there is greater scope for collaboration with other emergency services.

Police Stations (London)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which police stations in London (a) ceased operation and (b) ceased to offer a 24-hour service in (i) 1996 and (ii) 1997. [23943]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner has provided the following information:

Year	Stations closed	Stations with reduced "front desk" hours
1996	Cobham	Collier Row
	East Molesey	Finchley
	Stoneleigh	Harold Hill

CS Gas

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the impact of the introduction of CS gas on the number of assaults and injuries to police officers in London. [23934]

Mr. Michael: The information is not available to make a full assessment of the impact of the introduction of CS gas on the number of assaults and injuries to police officers in London. Following trials in six operational common units, the Commissioner approved the issue of CS spray across the Metropolitan Police in October 1997. Fifty of the 97 Operational Command Units are now using CS sprays. The remainder are expected to do so by the end of March 1998. The Commissioner informs me that between July 1997 and January 1998, Metropolitan Police officers discharged CS spray on 128 separate incidents. In 102 of those incidents, officers were uninjured.

Drugs-related Crimes (Northumberland)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many drug-related crimes there were in Northumberland in each of the last three years for which figures are available. [24026]

Mr. Michael: Figures on the number of drug-related crimes are not available either nationally or for Northumberland because of the difficulty of identifying and separating drug-related offences from other sorts of offending in order to produce dependable statistics. Recorded crime is generally collected and published according to the type of offence as defined by statute.

Child Safety and Parenting Orders

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what estimate he has made of the increase in the number of children who will be made the subject of a care order as a result of the operation of the child safety order provisions of the Crime and Disorder Bill; [23972]

(2) what estimate he has made of the increase in numbers of (a) probation officers, (b) social workers, (c) local authority education staff and (d) health authority staff which will be occasioned by the child safety and parenting provisions of the Crime and Disorder Bill; [23969]

(3) if he will provide a breakdown of his estimate that the additional costs of child safety orders and parenting orders will not exceed £4 million per annum. [23970]

Mr. Michael: The costs of implementing the youth justice measures contained in the Crime and Disorder Bill, including the child safety order and the parenting order, will depend on the use which the courts make of the new powers and the effect of the measures on offending behaviour. The Government have indicated in their White Paper "No more excuses: A new approach to tackling youth crime in England and Wales" (Cmd 3809) that it will pilot many of the youth justice measures, including the child safety order and the parenting order.

Pilot trials will enable an accurate estimate to be made of the costs and savings that will result when these measures are fully implemented. The financial memorandum of the Crime and Disorder Bill estimated that, depending on how the parenting order and the child safety order are used, additional costs will not exceed £4 million. This is broken down as follows:

Parenting orders: £3.75 million

Child safety orders: £0.25 million

We expect the parenting order to be used more widely than the child safety order because the former will be available in a wider range of circumstances. The parenting order will be available for parents of convicted young offenders, for parents of children who have been made the subject of an anti-social behaviour order, sex offender order or child safety order and for parents who have been convicted of failing to send their children to school.

The Financial Memorandum of the Crime and Disorder Bill sets out the effects of the Bill on public service manpower. These proposals are not anticipated to have a significant impact on public service manpower. The way that youth justice services are provided within the youth offending teams, established under the Crime and Disorder Bill, will be a matter for local decision by local authorities, the police, the probation service and health authorities. The youth justice plan which the Bill requires local authorities to draw up in consultation with the other agencies will have to set out how youth justice services in their area are to be provided and funded and how youth offending teams are to be composed and funded.

It is too early to say how many care orders will be made for breach of the requirements for a child safety order. This will be one of the issues about which the pilots will provide information.

Children (Crime)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children, aged (a) 10 and (b) 11 were convicted of offences which would be punishable with imprisonment in the case of a person aged 21 years or over in (i) the last year for which figures are available and (ii) each of the preceding 10 years. [23966]

Mr. Michael: The information is given in the table.

[1] Under the Criminal Justice Act 1991 custodial penalties are available from the common minimum age of 15 for both boys and girls (previously the minimum age was 14 for boys and 15 for girls).
[2] Children aged 10 and 11 convicted at the Crown Court may be sentenced to be detained for up to the adult maximum, including life, under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933, as amended by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names of the respondents to his Tackling Youth Crime consultation paper who (a) were in favour of the local child curfew scheme, (b) were against the local child curfew scheme and (c) commented that the age range for the scheme should not be limited to those below 10 years of age. [23971]

Mr. Michael: In responding to the consultation paper, "Tackling Youth Crime" by 8 December 1997, organisations commented on the nature and details of proposals to introduce local child curfew schemes. Overall, the responses from the following organisations and individuals:

(a) were broadly in favour of the principle of introducing local child curfews schemes.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what research has been carried out or commissioned by his Department into (a) the need for, and (b) the effects of the imposition of custodial sentences on children aged (a) 10 and (b) 11 years; [23967]

(2) what representations he has received in favour of the introduction of custodial sentences for children aged (a) 10 and (b) 11 years. [23968]

Mr. Michael: The Government's proposals to reform custodial arrangements for 10 to 17-year-olds are set out in the White Paper, "No More Excuses—A new approach to tackling youth crime in England and Wales" (Cmnd 3809). These proposals will provide for a more coherent and effective custodial framework for the sentencing and remand of young offenders, where this is necessary and appropriate.

The proposals include a new constructive and more flexible custodial sentence for 10 to 17-year-olds, the Detention and Training Order, which will replace the Sentences of Detention in a Young Offender Institution (for 15 to 17-year-olds) and the Secure Training Order. The Government do not propose to change the existing provisions under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 to impose custodial sentences on 10 to 17-year-olds convicted of "grave crimes". The new Order will be introduced only for 12 to 17-year-olds in the first place. The Government will introduce the Detention and Training Order for 10 and 11-year-olds only should it prove necessary or desirable to do so; this will be subject to Parliamentary approval. The new Detention and Training Order will provide a clear focus on preventing offending in line with proposed new statutory aim for the youth justice system. It will allow young offenders to be placed in secure accommodation appropriate to their age and maturity.

In developing their proposals on the Detention and Training Order, the Government have taken advice from my right hon. Friend's Task Force on Youth Justice, which is composed of experts with experience of youth justice. A summary of the Task Force's advice was placed in the Library on 2 December.

There is no Home Office research on the effect of custodial sentences on children of 10 and 11 years old, partly because of the very small number of children in this age group who are sentenced to custody under the existing provisions.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time taken by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate to process to completion applications for British citizenship; and if he will make a statement. [23917]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: At 31 December 1997, the Nationality Directorate was taking on average 15.8 months from receipt to completion for Nationality applications.

Working practices and organisation in the Nationality Directorate are currently being looked at internally in order to improve the service to applicants. Next year, the introduction of the Caseworking Programme in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate will produce efficiency savings which will speed up the processing of these applications.

Court Welfare Service

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the operation of the Court Welfare Service. [24116]

Ms Quin: Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Production carried out a thematic inspection of the operation of the court welfare service last year, concluding that overall the work was being carried out to a good standard. A copy of the report, which was published in November, is in the Library. I have no present plans to ask the Inspectorate to carry out a further inspection of this aspect of the probation service's work, although we are currently considering it, along with the service's other responsibilities, as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

British Citizenship Applications

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the Government is taking to reduce the length of time applicants for British citizenship wait before receiving decisions on their cases. [24291]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) on 17 December 1997, Official Report, column 172.

Performing Animals (Licences)

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many licences issued under the Performing Animals (Regulation) Act 1925 have been cancelled in the last 10 years; [24065]

(2) what legal obligation there is on local authorities to hold copies of licences issued under the Performing Animals (Regulation) Act 1925; and what procedure is available for a holder of a licence to cancel a licence when it is no longer needed; [24063]

(3) how many animals were listed in total on the licences issued under the Performing Animals (Regulation) Act 1925 in each of the last 10 years. [24064]

Mr. George Howarth: Regulation of the use of animals under the Performing Animals (Regulation) Act 1925 is undertaken by a system of registration, and not by a system of licensing. A person training or exhibiting animals must register with the relevant local authority.

Section 1(2) of the 1925 Act provides that every local authority should keep a register of persons who exhibit or train animals.

Under section 4(2) of the 1925 Act, where a person is convicted of an offence under the Act, or the Protection of Animals Act 1911, the court can order the name of the person to be removed from the register. Information on the number of such removals is not held centrally.

The number of animals listed in the registration documents held by the Home Office, in each of the last 10 years, is as follows:

1988: 1,416
1989: 1,355
1990: 1,090
1991: 613
1992: 2,040
1993: 2,857
1994: 143
1995: 611
1996: 151
1997: 545.

Probation Service

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library the reports of studies commissioned on the effectiveness of the probation service. [24243]

Ms Quin [holding answer 20 January 1998]: It is our standard practice to place in the Library copies of reports by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Probation of thematic inspections and inspections of the quality and effectiveness of area probation services. We also place in the Library reports prepared as part of the Home Office Research Programme, an important part of which involves evaluating both the effectiveness of work carried out by probation services, with a view to developing good policy and practice, and the implementation of new policy initiatives involving the probation service, with a view to establishing the extent to which the intended aims are being achieved.

Counterfeit Goods

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions there have been in each year since 1987 for (a) manufacturing and (b) trading in counterfeit goods. [23996]

Mr. Michael: The information held centrally by my office on the number of convictions under the appropriate legislation is given in the table. It does not distinguish offences involving manufacture or trade nor the type of item involved.

It should also be noted that the information is based on returns made by the police to the Home Office and although these include offences where there has been no police involvement, such as those prosecutions instigated by Government Departments (in this case local authority trading standards offices) and private organisations and individuals, the reporting of these types of offence is known to be incomplete.

Information is given for the years 1986, 1988, 1990, 1992, 1994 and 1996. To supply further data would be at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the value of counterfeit (a) clothing, (b) perfumes and (c) jewellery seized by the police in each year since 1987. [23998]

Mr. Michael: Information relating to the seizure by the police of counterfeit goods is not collated centrally. Neither do the police record information in a form which would enable the information requested to be collated.

Game Licences

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to abolish or modify the current licences to take game. [23857]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 20 Janaury 1998]: The purposes of the game laws are to regulate the close seasons and assist in the prevention of poaching. The Government are planning to consult about the effectiveness of the present system of licensing.

Firearms Compensation

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff have been deployed to the Firearms Compensation Section; and if he will increase the number in order to accelerate payments under the compensation scheme. [24137]

Mr. Michael: The full staff complement for the Firearms Compensation Section had been set at 52 persons. It was not possible to maintain the initial full complement of 52 staff because of normal staff turnover. Whenever staff of the Firearms Compensation Unit leave or move on, it is our policy to replace them as quickly as possible. At present, efforts at recruiting additional staff are in hand as part of a range of measures to deal with the outstanding payments as quickly as possible. Data processing staff are being introduced to help with the initial registration of claims, allowing the existing staff to concentrate more on processing and authorising payments. Overtime is also worked on a regular basis.

Prisoners (Drugs)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the total numbers of prisoners who have been found in random tests to have taken (a) cannabis, (b) heroin and (c) other illegal drugs since the tests were first introduced; what percentage of prisoners had taken the drugs in each case; and what changes have taken place in the proportions of the three categories of drugs. [24045]

Mr. George Howarth: Table A shows the total number of random tests and the numbers of prisoners who tested positive for cannabis, the opiates and other drugs in each quarter since the first in which all prisons undertook mandatory drug testing. Laboratory screening does not differentiate between heroin and other opiates, so it is not possible to provide figures for heroin alone. Table B shows the percentage of random tests positive for cannabis, the opiates and other drugs in each quarter. It indicates the changes there have been in positive random test results over time. Figures for October to December 1997 are not yet finalised.

Table A: Positive random mandatory drug tests, first quarter 1996–97 to second quarter 1997–98

Drug type	April–June 1996	July–September 1996	October–December 1996	January–March 1997	April–June 1997	July–September 1997	Totals
Cannabis	2,723	2,746	2,947	3,046	2,996	2,490	16,948

Cannabis	20.0	19.8	20.7	20.4	20.0	16.7	19.6
Opiates	5.0	6.1	5.9	4.9	4.1	4.1	5.0
Others[1]	2.6	2.1	1.9	2.2	2.1	1.7	2.1

[1] The other drugs tested for are; cocaine, methadone, amphetamines, benzodiazepines, barbiturates and, optionally, LSD.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the proportion of illegal drugs discovered in random tests in prisons for which the source was (a) relatives of inmates visiting the prison, (b) others visiting the prison, (c) prison staff and (d) other sources, in the past three years. [24047]

Mr. George Howarth: There are no centrally compiled figures from which such an estimate could be drawn, and obtaining such an estimate could be undertaken only at disproportionate cost.

Prisoners (Alcohol)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons where alcohol has been consumed by inmates in the past three years. [24046]

Mr. George Howarth: There are no centrally compiled records of where alcohol has been consumed by inmates in the last three years. However, since the beginning of 1997, records have been kept of prisoners charged and found guilty under the new Prison Rule concerning the consumption of alcohol. The total for 1997 was 80 proven adjudications, including those for aiding and/or attempting the principal offence.

Immigration Advisers

Mr. Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to control immigration advisers. [25045]

Mr. Straw: Our manifesto committed us to controlling unscrupulous immigration advisers. We have examined the options for delivering this commitment and I will tomorrow place at 9 am a copy of a consultation paper in the Library. Copies of the consultation paper will be sent to interested parties and further copies will be available on request. Comments are invited by 23 March.

IT Equipment

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy regarding the recycling of information technology equipment within his Department and relevant agencies and to other Government departments or agencies; and what arrangements have been made in this respect. [23241]

Mr. Straw: In disposing of surplus information technology equipment, the Home Office initially attempts to redeploy it to replace old equipment or meet new requirements. Where this is not possible, equipment is passed to disposal companies for destruction or refurbishment and resale as appropriate.

Intelligence Files

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will instruct M15 to halt its proposed destruction of its intelligence files on individuals and organisations until arrangements have been put in place to assess the way in which these files were compiled. [23411]

Mr. Straw: The Security Service's policy is to destroy only those files which it no longer requires to carry out its statutory functions or which are judged not to be of historical importance or both. I see no need to interfere with that policy in the way proposed by my hon. Friend.

DEFENCE

Meat Procurement

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by country of origin the percentage, based on value, of (a) pork, (b) lamb and (c) beef procured for the armed forces by (i) NAAFI and (ii) other for each of the five years to 1 October 1997; and if he will make a statement. [23975]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer Monday 19 Janaury 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire (Mr. Öpik) on 13 January 1998, Official Report, column 157, in which I gave an estimate on the breakdown of the 12 month period to September 1998. Figures for previous years do not exist.

Booker Foodservice began supplying food to the Armed Forces on 1 October 1997 under the terms of a contract agreed under the previous administration. That contract states that Booker should obtain meat, and for that matter all other products, at the best market prices in order to obtain best value for money for the taxpayer.

Low Flying

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the medical or scientific advice used to ascertain whether noise levels caused by low-flying aircraft are harmful; when noise levels from low-flying aircraft were measured in the Tewkesbury area and what the results were; and what measures are being taken to reduce the risk from the noise of low-flying aircraft. [24134]

Mr. Spellar: My Department has been involved in research into environmental noise and health for many years, supported by the National Physical Laboratory, the Institute of Sound and Vibration Research of the University of Southampton, the University of Salford, and the Medical Research Council. Restrictions on the heights, speeds and operating procedures of military aircraft in the UK reflect medical and scientific advice, and are designed to ensure that noise exposures experienced on the ground are not harmful. As part of our continuing research, a noise measurement trial is currently being carried out at a location near Tewkesbury. The aim is to present the findings at an international conference on noise later this year.

Aviation Movements

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the number of military aviation movements over the last five years in United Kingdom-controlled airspace. [24481]

Mr. Spellar: The total number of military aviation movements using the air traffic control system managed by the London, Scottish and Manchester air traffic control centres is as follows:

	Number
1993	32,546
1994	30,817
1995	31,953
1996	32,434
1997	30,565
Total	158,315

Details relating to other military aviation movements, including military aircraft crossing controlled airspace, are not held centrally and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

WALES

Schools (Revenue Support)

10. Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much additional revenue support has been allocated to Welsh schools in 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [21972]

23. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much additional revenue support has been allocated to Welsh schools in 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [21985]

Mr. Hain: We have allocated £50.267 million additional revenue funding and I have made it clear that the bulk of this must go into schools budgets. Swansea will receive some £3.5 million.

Meat Labelling

11. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from consumers relating to the labelling of meat in supermarkets. [21973]

Mr. Win Griffiths: In the last few months, the Department has received two letters from consumers on this matter.

Welsh Assembly

12. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the site for the National Assembly for Wales. [21974]

Mr. Ron Davies: I issued a consultation paper on 8 December which invites the people of Wales to comment on the location of the National Assembly for Wales. There have been several hundred responses so far. The consultation period ends on 30 January and I expect to announce a decision by early March 1998.

13. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the annual running costs of the proposed Welsh assembly. [21975]

Mr. Ron Davies: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer I gave today to the hon. Member for South Dorset (Mr. Bruce).

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations from north Wales he has received regarding the siting of the Welsh Assembly. [21967]

Mr. Ron Davies: I have already received a number of representations from North Wales about the location of the National Assembly for Wales, and may receive more during the remaining period of my consultation with the people of Wales.

Tree Planting

14. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will encourage tree planting in the Principality. [21976]

Mr. Win Griffiths: We are fully committed to increasing the area of woodland in Wales and we will continue to offer grant aid and advice to landowners to encourage them to plant trees. For example, the Forestry Commission has recently introduced Challenge Funds for creating forests on bracken land in Wales and for establishing native woodlands in National Parks. We shall also be taking steps to encourage the creation of new woodlands on derelict land throughout Wales. Of course, the key to really significant increases in our woodland area is reform of the Common Agricultural Policy. This is one of our principal objectives in Europe, and we are discussing the options with our European partners.

Inward Investment

16. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new proposals he has in respect of inward investment. [21978]

Mr. Hain: We will continue to seek to build and improve on our successful record on inward investment. Since the election we have secured 66 new projects promising over 7,000 new and safeguarded jobs and capital investment of over £445 million.

24. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the prospects for inward investment in Wales. [21986]

Mr. Hain: Since the election 66 investment projects have been recorded which forecast over 7,000 new and safeguarded jobs and capital expenditure of over £445 million. This augurs well for the future and I believe the prospects for future inward investment are good.

27. Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the trend of new inward investment announcements for Wales over the last three months. [21990]

Mr. Hain: In the last three months there has been a number of significant announcements in respect of new inward investment and major reinvestment projects in Wales. During that period 2,150 new jobs have been forecast, involving capital investment of some £226 million, compared with 1,500 new jobs and capital investment of £198 million for the same period a year ago.

Health Service

17. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's strategy for the NHS in Wales. [21979]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The Government's strategy for the NHS in Wales is set out in the White Paper "NHS Wales: Putting Patients First" (Command Paper number 3841), which was published on 15 January. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Beef on the Bone

18. Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the ban on beef on the bone. [21980]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I have received numerous representations regarding the prohibition on the sale of bone in beef products.

Beef Farming

20. Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the state of beef farming in Wales. [21982]

Mr. Win Griffiths: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food announced proposals for a one-off £85 million package on 22 December 1997, Official Report, columns 677–98. It included £60 million under the terms of the agrimoney compensation rules and £25 million for Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances. This aid is contingent upon approval by the European Commission and will be in addition to the £1.4 billion already budgeted to support the beef sector during the current financial year. This is in addition to significant funding in 1997–98 for the beef sector. Every effort is being made to have the export ban lifted. Nevertheless the beef sector remains in long term structural surplus and reform of the CAP beef regime is essential.

Cold Weather Payments

22. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from Welsh pensioners regarding the Cold Weather Payments (Wind Chill Factor) Bill. [21984]

Mr. Win Griffiths: No representations have been received from Welsh pensioners regarding the Cold Weather Payments (Wind Chill Factor) Bill.

Home Starts

25. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of home starts for Wales in 1998–99. [21987]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I estimate that there will be around 9,300 starts in 1998–99. The recently announced spending plans for Tai Cymru will allow 2,300 starts and this will be supplemented by a further 50 housing association starts funded by local authorities under the capital receipts initiative. In the private sector, work is expected to commence on more than 6,900 new homes.

Hill Farmers

26. Mr Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to increase support to hill farmers. [21989]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I refer to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 22 December 1997, Official Report, columns 677–98.

Dental Services

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he is planning to take in 1998 to assist those in rural areas of Wales who do not have access to an NHS dentist. [21977]

Mr. Win Griffiths: In July of last year I announced that I was making £2.5 million available to finance a package of proposals for developing primary care in Wales. This included £250,000 to extend the Welsh Office dental initiative to attract new dentists into Wales. The package also contained £500,000 to finance an Equity Fund which can be used to tackle any deficiencies in NHS dental provision which cannot be addressed by the dental initiative.

Tourism Grants

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the benefits which section 4 tourism grants have provided in Wales. [21981]

Mr. Hain: The scheme was last reviewed in September 1995. It has proved to be a cost effective mechanism for stimulating investment in tourism.

Livestock Market

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the state of the farm livestock market in Wales. [21983]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Trade at livestock markets has been affected by the wider problems facing farmers recently, particularly beef producers. Since September 1997, prices and the number of animals traded have both been on a generally downward trend. The Government announced on 22 December 1997, Official Report, columns 677–98, a substantial one-off aid package of £85 million to help alleviate the current difficulties that producers face. In the longer term, the Government believe that there needs to be a substantial restructuring of the European beef industry and we will be having early consultations with the farming industry on this.

Poor People

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will carry out an assessment of the impact of his Department's current policies on the (a) income, (b) employment opportunities and (c) living standards, of the poorest 30 per cent. of the population. [23339]

Mr. Hain: The Welsh Office continually evaluates its policies using a variety of methods. Our objective is to spread prosperity throughout Wales, and to offer educational and employment opportunities for all.

The best way of improving the living standards of most people at the bottom of the income distribution is to help them into work, and we are implementing a range of policies under the New Deal to achieve this aim.

We have also established a Social Exclusion Programme to help co-ordinate action across the Welsh Office and to find new and more integrated ways of tackling the worst problems.

Road Safety

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he proposes to improve road safety in the vicinity of schools in Deeside. [24157]

Mr. Hain: Children are a road safety priority. Road safety education is an integral part of our approach to reducing road accidents amongst all school children complementing publicity, enforcement and engineering measures. For example, we provide the services of the Traffic Education Adviser for Wales to promote road safety education, particularly through the medium of the Welsh language. We are also supportive of projects which encourage children to take the bus to school or walk and cycle in safety.

I have established the Welsh Transport Advisory Group to provide advice on the development and implementation of an integrated and sustainable transport policy for Wales. The Advisory Group are looking specifically at Safe Routes to School initiatives and will be advising shortly on action which might be taken in this area.

IT Equipment

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his Department's policy regarding the recycling of information technology equipment within his Department and relevant agencies and to other Government departments or agencies; and what arrangements have been made in this respect. [23236]

Mr. Ron Davies: Under a Private Finance Initiative the Department's IT equipment is provided, owned and disposed of by Siemens Business Services. IT equipment that SBS cannot use for spares is sold to a third party for recycling.

Health Common Services Authority

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what plans he has to enable the functions of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority to be carried out after the proposed abolition of the authority; [23778]

(2) if he will make a statement on the future of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority. [23779]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The activities now carried out by the Authority will be located in the Assembly, health Authorities or NHS Trusts and a review group established by the Department is now considering options. It will report in the Spring.

A483

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the projected traffic volumes on the A483 Wrexham bypass at public inquiry stage and the actual levels since the road was opened. [24279]

Mr. Hain: Records of the projected traffic volumes at the time of the public inquiry held in 1970 are no longer available. Annual average daily flows since the bypass was opened are as follows:

Census year	Annual average daily flow
1996	34,796
1993	36,785
1988	24,323
1984	14,562
1974	[1]7,900

[1] Based on an average August day.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

IT Equipment

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his Department's policy regarding the recycling of information technology equipment within his Department and relevant agencies and to other Government Departments or agencies; and what arrangements have been made in this respect. [23244]

Mr. Peter Kilfoyle: Within my Department and its Agencies, IT equipment which becomes surplus in one area of operations is, whenever possible and cost-effective, re-used elsewhere. Where this cannot be achieved, and subject to the requirements of security, surplus equipment is sold at market value to members of staff, to charitable organisations or to the private sector.

HEALTH

Dental Services

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been (a) the budget for general dental services and (b) its outturn for England for each year since April 1992. [22990]

Mr. Milburn: General Dental Services (GDS) expenditure is not cash limited, so there is no set annual budget. The original vote provision, and final gross net expenditure in the GDS in England for the financial years 1992–93 to 1996–97 is shown in the table.

General Dental Service: Gross expenditure for the financial years 1992–93 to 1996–97

England

Hospital Patients (Telephone Inquiries)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average time taken for a telephone inquiry to be dealt with in respect of locating a patient (a) for all hospitals in the UK and (b) at Leicester Royal Infirmary; and what steps he proposes to decrease this time. [23192]

Mr. Milburn: Information on telephone inquiries dealt with by hospitals is not collected centrally.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines exist for dealing with telephone inquiries at (a) all major hospitals and (b) Leicester Royal Infirmary in respect of the locating of patients within hospitals. [23190]

Mr. Milburn: There are no guidelines for dealing with telephone inquiries at all major hospitals. With regards to guidelines for the Leicester Royal Infirmary National Health Service Trust, Professor David Barnett has been asked to write to my hon. Friend with this information as soon as possible.

Leicester Royal Infirmary

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many telephone receptionists there are at Leicester Royal Infirmary; how many receptionists were on duty at Leicester Royal Infirmary on the morning of 6 January; and what computer problems were experienced at Leicester Royal Infirmary on the morning of 6 January; [23189]

(2) what steps he proposes for the modernisation of computer technology to deal with telephone inquiries at Leicester Royal Infirmary in respect of the location of patients. [23191]

Mr. Milburn: This is a matter for Leicester Royal Infirmary National Health Service Trust. We have asked the acting Chairman of Leicester Royal Infirmary NHS Trust, Professor David Barnett, to write to my hon. Friend with this information as soon as possible.

Hormonal Replacement Therapies

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those area health authorities which allow the prescribing of ProGest hormonal replacement therapy cream as a supplement instead of drug-based HRT. [23322]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is unavailable. National Health Service doctors can arrange for their patients to receive complementary medicine treatment such as ProGest for their patients if they feel that there is a need for such treatment.

ME Association

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what support his Department has provided for the ME Association; and what plans he has for future support. [23494]

Mr. Boateng: The Department has funded the Myalgic Encephalomyelitis Association through the Section 64 scheme of grants £37,000 from 1995–96 to 1997–98 and £94,673 for their Development of Support Services project from 1995–96 to 1997–98. Also, Department of Health officials have recently agreed to a meeting with the ME Association to discuss the Royal Colleges' Report on Chronic Fatigue Syndrome/ME and other concerns.

Medical Workforce Standing Advisory Committee

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to implement the Campbell Report on medical manpower. [23365]

Mr. Milburn: The main recommendations of the Third Report of the Medical Workforce Standing Advisory Committee (MWSAC)—the Campbell report—are for the annual intake to UK medical schools to increase by 1,000, a 20 per cent. increase over the target of 4,970 for the year 2000, together with a range of measures to improve the recruitment and retention of doctors.

A number of MWSAC's recommendations coincides with the Government's own thinking and should be welcomed. But the recommendation on increased medical school intake has very significant implications, and will need careful examination.

The Government will announce their decisions on all MWSAC's recommendations in a few months' time in the light of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Psychotherapy Services

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has for reducing the time patients currently have to wait for psychotherapy services; [23466]

(2) on what basis ministers intend to plan for future levels of mental health services with particular reference to (a) counselling and (b) psychotherapy. [23470]

Mr. Boateng: The National Health Service Executive review of psychotherapy services published in 1996 contains practical guidance for the health service on the problems of psychotherapy, including local strategy to reduce waiting times.

NHS Doctors

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he intends to take over the predicted shortfall of doctors in the NHS; and how this will be financed. [23467]

Mr. Milburn: The Government are advised by the Medical Workforce Standing Advisory Committee (MWSAC) on the future balance of medical workforce supply and demand in the United Kingdom and on the intake into UK medical schools. Their third report was published recently.

MWSAC's main recommendations are for the annual intake to UK medical schools to increase by 1,000, a 20 per cent. increase over the target of 4,970 for the year 2000, together with a range of measures to improve the recruitment and retention of doctors.

A number of MWSAC's recommendations coincide with the Government's own thinking and should be welcomed. But the recommendation on increased medical school intake has very significant implications, and will need careful examination.

The Government will announce their decision on all of MWSAC's recommendations in a few months' time in the light of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for the better utilisation of married women doctors in the NHS, who may be unable to work full-time. [23468]

Mr. Milburn: I announced last September a five point action plan for the National Health Service setting out our human resources strategy for the future of the NHS, based on the underlying values of fairness, efficiency and flexibility. This encompasses family friendly employment policies—flexible working arrangements which allow for greater integration of all members of the workforce both in the primary and secondary care environments. These policies are essential if the NHS is to make the best use of staff and sustain the NHS as an attractive employer to people.

We accept that the number of opportunities for flexible working needs to be maximised in order to minimise potential wastage among those doctors who find traditional working patterns too restricting.

A number of key initiatives are contributing towards the need to develop family-friendly employment policies. These are summarised in the Health Department's written evidence of September 1997 to the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Back Pain

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will increase the resources available for the treatment of back pain; and if he will make a statement. [23940]

Mr. Boateng: The Government recognise that back pain is a serious health problem and its treatment involves a wide range of services within the National Health Service. Health Authorities are given general allocations for hospital and community health services to commission health care services for their resident population. General practitioners provide general medical services. It is currently for individual health authorities to decide the level and type of services commissioned in partnership with GPs locally and through consultation with other agencies and local people, taking account of local circumstances and national policies.

Drug Addicts

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds are available for drug addict patients in the Northumberland Health Authority area. [24025]

Ms Jowell: None. Northumberland Health Authority has a contract with Newcastle City Health National Health Service Trust for access to a range of services, including in-patient admissions at the Regional Addictions Service at Plummer Court.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many drug addict patients were treated for detoxification in Blyth Valley (a) in 1994, (b) 1995, (c) 1996 and (d) 1997; and how many returned for detoxification again. [24024]

Ms Jowell: Information in the form requested is not collated by Northumberland Health Authority or the Community Substance Misuse Team.

Elderly Mentally Ill Patients

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many elderly mental illness beds Northumberland Health Authority provides. [23987]

Mr. Boateng: Northumberland Health Authority directly (or indirectly through a Total Fund managed by general practitioners in Tynedale) purchases in-patient mental health care for elderly people from the Northumberland Mental Health National Health Service Trust in the following locations.

Location	Number of beds	Type of service
Tynedale Social Services	20	Assessment, respite and continuing care
Berwick Infirmary	6	Assessment, respite and continuing care
Blyth Social Services	8	Assessment, respite care
Blyth Community Hospital	14	Continuing care
St. George's Hospital	20	Assessment, respite care
St. George's Hospital	46	Continuing care and respite care
St. George's Hospital	20	Assessment/treatment of elderly functionally ill

Northumberland Health Authority, January 1998.

Methadone

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in Blyth Valley are injecting Methadone. [24021]

Ms Jowell: We do not hold the information requested centrally, although the Department of Health's Statistical Bulletin "Drug Misuse Statistics" for the six month period ending 31 March 1996 includes some related data for Northumberland and copies have been placed in the Library.

Northumberland Health Authority report that since the introduction of the Blyth Pilot Supervised Methadone Administration scheme in November 1996 the leakage of methadone onto the illegal market has been reduced, if not eliminated, and the police have not recovered any methadone in Blyth.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients are being prescribed Methadone under supervision in Blyth Valley through the Methadone clinic, substance misuse team and family doctors. [24023]

Mr. Milburn: The Northumberland Health Authority has reported that at the end of November 1997 a total of 69 individuals were supported within the Blyth Pilot Supervised Methadone Administration Scheme.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what data he has collated on medical surveys in the United Kingdom linking dust from opencast mining with high levels of illness among those living close to the workings. [24035]

Ms Jowell: The Department of Health, jointly with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, is currently funding a project designed to look at the effects of opencast mining on health. This project, which started in August 1996, is being undertaken at Newcastle University and is due to be completed this year. The research will improve our understanding of this issue substantially.

The Department is also aware of a recently published study of air pollution and lung function which was undertaken in West Wales and this is currently being considered. A view on the implications, if any, of opencast mining on the health of the local community arising from this study will be issued later in the year.

Cannabis

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the Government have to fund research into the use of cannabis for medicinal purposes. [24042]

Mr. Boateng: Department of Health officials, including professionals, are keeping the available research into the therapeutic use and risks of cannabis under review. Since 1996, expenditure on this activity through the Policy Research Programme has amounted to £10,705. The Department has not recently commissioned basic research in this area. The Medical Research Council provides support for two grants in the general area of therapeutic use of cannabis, amounting to £149,000, both on the role of cannabinoid receptors. The MRC do not support any work specifically into the treatment of particular conditions with cannabis.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times cannabis was prescribed in England between 1968 and 1971; and for which illnesses. [24038]

Mr. Boateng: In this period data for 1970 only are held. In 1970 no prescriptions were dispensed for cannabis.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to meet the British Medical Association to discuss the therapeutic use of cannabis. [24327]

Mr. Boateng: We have no plans to meet the British Medical Association (BMA) to discuss the therapeutic use of cannabis in the near future. However, the Chief Medical Officer and Department of Health officials are meeting with the BMA on 10 March to discuss this issue.

Maternity Hospitals

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many maternity hospitals in England are isolated from pathology, radiology, intensive care and other general hospital facilities; and what are (a) their locations and (b) their approximate distance from such facilities. [23911]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is not held centrally. It is for health authorities and National Health Service trusts to organise local services to meet local needs.

Diabetes Research

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates his Department has made of the likely amount to be spent on research into diabetes in the current year; and how this compares with spending in the last five years. [23914]

Ms Jowell: It is estimated that in the 1997–98 financial year the Department of Health's Policy Research Programme will spend £266,000 on research into diabetes. The total value of studies currently being funded is £1 million.

This compares with funding over the last five years of:

1992–93: £189,000
1993–94: £288,000
1994–95: £366,000
1995–96: £488,000
1996–97: £434,000.

A range of research projects related to diabetes is also being carried out under the centrally funded National Health Service Research and Development Programmes. For example, a study of digital imaging techniques for monitoring diabetic retinopathy will cost £388,644 in total.

The main agency through which the Government support medical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council. The Council spends approximately £3 million a year on research directly into diabetes.

Unleaded Fuel Pollution

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the impact on the number of deaths caused by air pollution of the introduction and use of unleaded fuel. [24039]

Ms Jowell: The Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants (COMEAP) has recently published a major report quantifying the health effects of air pollution. The Committee concluded that current levels of air pollution probably play an important role in precipitating the deaths of at least 12,000–24,000 people each year, though stressed that air pollution is likely to be one of a number of factors affecting the clinical condition of seriously ill people.

COMEAP was able to estimate the health effects for sulphur dioxide, particles and ozone only where a reliable assessment using available scientific evidence could be made and this did not include lead.

There is no evidence to suggest that exposure to airborne lead is a source of death in the United Kingdom. Lead has more subtle toxicological effects, for example on the development of intellectual function in children. The reduction in blood lead concentrations that has occurred during the period when sales of leaded petrol have declined has been encouraging and would suggest that the toxic effects may have also been reduced, though this is difficult to demonstrate. It is also likely that the level of lead in dust and particulate matter will have declined as a result.

One of the measures that the Government are supporting is a ban on the general marketing of leaded petrol in Europe which was agreed at the Environment Council meeting in June 1997 and which will take effect from 1 January 2001.

IT Equipment

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's policy regarding the recycling of information technology equipment within his Department and relevant agencies and to other Government departments or agencies; and what arrangements have been made in this respect. [23239]

Mr. Boateng: When information technology equipment is no longer required for the purpose for which it was bought it will, if possible, be reallocated for other use within the Department or its agencies. Decisions on whether equipment within the Department can be re-allocated or sold are made by the Department's central information technology user support branch. Where there is no further requirement for equipment, it will be sold to the highest bidder. The Department's agencies have similar policies.

NHS Treatment

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of patients, by individual health authority, who received NHS treatment in the last three years. [24277]

Mr. Boateng: Information has been placed in the Library showing the number of Finished Consultant Episodes (ordinary hospital admissions and day cases), by the health authority of treatment. The figures are for England and cover the years 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96, the latest available.

National Performance Framework

Ms Ryan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish the consultation document on the national performance framework referred to in the Government's White Paper "The New NHS". [24662]

Mr. Milburn: We are publishing the consultation document today. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Liverpool Blood Centre

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place the report written by Professor John Cash on the organisation of the Blood Transfusion Service in the Library. [24386]

Mr. Boateng: Professor Cash is currently finalising his report on the services provided by the Liverpool Blood Centre. We propose to publish the report and the Government's response. Copies will be placed in the Library in the usual way.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 22 January 1998

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Land Mines

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the President of the Council, pursuant to the answer of the Secretary of State for Defence of 12 January 1998, to the hon. Member for Monmouth (Mr. Edwards), Official Report, column 130, if she will make it her policy to provide for the Bill to implement the Ottawa Convention to be subject to pre-legislative scrutiny. [24177]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The Government have already said that they plan to introduce legislation as soon as the Parliamentary timetable allows. We will consider nearer the time the most appropriate way.

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the President of the Council which Department will be in charge of the legislation to give effect to the provisions of the Ottawa Convention. [24178]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is the lead Department.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Aid (Rules for Use)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 12 January, Official Report, column 86, which programmes will have a lower priority as a result of her policy to give programmes to combat poverty a higher priority; and what reductions in funding these programmes will receive. [24087]

Clare Short: The final allocation of our resources between programmes for 1998–99 and subsequent years is currently being considered. Priority will be given to interventions which combat poverty. The shift in spending priorities will be detailed in our annual report which we expect to publish next month.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 12 January, Official Report, column 86, what measures she proposes to prevent aid being used for military purchases from countries other than the United Kingdom. [24088]

Clare Short: Department for International Development funding for development projects overseas is subject to existing detailed and stringent procedures involving regular and careful review at the design, implementation and evaluation stages to ensure that they fully meet the developmental purpose for which they are intended, as required in the Overseas Development and Co-operation Act 1980, and are not used for inappropriate military or other purposes.

As I made clear in my answer of 12 January 1998, there is not and will not be any link between aid and sales of British arms equipment.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Coastguard

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the funding for the Coastguard Agency. [22871]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government intend to merge the Coastguard Agency and the Marine Safety Agency on 1 April 1998 to create a new Agency, to be known as the Maritime and Coastguard Agency (the Chief Executive of which will be Mr. Maurice Storey, currently a Director of Stena Line UK). The budget for the new Agency in 1998–99 will be higher than the sum of the current year budgets of the two existing agencies. The longer term funding of the Agency is being considered in the context of the Comprehensive Spending Review, in which we shall of course give due priority to safety and counter-pollution activities.

Advisers

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the special advisers in his Department, the Minister to whom each is responsible and the subjects on which they advise. [23193]

Mr. Prescott: Joe Irvin and Joan Hammell advise me on all my areas of responsibility both as Secretary of State and Deputy Prime Minister. Paul Hackett and Darren Murphy are part-time advisers, who together make up the equivalent of 1 full-time adviser's post, and cover regional and local government issues. David Taylor acts as a part-time, unpaid adviser mainly on regeneration and regional issues.

Kate Davies and Tony Grayling advise my right hon. Friend the Minister of Transport on transport issues.

Use Classes Order

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the Use Classes Order 1987. [23681]

Mr. Caborn: There are no plans to review the Order, although we keep under consideration the need for amendments in the light of representations received.

London Boroughs (Landholdings)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the acreage of land and its current value that is owned by each of the London borough councils. [23285]

Mr. Caborn: This information is not held centrally.

Roads (Greater London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the present major road (a) developments and (b) improvements that are currently being implemented within the Greater London area. [23290]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Taking "road developments" as the building of new roads and "road improvements" as major enhancements to an existing road, the information for local authority projects costing over £2 million and Highways Agency projects costing over £3 million is as follows. Information on lower value projects, privately promoted road projects and maintenance led projects could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. London-wide traffic management programmes are also excluded.

Road Developments

1. Bexleyheath Southern Relief Road and Pedestrianisation, LB Bexley—the relief road is open to traffic but the pedestrianisation has yet to be completed.
2. Hounslow Town Centre Relief Road, LB Hounslow—the relief road is open to traffic but further works are yet to be completed.
3. Future A12, Hackney—M11 Link Road, Highways Agency—the new road is expected to be open to traffic in mid 1999.
4. Future A13, Wennington—Mar Dyke, Highways Agency—the new road is expected to be open to traffic in late 1998.
5. Future A13, West of Heathway—Thames Avenue, Highways Agency—the new road is expected to be open to traffic in mid 1999.

Improvements

1. Bexleyheath Town Centre Traffic Management Scheme, LB Bexley—due for completion mid 2000.
2. Woolwich Road Improvement, LB Greenwich—due for completion 1998.
3. Uxbridge Town Centre Improvements, LB Hillingdon—due for completion mid 1998.
4. Harrow Road/Ladbroke Grove Widening, LBs Westminster and Kensington & Chelsea—due for completion mid 1999.
5. A240 North-South Strategy, LB Kingston—due for completion mid 1999.
6. A11 Stratford Gyratory Modifications, LB Newham—due for completion early 1998.
7. Oxford Street Improvements, LB Westminster—due for completion 2002.
8. Wood Green Spouters Corner Improvement, LB Haringey—due for completion 1999.
9. A406 North Circular Road, Fore Street Underpass, Highways Agency—due to open to traffic early 1998.

Poor People

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will carry out an assessment of the impact of his Department's current policies on the (a) income, (b) employment opportunities and (c) living standards, of the poorest 30 per cent. of the population. [23338]

Mr. Prescott: Many of my departments policies directly address the problems of the poorest 30 per cent. of the population. Examples include: social housing provision; many regeneration initiatives; the rough sleepers initiative; the Home Energy efficiency scheme; and measures to promote transport accessibility.

My department has an extensive research programme which evaluates the impact of these and other policies, and particular attention is placed on assessing whether policies are reaching disadvantaged people and deprived areas. For example, my department is undertaking an extensive evaluation of the SRB challenge fund which includes an assessment of how far funds have gone to deprived areas, and residents surveys to assess whether deprived people are benefiting from the initiative. We have also carried out extensive evaluations of the Rough Sleepers Initiative which have assessed the contribution of the different elements of the RSI to meeting the housing and support needs of people sleeping rough. Through the five yearly English House Conditions Survey we are also able to look at how the circumstances of the poorest households change over time.

More generally, we have commissioned a pilot study in three areas in order to trace how far public expenditure taken as a whole is being targeted on deprived areas where many of the poorest 30 per cent. of the population live.

Of course, I consider the implications for the poor and socially deprived in framing all my policies, whether this is a direct aim of those policies or not.

Water Industry

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made in improving the record of the water industry in respect of (a) leakage, (b) water quality and (c) value for money for consumers. [23697]

Mr. Meacher: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister announced at the water summit in May 1997 a 10-point action plan to help secure a reliable, efficient and environmentally sustainable water industry which recognises that its primary duty is to meet the needs of its customers. The Government are looking for a sustained commitment from the water companies to the actions identified and is asking them for updates on their summit-related activities. There has been considerable progress.

(a) Since the water summit the Director General of Water Services has set mandatory leakage targets for every water company to meet by the end of 1998–99. These will mean a 16 per cent. reduction in total leakage below companies' own targets for 1997–98.

(b) The quality of drinking water is high. 99.7 per cent. of the 3.1 million tests carried out in England and Wales during 1996 met the relevant standards. Data for 1997 are still being collected by the Drinking Water Inspectorate and will be published later this year.

(c) On prices, the Government look to the Director General to set tough new price limits, in his next periodic review of water price limits to apply from 1 April 2000, which represent the best value for money, given the industry's service and environmental obligations. As part of the drive towards meeting leakage targets, all companies now provide free supply pipe leakage detection and repair services for domestic customers.

In addition, the Government are undertaking a fundamental review of utility regulation. The Government want the regulatory framework to deliver value, quality and choice to consumers while providing incentives to managers to innovate and improve efficiency.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many sewage treatment plants in the United Kingdom include ultra-violet treatment systems; and if he will list their locations. [23716]

Angela Eagle: A list from the Environment Agency on locations of the thirty-five sewage treatment works which include ultra-violet treatment in England and Wales is attached in the table. The information relating to Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland respectively.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of ultra-violet treatment of sewage. [23719]

Angela Eagle: Ultra-violet treatment of sewage effluent can be a cost effective method of achieving microbiological water quality standards at some locations. It has been shown to inactivate a wide range of micro-organisms.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce legislation to require ultra-violet treatment of sewage. [23720]

Angela Eagle: Legislation is not needed for this. The type of treatment process used to meet required water quality standards is a matter for the discharger and the environmental regulator.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research he has commissioned into the effectiveness of ultra-violet treatment of sewage. [23718]

Angela Eagle: The Department published comprehensive reviews of sewage disinfection techniques in 1988 and 1992, both of which examined the effectiveness of ultra-violet treatment. They were published by Consultants in Environmental Sciences Ltd. A further review, jointly funded by this Department, the Environment Agency and the water industry, on the fate of enteroviruses through sewage treatment processes, is currently in progress.

Countryside

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Government's proposals on the right to roam will be published; and if he will make a statement. [23819]

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the consultation paper on access to the countryside to be published. [23808]

Mr. Meacher: The Government plan to issue for consultation shortly their proposals for giving greater freedom for people to explore open countryside.

Gipsies

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received about Circular 18/94, in relation to the Police and Criminal Justice Act 1994; and if he will make a statement. [23831]

Ms Armstrong: Sections 77 to 79 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 give all local authorities powers to deal with unauthorised camping, and my Department's Circular no. 18/94, "Gypsy Sites Policy and Unauthorised Camping", gives advice to local authorities on the use of these powers.

My Department has received a number of representations, both from local authorities and from groups representing gypsies and travellers, about the advice in Circular 18/94. We have commissioned a research project to consolidate existing good practice for local authorities in dealing with unauthorised camping, with a view to producing guidance. We will be consulting the Local Government Association and others on a draft of that guidance in the spring.

Professional Divers

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the assessed (a) short and (b) long term health risks to professional divers; and if he will make a statement.[23813]

Angela Eagle: The assessed short-term health risks to professional divers include:

1. decompression illness ("bends");
2. barotrauma;
3. cerebral arterial gas embolism;
4. inert gas narcosis;
5. oxygen toxicity;
6. hypoxia (lack of oxygen);
7. carbon dioxide toxicity;
8. toxicity from other gases, for example carbon monoxide contamination;
9. hyperthemeia and hypothermia;
10. high pressure neurological syndrome in deep diving;
11. infections;
12. transient decreases in haemoglobin levels and lung function during the period of saturation dives.

The longer-term health effects of professional diving are becoming better appreciated as medical knowledge has increased. These longer-term health effects include:

1. dysbaric osteonecrosis;
2. decrease in lung function;
3. changes in neurophysiological function;
4. changes in psychological function;
5. changes in retinal function;
6. changes in audiological function.

The Health and Safety Executive is currently commissioning further research to investigate the potential long-term health effects associated with working in hyperbaric environments.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number of United Kingdom nationals who have registered as professional divers broken down by category for each year since 1979. [23817]

Angela Eagle: All divers at work who dive in UK waters are required to hold a diving certificate issued by the Health and Safety Executive under the Diving Operations at Work Regulations 1981. The following information shows the numbers of UK nationals who have been awarded HSE diving certificates since 1981. Divers working in the UK before the Regulations came into force were exempted from this requirement and consequently do not appear in the table.

	Type of Diving Certificate awarded

Notes

1. HSE currently has four different diving competence standards, called Parts.

   Part 1 Basic Air Diving
   Part 2 Mixed Gas Diving
   Part 3 Air Diving Where No Surface Compression Chamber is Required On Site.
   Part 4 Air Diving With Self Contained Equipment Where No Surface Compression Chamber Is required on site.

2. Under the Parts there are nine variations of the diver training certificates.

HSE Part 1	basic air	— Unrestricted
HSE Part 2	mixed gas/bell	— Unrestricted
		— Restricted to bell diving in air range
HSE Part 3	onshore air	— Unrestricted
		— Restricted to diving in the Police Force
		— Restricted to diving in tanks
		— Unrestricted
HSE Part 4	SCUBA	— Unrestricted
		— Restricted to diving in tanks
		— Restricted to instruction of recreational divers (discontinued in June 1996)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions who is responsible for the hyperbaric medical monitoring of professional divers once they have left the profession. [23816]

Angela Eagle: There is no statutory requirement for the hyperbaric medical examination of professional divers once they have left the profession.

However, the Health and Safety Executive is currently commissioning further research into the potential long-term health effects associated with working in hyperbaric environments. The subject group will include former commercial divers.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much money offshore operators have contributed to hyperbaric medical research since 1979. [23814]

Angela Eagle: The total cost of hyperbaric medical research projects carried out by the Offshore Safety Division of the Health and Safety Executive (and the then Department of Energy) since 1979 is £6.2 million. The offshore industry's contribution is estimated as £1.4 million (approximately 20 per cent. of the total cost).

Tobacco Smoke

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list environmental tobacco smoke as a hazardous substance under health and safety at work legislation. [23811]

Angela Eagle: There are at present no plans to do so. However we intend to review our policies on control of environmental tobacco smoke when we have considered the forthcoming report from the Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health.

Millennium Experience

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the threat to (a) the environment and (b) public health of residual contamination which remains on the Millennium Experience site. [24220]

Angela Eagle: The Exhibition site has been subject to detailed ground investigation and assessment by British Gas Properties/Port Greenwich Ltd. who were the original owners and original polluters, to provide information on the presence of contaminants. English Partnerships bought the site from British Gas early in 1997 and has carried out further investigations.

These assessments have allowed English Partnerships to carry out a safe, practical strategy for the remediation of the site. Rehabilitation proposals have been drawn up in accordance with current guidance from the Interdepartmental Committee for Redevelopment of Contaminated Land and the Environment Agency. The overall rehabilitation strategy has also been discussed and agreed with both the Environment Agency and the Environmental Health Department of the London Borough of Greenwich. All aspects of the remediation work have been carried out to statutory health and safety standards.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if contaminated material found at the site of the Millennium Experience has been disposed of off-site. [24219]

Angela Eagle: The remediation strategy has involved the excavation of contaminated soils, treatment of the soils on site, the maximum re-use of material on the site and the disposal off-site of some of the soil to licensed landfill sites. The selection of sites for disposal is the responsibility of the contractors who, under the provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, operate under a duty of care in the waste handling chain. All the sites used have been licensed by the relevant authority and are suitable for the material being disposed there.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if contaminated material has been buried on the site of the Millennium Experience. [24221]

Angela Eagle: Low levels of contaminated material, have been left in situ in accordance with current Government guidance for contaminated land. The site has been capped with a multi-layered clean-engineered capping material to isolate the site users from this material. Risk assessments have been carried out and the remediation has been designed to protect all possible users from harm.

Global Warming

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate his Department has made of the contribution of aircraft pollution to global warming. [24329]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Aircraft currently contribute some 2-3 per cent. of anthropogenic CO_2 emissions. They also emit NOx, which at altitude may cause a similar global warming effect. The total aircraft contribution to global warming is estimated as being ~0.05 watts per sq m (Wm-2), compared with the combined effect of industrial emissions of ~2 to 3 Wm-2. However, aviation emissions are expected to increase in the future because of the forecast world-wide growth in aviation. My Department will continue to work through the International Civil Aviation Organisation toward stricter emissions standards and to sponsor research on aviation and the environment.

Airport Landing Charges

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the landing charges for comparable airliners at the main United Kingdom and international airports and the changes in Heathrow landing charges since BAA's privatisation. [24066]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The table shows the charges for four typical airliners at Heathrow, Gatwick and Manchester airports compared with other major European airports in ECU.

Since privatisation in 1987, landing and parking charges at Heathrow for a Boeing 757–200 (an example of an aircraft that has been operating throughout the period) have risen by 62.9 per cent. in the peak period and by 69.7 per cent. off-peak. When allowance is also made for passenger charges the increase has been 12.1 per cent. in the peak (to £2,114) and 142 per cent. off peak (to £996). (These calculations have been made assuming that the Boeing 757–200 is operating an international flight with three quarters of its 196 seats occupied and that it will spend one hour parked at Heathrow).

Airport related charges per turn round 1995–96 (in ECU)

Airport	Inter-continental Boeing 747-400 (peak)	Intra-EU A320-100 (off-peak)	Intra-EU Boeing 737-400 (off-peak)	Domestic ATR 42 (peak)
Heathrow	6,552	2,067	3,798	499
Gatwick	6,560	1,703	2,777	393
Manchester	7,527	2,361	3,582	253
Amsterdam	6,531	1,798	2,769	420
Brussels	6,229	1,623	2,552	157
Frankfurt	7,923	2,272	2,933	624
Paris Charles de Gaulle	7,176	1,601	2,023	274

Note:
Peak and off-peak apply at London Heathrow only.
Airport-related charges include:
runway usage fees, passengers terminal charges, passenger transfer charges, parking charges, airbridge charges, security charges, terminal navigation charges, noise charges, night operations or lighting charges, fuel throughput charges, state-imposed departure taxes.

Pride of Bilbao

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what were the findings of the Marine Safety Agency's investigation into the recent crossing to Spain of the Pride of Bilbao; and what assessment he has made of the Agency's investigation. [24056]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Marine Safety Agency, Mr. R.M. Bradley, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 22 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your Question about the vessel "Pride of Bilbao".

The vessel recently completed a voyage from Bilbao to Portsmouth in poor weather conditions which worsened as the passage continued. The Master of the vessel was subsequently interviewed by MSA officials. It was established from weather forecasts available at the outset of the voyage that it was not unreasonable, on safety grounds, for the voyage to commence.

There were several slight injuries on board, the worst of which was a broken arm; no damage to the ship was sustained. All of the injuries sustained have been reported to the Marine Accident Investigation Branch for their consideration.

The MSA is content that the Master did not put to sea in overly adverse conditions and did not compromise safety in any part of the voyage.

Shropshire County Council

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the ability of Shropshire County Council to meet its statutory obligations in the next financial year within his proposed financial settlement. [24431]

Ms Armstrong: The Secretary of State has proposed for consultation that Shropshire's Standard Spending Assessment (SSA) in 1998–99 should be £170.325 million. SSAs are the Government's view of the level of net revenue expenditure that it would be appropriate for each local authority to incur, given overall national resources, to provide a level of service which is consistent across all local authorities. SSAs are calculated by formulae which use objective measures of spending need. We take account of statutory obligations when setting the level of SSA.

Child Pedestrian Accidents

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the United Kingdom record on child pedestrian accidents; and if he will make a statement on the progress of initiatives in this area. [24469]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The United Kingdom has one of the best road safety records in the world, but progress overall on child pedestrian safety has not been as good as in other areas. The previous administration set a target to reduce child pedestrian deaths from 1.3 to 1.0 per 100,000 children by the year 2000 using a combination of engineering, enforcement and education measures. In 1996 there were 1.1 child pedestrian fatalities per 100,000 children aged 0 to 14. Since then we have launched the 'Kerbcraft' initiative designed to encourage local communities to play a part in helping young children to understand the importance of road safety. Improving child safety will be one of the issues addressed in the road safety strategy exercise announced on 15 October.

London Underground

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will make an announcement about the future funding of London Underground, with particular reference to capital investment. [24671]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are urgently developing proposals for a public/private partnership to provide London Underground with the funding it needs to increase investment and achieve the Underground that Londoners deserve. We will make an announcement when we have reached a decision.

Virgin Trains

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many co nplaints were received by the rail users' consultative committees about the services provided by Virgin Trains during (a) the quarter ended 31 December 1997 and (b) the equivalent period in 1996. [24771]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Rail Users' Consultative Committees' complaints figures for the quarter ending 31 December 1997 are currently being collated by the Central Rail Users' Consultative Committee. I will write to the hon. Member when the figures requested are available and will place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

The complaints figures requested for 1996 are not available. Virgin Trains did not commence operation of passenger rail services until 5 January 1997.

Eastern Regional Development Agency

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on where the offices of the Regional Development Agency for the Eastern Region will be sited. [24497]

Mr. Caborn: It is not for Government to dictate where the Agency will be located. The agency itself will be best placed to decide where its offices should be.

Air Traffic Control

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on (a) the current delay in the development of the new air traffic control centre at Swanwick and (b) the implications for the proposed contract for the new Scottish centre at Prestwick. [24143]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Chief Executive of National Air Traffic Services Ltd. (NATS) announced in July 1997 that there would be a delay to the operational date of the Swanwick centre. Following a review of the project plan, and consultation with NATS staff, users and the Government, the Board of the Civil Aviation Authority agreed a revised operational date of 1999–2000. NATS remain confident that this revised date is achievable, and have developed a robust and flexible implementation plan to bring the project to completion.

To date, the delay to the operational date of the Swanwick centre has had no impact on the proposed contract for the New Scottish Centre at Prestwick.

WALES

Sewage Treatment

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the coastal towns in Wales whose sewage receives ultra-violet treatment; and if he will list those towns for which ultra-violet treatment is proposed. [22027]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I am advised by the Environment Agency that ultra violet treatment has been installed at the following sewage treatment works operated by Dwr Cymru Cyf, some of which receive effluent from more than one location.

Llanelli
Laugharne
Amroth
Tenby
Dale
Newgale
Llangrannog
Aberystwyth
Tywyn/Aberdyfi
Criccieth
Pwllheli
Treborth (Bangor)
Beaumaris.

Dwr Cymru has stated that its long-term goal is to provide disinfection at all its coastal sewage treatment works.

Travellers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he will take to assist communities affected by unauthorised encampments of travellers in Flintshire. [24159]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Land authorities and the police have powers under sections 66 and 77–79 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 to direct unauthorised campers, including travellers, to leave land where they are camped without permission.

Although these powers are discretionary, local authorities and the police have wide experience of dealing with unauthorised encampments and it is for them to decide whether the use of the powers is necessary.

Literacy

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to ensure that the development of literacy in the Welsh language is included in the Government's plans to concentrate on maths and literacy in schools. [24292]

Mr. Ron Davies: English and Welsh are dealt with on a basis of equality in the targets we have set for improving standards of literacy. An additional £1.5 million will be available in 1998–99 through the Grants for Education Support and Training Programme to support the development of literacy strategies covering English and Welsh. Local Education Authorities will be able to use these funds in ways which reflect their own language policies.

Farm Support

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps the Government are taking to ensure that Welsh farmers receive their grant payments on time. [24294]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Significant overtime is being worked in the Welsh Office Agriculture Department's Divisional Offices, to help cope with the current delays in getting payments out to farmers. In 1997–98, the Welsh Office is investing an additional £1.4 million in better IT equipment and systems for the Agriculture Department, to secure long-term improvements. An Information Systems Strategy is examining options for investment in new IT programmes. In common with other aspects of delivery of services by Government, administration of Common Agricultural Policy schemes in the UK is being examined as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Serious Fraud Office

34. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the role of the Serious Fraud Office in investigating fraud against the European Union. [22338]

The Attorney-General: The role of the Serious Fraud Office is to investigate and where appropriate prosecute those suspected of serious or complex fraud. The Director of the SFO takes the public interest into account in deciding whether to investigate an allegation of fraud. The fact that the fraud is against local or central government, including frauds involving European Union funds, would be a factor which tends to favour an investigation. The Director may also use her investigating powers to assist other judicial or prosecuting authorities abroad who may be investigating such cases of fraud.

Crown Prosecution Service

35. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received on the effect on morale in the Crown Prosecution Service of extending their rights of audience. [22340]

The Attorney-General: I know from discussions with members of the Crown Prosecution Service at all levels that the rights already granted are very welcome.

Treasury Solicitor's Office

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to reform the operation of the Treasury Solicitor's Office. [22339]

The Attorney-General: The Treasury Solicitor's Department is currently carrying out a Comprehensive Spending Review of its objectives and spending programmes, on which decisions will be made in due course. Other than that, I have no plans to reform the Department's operations at present.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Digital Television and Radio

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he expects digital television and digital radio to be available in North-East Lancashire. [23374]

Mr. Fisher: The BBC and the Independent Television Commission (ITC) are responsible for planning the transmission of digital terrestrial television services. At present, plans are being formulated for the launch phase of digital television services from 81 transmission sites. I understand that the Winter Hill and Pendle Forest transmitters, which are both included in the 81 site plan, will provide digital terrestrial television services to North-East Lancashire. However, the precise coverage will not be known before transmission actually begins. Winter Hill should broadcast from the launch of digital terrestrial transmissions scheduled for later this year and Pendle Forest within 16 months of the launch.

The BBC has already commenced the transmission of digital radio services, and estimates that its national radio services will reach 60 per cent. of the UK population from twenty seven transmitter sites. I understand these BBC services are already available to significant parts of Lancashire. Increasing coverage, including the provision of services from the Pendle Forest relay, will be considered by the BBC as part of subsequent phases of development. The Radio Authority plans to advertise the national commercial digital radio multiplex in March and the projected speed of roll-out of the services it is to carry is one of the factors to be assessed in determining which applicant receives the licence. A local multiplex licence for Central Lancashire is scheduled to be advertised by the Radio Authority in January 2000.

Millennium Commission

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) which local authority areas with populations of more than one million have (a) failed to win and (b) failed to propose a millennium project of £1 million or more; [24532]

(2) what audit the Millennium commissioners originally undertook to establish what projects of £50 million or more were appropriate for the United Kingdom; and what were their findings; [24531]

(3) how many projects have been commissioned by the Millennium Commission to date; of those how many (a) are experiencing financial difficulty, (b) have not secured matching funds and (c) have requested additional funds from the Millennium Commissioners; and what response has been made in each case; [24445]

(4) what (i) penalties will be imposed on and (ii) assistance will be offered by the Millennium Commissioners to projects which do not secure matching funds; and if he will make a statement on the role of the National Audit Office in this area; [24446]

(5) how many Millennium Commission projects will be completed by (a) 1 January 2000 and (b) 1 January 2001; [24449]

(6) where the financial liability rests for those Millennium Commission supported projects which fail to fulfil their original criteria. [24448]

Mr. Chris Smith: These are matters for the Millennium Commission. I shall reply to my hon. Friend in my capacity as Chairman of the Commission, and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

DEFENCE

Chemical and Biological Weapons (Iraq)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of (a) the stockpiles of and (b) the availability of production facilities for (i) chemical agent VX, (ii) ricin and (iii) anthrax in Iraq. [22973]

Mr. George Robertson: Before the Gulf war, Iraq had developed a significant chemical and biological warfare capability, a capability which she has since admitted using against Iran and has also deployed against her own people. The valuable work of the United Nations Special Commission (UNSCOM) over the past seven years has reduced, but not entirely eliminated, Iraq's capability in this field.

The possibility therefore, that Iraq retains a small number of chemical and biological agents, possibly including VX agent, ricin and anthrax, cannot be ruled out.

It has not been possible, for example, to confirm that all the VX agent which Iraq claims to have produced has been destroyed.

UNSCOM has reported the supervised destruction of a pilot VX production plant. But the production of small quantities of VX could still be concealed within university laboratories or the chemical industry.

In addition, whilst Iraq has told UNSCOM that it examined the potential of the plant toxin ricin without success, we cannot confirm that she has given a truthful account of her interest in ricin or that she has destroyed all stocks of the anthrax spores which she claims to have done. Again, Iraq could conceal production of biological warfare agents in facilities associated with biomedical research.

Even if she does not possess such stocks, Iraq could be capable of producing small quantities of chemical and biological agents; a significant capability. Since we cannot vouch for Iraq's intentions in the future, UNSCOM's work must continue until the UN Security Council are satisfied that Iraq is complying with all relevant resolutions of the United Nations.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from Portsmouth City Council requesting information concerning the dumping of (a) radioactive and (b) low-grade radioactive waste in the Portsmouth area. [23332]

Mr. Spellar: Officials within the Ministry of Defence have received a number of requests for information concerning the dumping of radioactive waste from Portsmouth City Council. This has been supplied, subject to the constraints laid down in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what records his Department has collated in respect of the dumping of (a) radioactive and (b) low-grade radioactive waste in the Portsmouth City Council area; and if he will make the records available to the Council's Environmental Health Officer; [23377]

(2) what records his Department holds on the dumping of radioactive waste and low-grade radioactive waste in (a) the Fareham Borough Council, (b) the East Hampshire District Council and (c) the Rushmoor Borough Council area; and if he will make them available to the councils' environmental health officers; [23717]

(3) if he will make available records of the dumping of radioactive waste and low-grade radioactive waste, in the Havant Borough Council area, to the council's environmental health officer; [24058]

(4) if he will make departmental records on the dumping of radioactive waste and low-grade radioactive waste, in the Gosport Borough Council area, available to the council's environmental health officer. [24059]

Mr. Spellar: Although the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 does not apply to the Ministry of Defence, radioactive waste is disposed of from MOD sites under arrangements with the Environment Agency similar to those required by the Act. As part of these arrangements, information on local disposals is passed to the relevant councils. The MOD also holds some reports which relate to activities pre-dating these arrangements, most notably at Aldershot. In that instance both Rushmoor Borough Council and the Environment Agency are involved in discussions about the site. Information is also made available in response to specific requests under the terms of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Atomic Weapons Testing

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment he has made of the research conducted by the Medical Education Department of Dundee University into atomic test veterans' health;[23798]

(2) what recent communications his Department has had with the Australian Government concerning the study being undertaken by Dr. Rabbitt-Roff of Dundee University on the effects on British veterans' health of the atmospheric atomic tests conducted by the United Kingdom in Australia. [23809]

Mr. Spellar: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the research work undertaken on behalf of the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association by Dr. Rabbitt-Roff. There is no substantive evidence in her work which would undermine in any way our total confidence in the conclusions of the report published by the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) in 1993 which were that participation in the testing programme had not had a detectable effect on the participants' expectation of life or on their risk of developing cancer or other fatal diseases. Unlike the NRPB findings, which were published in the British Medical Journal, the BNTVA's studies have not been peer reviewed and published in scientific journals.

My Department has not discussed this matter with the Australian Government.

Tomahawk Weapons

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans the Royal Navy has to purchase the Advanced Tomahawk Weapon Control System; and what estimate he has made of the cost. [24359]

Mr. Spellar: A submarine variant of the Advanced Tomahawk Weapon Control System is being purchased as part of the arrangements under which Tomahawk missiles are being procured. The cost of the ATWCS is some £18 million.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans the Royal Navy has to upgrade its Tomahawk Missiles to Block IV standard; and at what cost. [24360]

Mr. Spellar: There are no plans to upgrade Royal Navy Tomahawk Missiles to Block IV standard.

European Regional Test Centre

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if it is his intention to continue the United Kingdom commitment to NATO in respect of providing the European Regional Test Centre for interchangeability and interoperability of NATO small arms ammunition; and if he will make a statement; [24103]

(2) if the collective decision of NATO in 1993 that the European Regional Test Centre for testing certain ammunition should be based at Pendine has been amended following Pendine's certification; and if he will make a statement; [24101]

(3) if his Department or the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency have identified a single facility with the required range, size, technical facilities and experienced staff as an alternative to the European Regional Test Centre at Pendine; and if he will make a statement. [24102]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 20 January 1998]: NATO's 1993 certification of the European Regional Test Centre facility at DERA Pendine has not been amended.

There are potentially a number of other sites in the UK that could conduct the small arms work for both MOD and NATO needs. The aim of the Ministry of Defence is to provide these capabilities in the most cost effective way to ensure best value for money for the UK and our NATO allies.

There are presently no plans to discontinue provision of a European Regional Test Centre for small arms ammunition. Our commitment is dependent on suitable and affordable facilities being available.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was charged by the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency for the operation of the European Regional Test Centre for small and medium calibre ammunition at Pendine in each of the financial years since Pendine was certified. [24104]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 20 January 1998]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Nick Ainger, dated 22 January 1998:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State about charges for the operation of the European Regional Test Centre and Pendine as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency.

The Pendine range, which includes the NATO European Regional Test Centre for small arms and medium calibre ammunition, was not part of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) until FY 95/6. During FY 93/4 and FY 94/5 the Pendine site was vote funded and direct charges were not made. Costs were allocated on a notional basis, with much of the site running costs funded via the vote. Reliable figures are therefore not available for these years.

Since FY 95/6 tasks have been costed individually and on a full recovery of costs basis. The total income from NATO work is:

1995/96: £120K

1996/97: £130K

1997/98: £150K (Estimate of end of year outturn).

During this period national work has produced the following income:

1995/96: £633K

1996/97: £1,041K

1997/98: £1,180K (Estimate of end of year outturn).

MOD also pays an annual maintenance charge to support the NATO and national facilities of:

1995/96: £137K

1996/97: £256K

1997/98: £303K.

I hope this information is helpful.

WE-177 Bomb

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 31 July 1997, Official Report, column 473, which of the types of WE-177 Bomb have been assigned to the Royal Air Force. [24763]

Dr. Reid: All three variants of the WE-177 bomb have been in operational service with the Royal Air Force. As the hon. Gentleman will be aware from the reply my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence gave on 31 July 1997, Official Report, column 473, the last of these bombs will shortly be withdrawn from service.

A maritime version of the Type A bomb was also in service with the Royal Navy until 1992.

Recruitment (Ethnic Minorities)

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what targets his Department sets in respect of the recruitment of ethnic minority personnel into the Armed Forces. [25490]

Dr. Reid: We have made clear, on a number of occasions, our determination that the Armed Forces should better reflect the ethnic composition of our society. As part of this commitment I am pleased to announce that, for the year starting in April, the goal for each Service will be that 2 per cent. of new recruits should be from the ethnic minorities, with that figure rising annually by 1 per cent. so that it reaches 5 per cent. by the end of the financial year 2000–02 and in time reflects the proportion of people from ethnic minority communities in the wider population.

These recruiting goals represent a major challenge for all in the Services, especially recruiting personnel, and will be reflected in the Ministry of Defence Departmental Plan. I am confident that they are realistic and provide a strong indication of our wish to make real, tangible progress in this area.

Joint Strategic Submarine Patrols

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions have been held with the French authorities on joint strategic submarine patrols; and if he will make a statement. [24674]

Mr. George Robertson: Officials have discussed a wide range of subjects with their French counterparts relating to the maintenance of effective deterrence in changing circumstances within the Joint Nuclear Commission. There have been no discussions on the issue of joint UK/French deterrent patrols.

Exercise Senator 97

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his Answer of 12 November 1997, Official Report, column 580, on Exercise Senator 97, in which part of Lincolnshire and at which MoD sites the exercise took place; how many county councils (a) participated and (b) were invited to participate in the exercise; and what lessons were learnt from this exercise. [24764]

Dr. Reid: Exercise SENATOR 97, which took place between 22 and 25 September 1997, was located in the Grantham area of Lincolnshire with the Strategic Co-ordination Group, under Lincolnshire Police chairmanship, based at Lincolnshire Fire Brigade Headquarters, Lincoln. Prince William of Gloucester Barracks was used as a convenient location for the main MoD response forces. Lincolnshire County Council participated in the exercise and was the only County Council invited to participate. Lessons learnt from the exercise will be reflected in an all-agency post exercise report which will be placed in the Library of the House in due course.

IT Equipment

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy regarding the recycling of information technology equipment within his Department and relevant agencies and to other Government departments or agencies; and what arrangements have been made in this respect. [23277]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 21 January 1998]: Since April 1994, a contract has been in place providing for the recycling of laser printer and ink jet printer cartridges. A scheme to recycle mobile phones is currently in negotiation.

The recycling of information technology equipment such as personal computers is currently the responsibility of local MOD management units and Agencies, and occurs either within their organisations or via third party suppliers. The Department is, however, currently seeking to let a contract for recycling of information technology equipment. When a central contract is in place all MOD establishments and Agencies will be able to take advantage of this arrangement.

We have no specific arrangements covering the recycling of information technology equipment with other Government Departments or Agencies. However, the Disposal Sales Agency have in place arrangements to dispose of IT equipment which is unsuitable for recycling within the Department on the open market once it has been cleared of all classified information. Eighteen other Government Departments and Agencies outside the MOD currently make use of these arrangements to dispose of their IT equipment.

PRIME MINISTER

No. 10 Downing Street (Staff)

Ms Abbott: To ask the Prime Minster how many people work for him at No. 10 Downing Street; and of these how many are paid (a) from public funds and (b) by the Labour Party. [23025]

The Prime Minster [holding answer 15 January 1998]: There were 152 people working at No. 10 Downing Street on 1 January 1998. Of these, 145 were paid from public funds and seven Political Office staff were paid by the Labour Party.

European Commissioner

Dr. Fox: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has had with the right hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) about the successor to Sir Leon Brittan as European Commissioner. [23711]

The Prime Minister: None.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has had regarding the replacement British European Commissioner at the end of Sir Leon Brittan's term of office. [23712]

The Prime Minister: The members of the Commission were appointed for a five year period, ending on 6 January 2000.

Announcements will be made in the usual way in due course.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish his response to the British North America Committee on millennium compliance issues. [23558]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 January 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the statement my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster made to the House on 27 November 1997, Official Report, columns 1104-05.

IT Equipment

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister what is his Department's policy regarding the recycling of information technology equipment within his Department and relevant agencies and to other Government departments or agencies; and what arrangements have been made in this respect. [23280]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 21 January 1998]: For this purpose my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 21 January 1998, Official Report, column 600.

Schengen Agreement

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister when he was informed that the procedures for joining the Schengen Agreement under the Treaty of Amsterdam would be subject to unanimity. [24053]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him today by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson), on 21 January 1998, Official Report, column 540.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those visits made within the United Kingdom since 1 May on which (a) he and (b) other Ministers within his Department have been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code indicating (i) those persons accompanying and (ii) the cost to public funds. [23761]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 19 January 1998]: (a) (i) I was accompanied by my partner, Ms Gaynor Regan, on two visits within the UK. She accompanied me to CHOGM in Edinburgh on 23–27 October 1997. We travelled by RAF aeroplane. On 14 November 1997 I flew on a RAF aeroplane for an emergency meeting on Iraq with the US Secretary of State, Mrs. Albright. Ms Gaynor Regan accompanied me on that RAF aeroplane to Edinburgh. We both flew back commercially.

(a) (ii) There was no cost to public funds on either occasion.

(b) (i) No other FCO Minister has been accompanied by his or her partner on any visit within the UK.

(b) (ii) None.

Algeria

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the future progress of the EU-Algeria Partnership Agreement; and what assessment he has made of Algeria's commitments under the human rights clause of that Agreement. [24443]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The EU/Algeria Association Agreement is part of the Euro-Med process begun in Barcelona in 1995 and will provide for liberalised trade an enhanced political dialogue. The European Commission is currently negotiating the terms of the Agreement, including commitments by both parties to respect human rights and democratic principles. The EU/Algeria

Association Council set up under the agreement will allow discussion of compliance with all parts of the agreement once it enters into force.

BBC World Service

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral answer of 13 Janaury 1998, Official Report, column 141, what assessment he has made of the advantages of providing the BBC World Service in key languages. [24783]

Mr. Fatchett: Broadcasting in vernacular languages is an important element in the World Service's ability to reach its target audience. We and the World Service keep its 44 language services under constant review. New languages are introduced and others closed down to meet new priorities.

Heathrow (VIP Facilities)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 12 January 1998, Official Report, column 23, if he will list the equivalent figures for the use and cost of VIP facilities at Heathrow Airport for 1996. [24500]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The information is in the following table.

(a)	Number	(b)	Cost (£)
May	902	May	172,755.55
June	1,097	June	210,102.92
July	1,176	July	225,233.40
August	1,109	August	212,401.22
September	1,375	September	263,346.87
October	934	October	178,884.35
November	1,043	November	199,760.57

The figures include use of VIP facilities by the British Council and the Bank of England. They also include VAT. The figures include use by Foreign and Commonwealth VIP visitors as well as HMG Ministers.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list by (a) month and (b) Minister the number of times each Government Minister has used VIP facilities at Heathrow Airport in the course of their official travel since 1 May. [24494]

Mr. Lloyd: Details of FCO Ministers are as follows:

	Secretary of State	Mr. Lloyd	Mr. Fatchett	Mr. Henderson
1997
May	3	—	2	3
June	5	—	3	4
July	5	1	4	3
August	1	—	—	1
September	2	1	3	4
October	2	—	—	6
November	4	1	3	4
December	1	1	—	2
1998
January	1	1	2	—

Baroness Symons has not used the VIP facilities at Heathrow Airport during this period.

My Department does not have readily available a breakdown of use by Ministers from other Government Departments. We shall ask Heathrow Airport Limited to prepare one and my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary, Baroness Symons, will write to the hon. Member accordingly.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 9 December regarding a constituent. [24519]

Mr. Fatchett: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary, Baroness Symons, sent a letter to my hon. Friend about this application on 20 January.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Poor People

Mr. Pond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will carry out an assessment of the impact of his Department's current policies on the (a) income, (b) employment opportunities and (c) living standards of the poorest 30 per cent. of the population. [23346]

Mr. Hoon: This Department's aim is to ensure that all people, irrespective of means, can uphold their rights and fulfil their obligations, in particular through efficient and affordable courts and legal services, and by developing the civil law to meet society's needs. We will evaluate our policies in line with this aim.

Magistrates Court, Chelmsford

Mr. Burns: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the current status of proposals relating to the moving of Chelmsford magistrates court to Witham; and when he expects a final decision on this proposal to be taken. [24496]

Mr. Hoon: The Department has no proposals in respect of magistrates courts in Essex.

Decisions concerning the future of magistrates courts is for the relevant magistrates courts committee to determine. A local authority that contributes financially may appeal to the Lord Chancellor against a proposed closure. The procedure for such appeals is set out in section 56 of the Justices of the Peace Act 1997. In the absence of an appeal, however, the Lord Chancellor plays no part in the process.

I understand from the Essex magistrates courts committee that there are no current plans to move the Chelmsford magistrates court to Witham.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 15 January 1998, Official Report, column 278, what is the share of the cost of the official visit to Trinidad and Tobago attributable to Lady Irvine's attendance. [24499]

Mr. Hoon: Pursuant to my answer of 15 January 1998, Official Report, column 278 and my subsequent letter to the hon. Gentleman (a copy of which has been placed in the Library), the share of the cost of the official visit to Trinidad and Tobago attributable to Lady Irvine's attendance is approximately £2,350. The largest element of this is one business class return air fare from Heathrow to Port of Spain.

HOME DEPARTMENT

CS Gas

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in respect of each police authority which has made CS gas available to officers, if he will give, the date of introduction, stating (a) how many cases of CS cross-contamination have been reported, (b) how many officer days have been lost, (c) how many claims for compensation have been filed and (d) how many awards of compensation have been made, giving the amount in each case. [24302]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 20 January 1998]: This information is not held centrally. At least 35 forces have introduced, or plan to introduce, CS spray. I am told that there are few, if any, cases in which officers are seriously affected by CS cross-contamination.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the 588 officers who suffered cross-contamination effects during the CS Gas trials between 1 March and 31 August 1996 have (a) reported this cross-contamination as minor injury, (b) taken time off work as a consequence, (c) claimed compensation and (d) been awarded compensation, stating the amount in each case. [24283]

Mr. Michael: This information was not collected. The information available about cross-contamination suffered by police officers during the trials is contained in Chapter 4 of the Home Office Police Research Group report which was published in December 1996. A copy of the report is in the Library.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates he has made of staffing levels at the Immigration and Nationality Directorate offices at Croydon on (a) 1 April 1998, (b) 1 April 1999 and (c) 1 April 2000. [24549]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Current estimates are that there will be surpluses of Immigration and Nationality Directorate staff in Croydon of between 170 to 467 in the financial year 1998–99 and of a further 150 to 250 in 1999–2000.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what time scale he has planned for the implementation of the new computer system at the Immigration and Nationality Directorate offices at Croydon in respect of (a) initial installation, (b) pilot phase and (c) full operation. [24548]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The contract to design, build, install and operate the new computer system in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate was awarded to Siemens Business Services under the Private Finance Initiative. It is accordingly for Siemens to plan the implementation, and the contract places on it the main financial consequences of any delay. There has recently been a delay of a few months to the original timetable for the installation and piloting of the solution. Siemens is preparing detailed plans and will shortly propose revised dates. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman when these have been agreed.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what sum is budgeted for the operation of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate offices at Croydon for the years (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000. [24547]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is not available because the Immigration and Nationality Directorate budget is not apportioned by location or building. The total budget for the Directorate is £226 million in 1997–98 and £223.7 million in 1998–99. The budget for 1999–2000 will be set following consideration of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Asylum Applications

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applicants for asylum to the Immigration and Nationality Directorate are awaiting decisions on their cases; how many refused applications are awaiting appeal; what is the date of the oldest application still to be processed; what is the date of the oldest refusal still awaiting appeal; and if he will make a statement. [23918]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As at 31 December 1997, there were 51,795 applications for asylum in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, awaiting an initial decision. As at the same date, there were 25,555 asylum related appeals awaiting determination. A large backlog of cases has developed over a decade and the Government are reviewing all aspects of asylum law to make the handling of cases faster. This year we are also computerising the case handling procedures which should help speed it up in the future.

I regret that reliable data for the other information requested are not available.

Cannabis

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the research initiatives involving cannabis which have been granted a licence. [24326]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 21 January 1998]: The information requested is as follows:

	Research initiative
Current licences
Professor A. Smith, University of Oxford	Medical—effect of delta-9-THC and cannabis on the bladder reflex
Mr. D. Todd, James Paget Hospital	Medical—investigation claims of therapeutic benefits of cannabis
Dr. R. Pertwee, University of Aberdeen	Medical—neuropharmacology of cannabinoids
Dr. G. Hall, De Montfort University	Studies in Pharmacology

	Research initiative
Dr. D. Harvey, University of Oxford	Studies in Pharmacology
Professor F. Evans, University of London	Studies in Pharmacology
Professor M. Rubenstein, Liverpool John Moores University	Studies in Pharmacology
Professor P. Redfern, University of Bath	Studies in Pharmacology
Dr. R. Morgan, University of Sunderland	Studies in Pharmacology
Dr. K. Brain, University of Wales	Studies in Pharmacology
Dr. J. Smart, University of Portsmouth	Studies in Pharmacology
Dr. P. Dewick, University of Nottingham	Studies in Pharmacology
Dr. G. Lockwood, University of Manchester	Studies in Pharmacology
Mr. M. Aitken, University of Brighton	Studies in Pharmacology
Dr. P. Houghton, Kings College London	Studies in Pharmacology
Professor R. Richards, The Robert Gordon University	Studies in Pharmacology
Dr. C. Hunter, University of The West of England	Studies in Forensic Science
Dr. M. Cole, University of Strathclyde	Studies in Forensic Science
Professor D. Cowan, Kings College London	Drugs Testing
Expired licences
Dr. G. M. Stern, Middlesex Hospital	Medical—effects of cannabis on Parkinson's Disease
Dr. P. Taylor, Bethlem Hospital	Medical—effects of cannabis on psychosis
Dr. A. Holdcroft, Hammersmith Hospital	Medical—effects of cannabis on familial Mediterranean fever

Mr. Ilsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research has been undertaken by the Government into the legalisation of cannabis following the report of the Wootton Commission. [24769]

Mr. George Howarth: Over the 30 years since the Wootton Commission published its report, the Home Office has undertaken studies of prevalence of cannabis (and other drug) misuse and attitudes towards legalising illicit drugs. I understand from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health that, although his Department has not recently commissioned basic research in this area, his officials, including professionals, are keeping the available research into the risks and medical use of cannabis under review.

Criminal Convictions

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the length of time taken between arrest and conviction of criminals. [22336]

Mr. Michael: Data on the exact period between arrest and conviction are not available. However, the magistrates courts Time Intervals Survey, published three times a year by the Lord Chancellor's Department, collects data on the time between offence and completion of magistrates courts proceedings. The latest available figures show that, in June 1997, the average time for defendants in indictable cases (including triable-either-way cases) was 132 days. This compares with 133 days in June 1996 and 132 in June 1995. Data collected by the Court Service show that the average time between committal and arraignment or start of trial in the Crown Court in 1997 was 12 weeks. This compares with 13 weeks in 1996 and 16 weeks in 1995.

The Government are determined to tackle delays in the criminal justice system. Delays impede justice, frustrate victims and bring the law into disrepute. The Government are particularly concerned by delays in dealing with persistent young offenders. A survey was recently conducted to establish a baseline for the Government's pledge to halve the time taken between arrest and sentence for persistent young offenders. That survey indicates that in 1996 the average time was 142 days. Many youth justice practitioners are already making efforts to tackle delay, with Government encouragement. My right hon. and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor wrote to the chairmen of youth court panels in May 1997 and a circular issued in October set out good practice and asked local agencies to set up fast-track schemes for persistent young offenders. The Government plan to contact youth justice practitioners in spring 1998 to find out what action has been taken to give effect to the circular's recommendations and, in particular, to establish fast-tracking schemes.

Following a public consultation exercise, the Government concluded that many of the recommendations of the Review of Delay in the Criminal Justice System had the potential substantially to reduce delay without impairing the quality of justice and accepted the majority of them. Those recommendations which require legislation are being implemented through the Crime and Disorder Bill currently before Parliament. The main recommendations relate to dealing promptly with straightforward guilty pleas, case management in magistrates' courts, Early Administrative Hearings in contested cases and starting indictable-only cases in the Crown Court.

In addition, to reinforce the effectiveness of these new procedures for case preparation and management, the Government will introduce the regime of statutory time limits for the prosecution of criminal cases provided for in the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 but not yet implemented. Stricter time limits will be set for juvenile than adult cases and even tougher time limits will be imposed for persistent young offender cases.

Vessels (Fire Services)

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many vessels sought the assistance of fire services while in (a) territorial waters and (b) international waters in each of the past five yeawrs; of these what was the proportion of (i) bulk carriers, (ii) coastal vessels, (iii) tankers, (iv) warships, (v) fishing vessels and (vi) pleasure craft; and if he will make a statement. [23032]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 21 January 1998]: The readily available information on fires on vessels and other water craft at sea attended by local authority fire brigades is given in the table. Information on other types of incidents is not available.

Fires in vessels or water craft at sea attended by local authority fire brigades, by type of vessel, 1992 to 1996

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 8 December 1997, Official Report column 433, when the copy of the Home Department circular to chief fire officers will be placed in the Library. [24495]

Mr. George Howarth: The circular letter which provided guidance to chief fire officers on contingency planning for the year 2000 was issued on 7 January 1998. A copy has now been placed in the Library.

Mr. Mohammed Fayed

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he expects to conclude his consideration of Mr. Mohammed Fayed's application for British citizenship; and what factors will influence the timing of his decision; [24776]

(2) if he will defer making a final decision on Mr. Mohammed Fayed's application for British citizenship until the police have concluded their investigation into the theft of items from a Harrod's safe deposit box. [24777]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: It is not our practice to comment upon individual applications for British citizenship. Applications are decided when sufficient information is available for a judgment to be made as to whether or not an applicant meets the statutory requirements for citizenship.

Firearms

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many lawfully held firearms there were in England and Wales at the latest available date. [24362]

Mr. Michael: On 23 December 1996, there were 418,300 firearms held on 141,900 firearm certificates and 1,335,000 shotguns held on 638,000 shotgun certificates. The number of firearms which do not need to be held on a firearm certificate (i.e. low-powered airguns and antiques held as curiosities or ornaments) is not known.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many firearm licences have been revoked in each of the last 12 months for which figures are available and in total in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [24364]

Mr. Michael: Statistics on firearm certificates are collected and published as part of an annual exercise and a monthly breakdown is not available. However, the totals for the last five years for which figures are available are as follows:

Year	Shot gun certificates revoked	Firearm certificates revoked
1996	1,163	392
1995	685	206
1994	753	193
1993	687	147
1992	630	146

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each category of firearm which can be currently held legally by private individuals; how many licences have been issued for each of those categories of firearm in each of the last 12 months for which figures are available and in total in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [24363]

Mr. Michael: There are three categories of firearm which may legally be held by private individuals. These are firearms for which no certificate is required; firearms which are required to be kept on a police-issued shotgun certificate; and firearms which are required to be kept on a police-issued firearm certificate. Statistics for the latter two categories are collected and published as part of an annual exercise and a monthly breakdown is not available. However, the totals for the last five years for both the issue and renewal of shotgun and firearm certificates are contained in the following table:

Year	Shotgun		Firearm
	Issued	Renewed	Issued	Renewed
1996	25,800	193,100	10,200	38,100
1995	24,800	195,900	10,900	38,500
1994	32,200	201,400	11,700	37,900
1993	31,100	195,800	10,900	37,300
1992	33,000	197,200	10,600	38,500

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on future developments relating to Wandsworth Prison. [24392]

Ms Quin: Planned development at Wandsworth prison in 1998–99 includes the following: upgrade of the fire and general alarm system on G, H and K wings; refurbishment of A and B wings; introduction of simple sanitation in the health care centre; provision of a new kitchen and extension of the visits facility. The latter will entail the re-siting of the chapel and gymnasium. The application for a new gymnasium was submitted to Wandsworth Borough Council on 13 January and, if approved, the project will commence later this year.

The planning application submitted in May 1997 to provide a pre-release hostel, visitors' reception centre and car park outside the front of the prison will not be taken forward. Following negotiations with Neals Nurseries Ltd., which currently occupies part of this land, the Prison Service have agreed to grant it a further lease but will take back the rest of the land. This includes a stores building formerly owned by Neals Nurseries Ltd. which will be used as a receipt and dispatch store to enable the prison to enhance its industrial activities.

Immigration (Carriers' Liability)

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the amount of charges (a) levied and (b) recovered, under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 on (i) Biman, (ii) British Airways, (iii) PIA, (iv) Air Lanka, (v) Nigeria Airways and (vi) Ghana Airways for each year since 1987 for which figures are available. [23350]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I am unable to disclose the payment record of individual carriers for reasons of commercial confidentiality. However, we are reviewing this policy of non-disclosure and intend to consult Government colleagues on this. I am able to say that a total of £112.8 million had been incurred by all carriers at 31 December 1997, of which £11.4 million (10.1 per cent.) remained outstanding.

Young Offenders Institution, Colchester

Mrs. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to continue the operation of the experimental regime at Colchester Young Offenders Institution. [25491]

Ms Quin: The Government are determined to pursue an active regime in Young Offender Institutions (YOIs) as part of their commitment to focus the youth justice system on the prevention of offending by young people. Statutory provision for this is contained in the Crime and Disorder Bill.

We are therefore continuing the experimental "high intensity training" regime which the previous Administration established at Thorn Cross YOI. Although, at £22,700 per place, this regime is more expensive than the cost of a typical YOI regime at £17,300 per place, the Thorn Cross programme has been shown to have a more sharply focused and better integrated set of activities. We believe therefore that Thorn Cross represents value for money.

However, we have been unable to reach the same conclusion with Colchester. Colchester YOI opened on 20 February 1997, initially for one year. The costs per place at Colchester, at £31,300, have been running at nearly twice those for a typical YOI and nearly £9,000 more than those at Thorn Cross. The Colchester regime has encouraged positive change in attitudes amongst young offenders but the available evaluation has not supported the contention that it has been more effective in preventing re-offending than other initiatives.

In view of this, and of the very high costs, we have concluded that Colchester YOI does not represent value for money. It will therefore close on 31 March 1998.

This decision in no way reflects on the hard work and commitment of the staff who have been involved with the experiment and to whom I pay tribute. Their work will assist us in improving regimes at other YOIs. We shall be using for this purpose the resources which we have saved from the closure of Colchester.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members of the RUC are members of the Sir Robert Peel Memorial Royal Orange Lodge. [20790]

Mr. Ingram: Information on this is not available.

Council for Catholic Maintained Schools

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the extent to which the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools has complied with the requirements to provide a neutral working environment. [21595]

Mr. Worthington: None. All specified public bodies are required to carry out a formal review of their employment composition and practices at least once every three years. I understand the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools has complied with this requirement.

Plastic Baton Rounds

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will publish the guidelines on the use of plastic baton rounds by the Royal Ulster Constabulary. [20011]

Mr. Ingram: I refer my hon. Friend to an answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore) on 29 July 1997, Official Report, column 98, in which I said the relevant parts of the documents regarding guidelines were placed in the Library of the House. The RUC are currently engaged with their Association of Police Officers colleagues in Great Britain in reviewing the guidelines.

Social Exclusion Unit

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the priorities announced by the Prime Minister for the Social Exclusion Unit in relation to Northern Ireland; and if she will make a statement. [22734]

Marjorie Mowlam: Problems of Social Exclusion exist in Northern Ireland as elsewhere in the United Kingdom. Their nature and extent, the circumstances in which they arise, and the appropriate responses are however different.

There is a resonance between the SEU's remit and the Northern Ireland Targeting Social Needs (TSN) initiative. Last year, the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights published their review of employment equality issues in Northern Ireland. Their report included recommendations for the future development of TSN. I am now considering these recommendations as a matter of high importance and will decide on the most appropriate approach to tackling social exclusion in Northern Ireland in this context.

Probation Board

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of the new members appointed on 1 December 1997 to the Probation Board for Northern Ireland have been Alliance Party candidates; how many of the new members responded to press advertising for appointees; and what level of fees and expenses will be available to members of the Board. [22899]

Mr. Ingram: Three new members have been Alliance Party candidates. Of the 16 members of the board, 10 were new appointees, all of whom responded to press advertisements, the other six being re-appointees. Regarding the level of fees and expenses, I understand that the Chairman of the Board currently receives a remuneration of £11,150 per year. The Deputy Chairman and members of the board receive an attendance allowance of £26.96 for each meeting lasting up to 4 hours and £53.92 for longer meetings. (This is currently under review). In addition, travel and other expenses are met.

Commission on Human Rights

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of the new members of the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights have been (a) SDLP members and (b) members of a Unionist party in the last five years; and if she will make a statement about the political balance of the Commission. [22905]

Marjorie Mowlam: One member of the Commission declared an association with the SDLP. Mr. Robert Mullan was a member from 1987 to 1993. None have declared being members of a Unionist party in the last five years.

The new Commission widely represents the political and community balance in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who are the members of the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights; what is the perceived religious affiliation of each; which members have been identified as having, or having had, an association with a political party; and what other paid public appointments each holds. [22910]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights membership is as follows:

Mr. Michael Lavery QC
Mr. Bob Cooper
Mr. Gerry Burns
Ms Joan Smyth
Mr. Paul Donaghy
Mr. Leslie Allamby
Mr. Robert Osborne
Mr. Robin Wilson
Ms Angela Hegarty
Mr. Ivan Topping
Mr. Robert Mullan
Mrs Margaret-Anne Dinsmore
Ms Clodach McGrory.

It is the Government's policy not to release the religious affiliation of each member, however the Commission has five catholics, seven protestants and one not known.

The Commission has two members who have declared an association with a political party. Ms Angela Hegarty stood for the NI Forum Election in 1996 for the Womens Coalition and Mr. Robert Mullan was a member of the SDLP from 1987 to 1993.

Mrs. Margaret-Anne Dinsmore holds two paid public appointments:- the NI Commissioner for the rights of Trade Union members, and the NI Commissioner for protection against Unlawful Industrial Action for which she receives £11,400 per annum in total.

Government House, Hillsborough

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement about the use by the Irish Government of Government House at Hillsborough for meetings with Northern Ireland political parties. [22901]

Marjorie Mowlam: One such meeting took place on 7 January, on matters relating to the multi-party talks. Hillsborough was a convenient venue for the participants, and I was happy to agree to the request to meet there.

Telecommunications Masts

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she plans to introduce amendments to the Planning (General Development) (Northern Ireland) Order 1993 in respect of the planning regulations for the erection of mobile telecommunications masts. [22989]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Subject to a period of public consultation the amendments to the Planning (General Development) (Northern Ireland) Order 1993 are expected to be introduced in late April/early May this year.

Beef Bones Regulations

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she expects to lay a statutory instrument to bring into force in Northern Ireland the changes in legislation covered by the Great Britain Statutory Instrument 1997 No. 2959. [23497]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Equivalent Northern Ireland legislation came into operation on 16 December 1997.

TREASURY

Bank of England

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans to announce the appointment of the next Governor of the Bank of England; and if he will a statement. [24545]

Mrs. Liddell: The Governor's current term of office runs to 30 June 1998. The Government will make an announcement in due course.

Reviews

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the HM Treasury reviews which will have been completed in time to inform the Budget statement on 17 March; and if he will make a statement. [24544]

Mr. Gordon Brown: The reviews that will inform the Budget are listed in the table:

	Lead department
Review
Alcohol and tobacco fraud: a review aimed at reducing revenue losses through alcohol and tobacco fraud	Customs and Excise
Landfill tax: a review of the operation and level of the tax	Customs and Excise
Anti-avoidance: to consider the approach to the defeat and deterrence of tax avoidance schemes	Inland Revenue/ Customs and Excise
Capital gains tax: to produce a fairer tax, which encourages long-term investment	Inland Revenue
Venture Capital Trusts/Enterprise Investment Schemes: a review of VCT/EIS guarantee and asset backed arrangements	Inland Revenue
North Sea oil: a review of the North Sea fiscal regime	Inland Revenue/ Department of Trade and Industry/Treasury
Bus fuel duty rebate: to review differential rates of rebate to encourage lower emissions	Treasury
Tax and benefit reform: to explore the scope for the tax and benefit systems to act as an incentive to move off benefit and into work	Task Force under the chairmanship of Martin Taylor
Energy efficient materials (review completed)	Customs and Excise
Charities Review (a consultation paper will be published in the spring)	Treasury/Inland Revenue/Customs and Excise
Consultative documents
Corporation tax	Inland Revenue
Individual Savings Accounts	Inland Revenue
Water pollution	Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions

Public Sector Pay

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans to make a statement setting out the Government's response to the recommendations of the public sector pay review bodies; and if he will make a statement. [24546]

Mr. Darling: We expect to announce the Government's response shortly, when all the reports have been received in the usual way.

Chernobyl Children Life Line

Helen Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the amount of revenue likely to be raised in 1997–98 from airport taxes paid by the Chernobyl Children Life Line. [23313]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 16 January 1998]: I have no separate estimate of Air Passenger Duty paid by travellers sponsored by the Chernobyl Children Life Line

Child Benefit

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the revenue which would be raised from taxing child benefit, assuming household total income were assessed for tax purposes. [24128]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 20 January 1998]: The yield from taxing child benefit based on household total income would depend on the precise system of assessment.

European Investment Bank

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which body is responsible for supervising and directing the activities of the European Investment Bank; what are the financial obligations of the participant nations; and if all the necessary contributions have been made by participant nations. [24501]

Mrs. Liddell: The body responsible for supervising and directing the work of the EIB is the Board of Governors, which consists of Ministers, usually Finance Ministers, designated by each of the Member States. They represent the Member States as shareholders of the Bank.

The EIB's capital stands at 62 billion ECU. The subscribed capital actually paid-in by Member States amounts to 7.5 per cent. of which the UK's share (along with France, Germany and Italy as the largest subscribers to the Bank's capital) is 17.7 per cent. Under the terms of the 1990 capital increase, the UK was required to pay about £77 million in twice yearly installments over five years. These payments count as public expenditure.

The EIB makes a surplus on its lending operations, which in the past it has automatically added to its reserves. In 1996 (the latest year for which figures are available), the Bank made an operating surplus of 1.1 billion ECU thus bringing the level of reserves to almost 12 billion ECU. By a decision of the Board of Governors at its annual meeting in June 1997, it was decided to use part of the 1996 surplus to finance the four remaining payments due from each Member State in respect of the 1990 capital increase. The transaction putting this decision into effect took place on 30 June 1997. The UK's contingent liability on its subscribed capital available for call in the event that it may be required by the Bank to meet its obligations remain at 10 billion ECU.

Endangered Species

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent figures he has obtained in respect of seizures by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise of (a) illegal imports into the United Kingdom and (b) illegal transit through the United Kingdom of species protected under CITES. [22970]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 19 January 1998]: The following table sets out the number of items seized in respect of endangered species in the last 3 years as reported by the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in their Annual Report. Customs do not hold central statistics on the numbers of endangered species found illegally in transit through the United Kingdom, though these would normally be seized unless operational circumstances dictated otherwise:

Year ended 31 March	Live animals and birds	Plants	Parts and derivatives
1995	2,305	480	29,916
1996	4,374	2,748	12,178
1997	[1]21,411	222	[2]223,596

[1] This figure includes 20,000 medicinal leeches.
[2] This figure includes three batches of oriental medicines comprising 218,520 pills.

Drug Smuggling

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many operations were undertaken in the past three years on behalf of Her Majesty's Government by persons who were subsequently charged with drug smuggling offences. [23392]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 19 January 1998]: So far as Customs officials are concerned, no officer undertaking investigations into drug smuggling during the past three years has been the subject of criminal charges for drug smuggling offences.

European Central Bank

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the cost of the United Kingdom's contribution to the European Central Bank's capital. [24716]

Mrs. Liddell: Under Article 9(c) of Protocol No. 11 to the EC Treaty, the Bank of England will be obliged to pay up its subscription to the capital of the ECB as a contribution to its operational costs on the same basis as national central banks of Member States with a derogation.

Article 48 of the Statute of the ESCB and the ECB provides that central banks of Member States with a derogation shall not pay up their subscribed capital unless the General Council decides that a minimal percentage has to be paid up as a contribution to the operational costs of the ECB.

Until the ECB is established, the General Council cannot take a decision on whether central banks of Member States with a derogation should pay up subscriptions to the capital of the ECB, nor decide what the contribution to the operational costs of the ECB should be.

Savings

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment has been made of the likely loss of tax revenue to the Exchequer from switching out of former PEP investments above the £50,000 ISA ceiling into offshore roll-up funds after October 1999. [21505]

Dawn Primarolo: The gains on offshore roll-up funds are taxed to income tax at the investor's marginal rate on withdrawals from the fund, and expenses are often higher than for comparable UK investments. In these circumstances, only a limited amount of PEP funds are likely to switch to offshore roll-up funds.

Stamp Duty Reserve Tax

Mr. Colman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what circumstances the powers to change the rate of stamp duty reserve tax applied to intermediaries and stock lending transactions contained in section 88B (5) and section 89AA (7) of the Finance Act 1986 may be exercised. [22898]

Dawn Primarolo: These powers were introduced by the previous Government, for reasons explained by the right hon. and learned Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke) on 24 October 1996, Official Report, column 6. The legislation does not limit the particular circumstances in which the powers may be exercised.

Own Share Purchases

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many companies have submitted clearance applications under section 707 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 with regard to transactions involving the purchase of own shares between (a) 2 July and 31 December 1997, (b) 2 July and 31 December 1996 and (c) 2 July and 31 December 1995. [22891]

Dawn Primarolo: Clearance applications under section 707, which involved the purchase by a company of its own shares, were received by the Inland Revenue as follows:

(a) between 1 July and 31 December 1995: 518
(b) between 1 July and 31 December 1996: 634
(c) five months 1 July to 30 November 1997: 489.

The figures for December 1997 are not yet available.

As statistics are compiled on a monthly but not daily basis, figures are given from 1 July rather than 2 July.

Charities

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Government's proposals to reform general taxation on charities. [23098]

Dawn Primarolo: The Chancellor announced a review of the taxation of charities on 2 July 1997. In the first phase of the review people were invited to contribute their views on how to improve the taxation system for charities, by 1 December 1997. The Government received almost two and a half thousand responses. The issues raised were interesting and wide ranging. My officials are currently engaged in a detailed evaluation of these replies. I hope to publish a Consultation document in the spring setting out the issues that we think deserve to be considered further. A further consultation period will follow thereafter.

Post-war Credits

Ms Oona King: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money remains unclaimed from the total sum of post-war credits; what the Government propose to do with this money; and if he will make it his policy to use it to benefit the generation which provided it. [23706]

Dawn Primarolo: It is estimated that the amount of post war credits that remain unclaimed is £33 million. Approximately 200 post war credit claims per month are still being received and therefore the amount unclaimed will remain in the post war credit fund to cover future claims.

Smuggling

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will meet his counterparts in other EU member states to discuss the impact on independent retailers of tobacco in the United Kingdom of illegal sales of tobacco imported from Belgium. [22225]

Dawn Primarolo: I have no present plans to do so. However, the European Commission, in consultation with Member States, is currently preparing a report on tobacco and alcohol fraud. A report on alcohol and tobacco smuggling and fraud is currently being prepared by Customs and Excise.

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make representations to the relevant EU Commissioner on the impact on independent retailers of tobacco in the United Kingdom of illegal sales of tobacco imported from Belgium. [22224]

Dawn Primarolo: I have no plans to make such representations.

A report on alcohol and tobacco smuggling and fraud is currently being prepared by Customs and Excise.

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce a scheme to compensate independent retailers of tobacco for loss of revenue as a result of being undercut by illegal sales of tobacco imported from Belgium. [22227]

Dawn Primarolo: No.

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the amount of revenue independent retailers lost as a result of being undercut by illegal sales of tobacco imported from Belgium in the last three years; and if he will commission independent research into this matter. [22226]

Dawn Primarolo: There is no official estimate of revenue lost by independent retailers from smuggling of tobacco from Belgium.

A report on alcohol and tobacco smuggling and fraud is currently being prepared by Customs and Excise in consultation with the trade and other Government Departments.

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the amount of crimes associated with the illegal resale of tobacco bought in Belgium; how many people HM Customs and Excise have arrested for such activity since 1993; if he will commission independent research into this matter; and if he will make a statement. [22223]

Dawn Primarolo: Information is not kept separately for crimes and arrests associated with the illegal resale of tobacco bought in Belgium.

Since 1993 Customs have made the following seizures of tobacco smuggled into the UK from the Single Market.

Financial year	Number
1993–94	878
1994–95	1,723
1995–96	2,071
1996–97	3,949

Customs have been working closely with the Kent Police in recent months to tackle both the smugglers and the associated crime in the Channel ports connected with their activities. Joint operations have proved very successful resulting in a number of arrests for both Customs and Police offences.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the basis for the Financial Secretary's estimate, in HTV News on 4 December 1997, that tobacco smuggling amounts to a maximum of two and a half per cent. of all tobacco products sold. [22888]

Dawn Primarolo: Two and a half per cent. is a reasonable upper limit for the share of UK sales of cigarettes in 1997 represented by smuggled goods. This estimate is based on the survey of sea and Tunnel passengers conducted by HM Customs and Excise in June 1997 (reported in their News Release of 26 September 1997), and on their monitoring of smuggling by air passengers.

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to receive the Customs and Excise Report into smuggling, cross-border shopping and excise duties; and if he will make a statement. [22228]

Dawn Primarolo: The review team, which is looking into the effects on the Exchequer and industry revenue of alcohol and tobacco fraud, smuggling and cross-border shopping, are preparing a report for Ministers.

Far East

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 479, if he will revise his projections for GDP growth in the United Kingdom over the next three years in the light of the continuing financial crisis in the Far East. [24437]

Mrs. Liddell: A revised forecast will be published with the Budget on 17 March.

Cash Accounting

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the number of extra audits likely to be conducted per annum as a result of the proposals announced by the Inland Revenue on 22 December to withdraw cash basis accounting for professional businesses; and what is his estimate of the average cost of such audits. [24290]

Dawn Primarolo: A change in the way a number of professional businesses calculate their taxable business profits would not increase the number of Inland Revenue self-assessment inquiries conducted per annum.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultations he has held with the USA Internal Revenue Service regarding the proposals announced by the Inland Revenue on 22 December to withdraw cash basis accounting for professional businesses. [24286]

Dawn Primarolo: None.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what percentage of businesses affected by the plan to withdraw cash basis accounting for professional businesses have fewer than (a) five, (b) 10 and (c) 20 partners; [24289]

(2) what is his estimate of the number of professional businesses that will be affected by the proposal to withdraw cash basis accounting for professional businesses, as announced by the Inland Revenue on 22 December; [24288]

(3) what is his estimate of the average extra tax burden faced by professional businesses as a result of the proposals announced by the Inland Revenue on 22 December to withdraw cash basis accounting for professional businesses; [24287]

(4) what is his estimate of the extra tax revenue that will be raised by the planned withdrawal of cash basis accounting for professional businesses, in financial years (i) 1999–2000, (ii) 2000–01 and (iii) 2001–02. [24285]

Dawn Primarolo: On 22 December 1997 I announced the intention to withdraw the cash basis practices for professionals but views were sought on the details of the proposal, such as the suggested method for "catching up". The tax effect of the withdrawal will depend on the terms of the final arrangements, which at present are under consultation.

No reliable information is available of the total number of businesses currently on the cash basis. The objective of withdrawing these practices for those that do currently use the cash basis is to level the playing field for all businesses.

Charity Taxation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of volunteering opportunities and jobs in uniform business rate exempt charity shops and the number of such properties; and if this relief is included in his review of charity taxation. [23683]

Dawn Primarolo: There are currently around 6,500 charity shops in the UK. These shops provide opportunities for around 175,000 volunteers. In addition, these shops employ around 8,500 full and part-time workers.

The Review of Charities' Taxation announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor in his July Budget has considered submissions across the range of tax issues, including business rates. However, the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions is currently to review the local government finance scheme and will shortly be issuing a consultation paper. This paper will cover the issue of business rate relief, and clearly it would not be sensible to duplicate it in the Tax Review. I have ensured that any letters received on this issue have been copied to the DETR.

Tax on Air Travel

Ms Osborne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the income to the Treasury from tax on air travel since implementaiton of the tax. [24125]

Dawn Primarolo: The amount of air passenger duty collected to the end of December 1997 was just under £1,120 million.

Channel Islands

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of United Kingdom citizens who circumvent United Kingdom tax laws concerning their country of domicile by commuting from the Channel Islands to the United Kingdom on a daily basis. [23295]

Dawn Primarolo: This information is not available.

Taxation

Ms Hewitt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of income is paid in income tax and national insurance contributions, allowing for child benefit, in the tax year 1997–98 by (a) a single person with no children and (b) a sole earner in a married two-parent, two child family on earnings of (i) half of average earnings, (ii) three quarters of average earnings, (iii) average earnings and (iv) twice average earnings. [23928]

Dawn Primarolo: Estimates for 1997–98 are given in the table.

Income tax and NIC as a percentage of earnings in 1997–98 [1]

	Multiple of average earnings [2]
	0.5	0.75	1	2
Single person with no children	20.9	24.9	26.9	30.7
Married sole earner with two children under 11 [3]	5.7	16.8	20.8	27.7

[1] National Insurance contributions are at standard class 1 rate for employees not contracted out of SERPs.

[2] Full time males on adult rates, all occupations.

[3] Net of child benefit.

Ms Hewitt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer at what proportion of average male earnings (a) a sole earner in a married two-parent, two-child family and (b) a single person with no children start paying income tax in 1997–98; and how this compares with the position in (i) 1978–79 and (ii) 1967–68, allowing for family allowances/child benefit. [23927]

Dawn Primarolo: Estimates are given in the table. A single person with no children has a tax threshold equal to the personal allowance. For a married person with two children—assumed to be both aged under 11—the 'break-even' point is considered. This is the value of earnings at which the income tax paid is equal to the money received through child benefit or family allowances.

	Percentage of average earnings[1]
	1967–68	1978–79	1997–98
Married one earner with two children under 11[2]	69.7	56.5	47.7
Single person with no children	23.4	20.4	18.7

[1] Full time male on adult rates, all occupations.
[2] Assuming the full married couple's allowance is received.

Ms Hewitt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the change in (a) the level and (b) the value of personal tax allowances (i) from 1978–79 to 1990–91 and (ii) from 1990–91 to 1997–98 for (1) a single person with no children, (2) a lone parent with two children, (3) a married couple with one earner and two children, (4) a married couple with two earners and two children and (5) a cohabiting but unmarried couple with two earners and two children, taking into account child benefit. [23930]

Dawn Primarolo: The levels of tax allowances are given in the tables. The value of tax allowances to individuals is dependent on their income levels.

[1] Married couple's/additional personal allowance is restricted to 15 per cent. in 1997–98.

Illegal Drugs

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the number of people suspected of carrying illegal drugs stopped and searched at ports of entry into the United Kingdom since 1 January 1997. [23291]

Dawn Primarolo: I regret that separate figures are not kept on the number of people stopped and searched specifically on suspicion of carrying illegal drugs. From 1 January to 30 September 1997 Customs staff at ports and airports stopped and searched 14,788 people on suspicion of carrying restricted or prohibited goods. Figures for the last quarter of 1997 are not yet available.

Employment Statistics

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will publish the results of the review into the evaluation and publication of the employment and labour force statistics. [24450]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Ms Ann Clwyd, dated 22 January 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as Director of the Office for National Statistics, to your recent question asking when the results of the review into the evaluation and publication of the employment and labour force statistics will be published.

The ONS have recently been reviewing the future presentation and dissemination of labour market statistics. Wide-ranging public consultation was initiated in the May 1997 issue of Labour Market Trends. A summary of responses was published in the October issue of Labour Market Trends. Copies of both editions are available in the House of Commons Library. Responses to the consultation indicated strong support for:

- ONS plans to provide an Integrated First Release covering all Labour Market Statistics.

- the proposals to give increased prominence to data from the Labour Force Survey.

It is taking longer than hoped to put together a comprehensive package that meets users' needs. An announcement about the future of labour market statistics will be made in the near future.

Drownings

Valerie Davey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many school-aged children died in drowning accidents in the year 1996–97; and what percentage of those children were unable to swim. [24391]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Ms Valerie Davey dated 22 January 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me, as Director of the Office for National Statistics, to answer your question on the number of school-aged children who drowned in the year 1996–97.

Information for school-aged children's deaths from accidental drowning and submersion in England and Wales for the calender year 1996 is shown in the attached table. There is no information recorded showing whether these children were able to swim.

Information for 1997 is not available.

CABINET OFFICE

Coal and Energy Policy

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what responsibility he has for the coal industry. [23479]

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what responsibility he has for (a) coal and (b) energy policy. [23454]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 16 January 1998]: I am a member of EA(N), the Ministerial Sub-Committee on Energy Policy.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if the accommodation, meals and entrance fees to Disneyland for himself and his accompanying civil servant were paid for entirely out of United Kingdom public funds during his recent visit to Florida. [24756]

Mr. Mandelson: Only the cost of travel and accommodation was paid for entirely from public funds.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will publish the programme for his visit to Washington in early January. [24774]

Mr. Mandelson: I visited Washington from 4 to 5 January 1998. During my visit I attended an official dinner at the Ambassador's residence, undertook a programme of meetings at the White House, and met the media for the launch of Britain's EU Presidency.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what was the cost to public funds of hotel accommodation for (a) himself and (b) the representative of the Consulate General in Miami during his trip to Florida. [24804]

Mr. Mandelson: The cost to public funds of my hotel accommodation will (subject to any exchange rate fluctuation) be in the region of £125, and an identical figure for the accompanying official from the British Consulate General in Miami.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

E-mail

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the Government's proposals to introduce on-line red boxes for ministerial use; when he expects them to come into use; and what measures will be taken to ensure the security and confidentiality of information held on on-line red boxes. [23566]

Dr. David Clark: The prototype electronic red box, which I launched last week, shows the possibilities for Ministers to take advantage of modern Information Technology, and the potential for reducing the time and effort needed to fill and transport old-style boxes. The prototype demonstrates the principles, and will doubtless evolve; there is no reason why the final electronic red box should look much different from a normal laptop computer. Progress will depend on practical experience, but I expect Ministers who wish to use the operational version will be able to do so later this year.

Information in an electronic red box merits protection to the same Government standards as are applied to the networks the box may be connected to. I shall not describe the security measures in fine detail, for obvious reasons. However, I can say that they will include strong access control features, Government-approved encryption, and clear guidance for users. The measures will be such that should an electronic red box go astray for any reason, the information in it will remain suitably protected.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Competition Bill

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions she has had with the utility regulators on the implications of the Competition Bill on regulatory jurisdiction on the sectoral regulators and the Office of Fair Trading. [24383]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 21 January 1998]: There has been regular and wide ranging discussions on the Competition Bill at official level between DTI and regulators' offices.

Broadcasting

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact on (a) cable companies and (b) the level of competition of allowing BT early entry into the market to provide broadcast channels over their national networks. [24385]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 21 January 1998]: The Government have been considering options for lifting the restrictions on public telecommunications operators' providing broadcast entertainment to the home over their national networks, and intends to publish a consultation document on this issue in the near future.

Gas Industry

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many people are employed in the United Kingdom gas industry; and how many of these are employed in gas-fired power generation. [24318]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 21 January 1998]: The latest available data show that in September 1996 38,300 people were employed in the downstream gas industry (i.e. the manufacture, transportation, distribution and supply of gaseous fuels). Those employed in gas fired power generation are regarded as part of the electricity generation industry and are not separately distinguished in centrally held statistics. However, it is estimated that around 700 people were needed to operate the 19 combined cycle gas turbine (CCGT) stations owned by the major power producers in Great Britain that were producing at the end of 1996.

Pre-paid Funerals

Mr. Caplin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to introduce measures to protect the rights of people who have bought pre-paid funerals. [24801]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The Government plan to introduce measures to ensure that consumers who purchase their funerals in advance are adequately protected. My objective will be to ensure that there is sufficient financial provision available so these consumers get the funeral which they have paid for. I am also concerned to ensure that there should be transparency in the marketing of pre-paid funerals so that consumers are clear as to what services they are purchasing and who is responsible for providing them.

Arms Sales

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total level of export credit guarantee cover for arms sales to China. [24271]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 21 January 1998]: ECGD has no exposure in respect of defence business with China.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total level of export credit guarantee cover for arms sales to Thailand. [24275]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 21 January 1998]: From data readily available, total exposure under ECGD guarantees for defence business with Thailand was £46.5 million at the end of December 1997.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total level of export credit guarantee cover for arms sales to Singapore. [24272]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 21 January 1998]: From data readily available, total exposure under ECGD guarantees for defence business with Singapore was £35.6 million at the end of December 1997.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total level of export credit guarantee cover for arms sales to South Korea. [24274]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 21 January 1998]: From data readily available, total exposure under ECGD guarantees for defence business with South Korea was £76.7 million at the end of December 1997.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total level of export credit guarantee cover for arms sales to Indonesia. [24276]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 21 January 1998]: From data readily available, total exposure under ECGD guarantees for defence business with Indonesia was £855.2 million at the end of December 1997.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total level of export credit guarantee cover for arms sales to Malaysia. [24273]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 21 January 1998]: From data readily available, total exposure under ECGD guarantees for defence business with Malaysia was £208.2 million at the end of December 1997.

Antarctica

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research her Department has evaluated on the sustainability of fish stocks around Antarctica and the effect on mammal population of their depletion. [24130]

Mr. Battle: Scientists from the British Antarctic Survey play an active role in support of the work of the Commission for the Conservation of Antarctic Marine Living Resources (CCAMLR). All data received from fisheries research/surveys, fishing vessels and scientific observers are evaluated by the Scientific Committee of CCAMLR prior to the Commission's annual meeting.

The Scientific Committee estimate stock sizes, recommend catch levels and assesses interactions within the Antarctic ecosystem, including mammal populations.

Inward Investment (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what has been the breakdown of jobs created in the Greater London area from inward investment in each of the last three years; [24528]

(2) if she will make a statement on the inward investment made into the Greater London area in each of the last three years. [24527]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Inward investment made into Greater London and the breakdown of jobs as a result over the last three years is as follows:

Year	Number of projects	Number of new jobs	Number of safeguarded jobs	Total number of associated jobs	Total investment £000
1996–97	40	2,651	1,205	3,856	123,160,000
1995–96	23	2,588	2,235	4,823	96,754,000
1994–95	2	27	0	27	—

The figures are based on information provided by companies at the time of announcement of the decision to invest.

There is no requirement to notify the Department of Trade and Industry and so the figures include only those projects where the Invest in Britain Bureau (IBB) and its regional partners (LFC) were involved or which have come to their notice.

Multinational Companies

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the Government will seek an amendment to the Multilateral Agreement on Investments to include a legally binding obligation for multinationals to provide an independent environmental and social audit in their annual reports. [24518]

Mrs. Roche: We do not intend to seek such an amendment—the MAI is not an appropriate vehicle for international rule-making on company reports.

Inward Investment (Northumberland)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many jobs have been created in Northumberland since 1992 as a result of inward investment. [24031]

Mrs. Roche: Inward investment projects from 1992 are expected to create 1,800 new job opportunities in Northumberland.

Business Links

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many staff are employed in (a) the Northumberland Business Link and (b) Business Links in the United Kingdom as a whole. [24033]

Mrs. Roche: The information is given in the list:

(a) Twenty two staff are employed by Business Link Northumberland.

(b) Business Links are independent private sector companies. How many staff each Business Link employs is decided by their local management and these numbers are not collected centrally.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many requests for information were received by Northumberland business link's marketing information centre in each of the last three years. [24032]

Mrs. Roche: Business Link Northumberland does not have a Marketing Information Centre as such but does operate an Information Service. The number of inquiries recorded by this Service in each of the last three years was as follows:

1994–95: 1,050

1996–97: 782.

The apparent drop in the figures in 1996–97 is considered to have resulted from a change to the recording arrangements from recording all inquiries whatever their nature to recording only requests for business information.

Post Offices

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on her Department's policy on keeping post offices open in urban areas of the United Kingdom. [23803]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government are committed to the maintenance of a nationwide network of post offices.

Kenya (Exports)

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the value of British exports to Kenya in the last 12-month period for which figures are available. [23804]

Mrs. Roche: In the 12 months to November 1997, UK exports of good to Kenya were worth £231 million. Figures for UK exports services to Kenya are not available.

Unsolicited Faxes

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received concerning the use of unsolicited fax transmissions as a means of advertising; what plans she has to regulate this activity; and if she will make a statement. [23834]

Mrs. Roche: Ministers in this Department have received five representations concerning the use of unsolicited fax transmissions as a means of advertising since taking office last May. Measures are already in place to deal with the problem of unsolicited faxes. The telecommunications and telephone selling industries have established a Fax Preference Service to help residential customers reduce the number of faxes they receive. Customers who have a fax machine in their residential premises may register for inclusion in a database against which companies selling via fax "clean" their mailing lists. In addition, under the Telecommunications Act 1984, UK companies using fax marketing are subject to a class licence which contains measures aimed at limiting the nuisance which can be caused by unsolicited faxes. Anyone sending unsolicited faxes must cease doing so to any particular person on receipt of a written request from them, or face possible enforcement action, including the removal of their right to operate a telecoms system, by Oftel. The Department therefore has no plans at present to take further action against the transmission of unsolicited commercial communications through facsimile machines.

Export Licences

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many arms export licences for Saudi Arabia have been (a) applied for, (b) granted and (c) rejected since 1992, in each case listing the categories of equipment they cover; [23003]

(2) how many arms export licences for Kenya have been (a) applied for, (b) granted and (c) rejected since 1992, in each case listing the categories of equipment they cover; [23004]

(3) if she will list the number of arms export licences for Indonesia which were (a) applied for, (b) accepted and (c) rejected since 1992 by category of equipment covered; [23037]

(4) if she will list the number of arms export licences for Turkey which were (a) applied for, (b) accepted and (c) rejected since 1992 by category of equipment covered. [23046]

Mrs. Roche: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy of that reply in the Library of the House.

Trade (Argentina)

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the value of trading between the United Kingdom and the Argentine (a) currently and (b) in each year from 1994 to 1996. [24077]

Mrs. Roche: Data on UK trade in goods with Argentina are given in the table. Data on UK trade in services with Argentina are not available.

UK Trade in goods with Argentina 1994–96 and January–November 1997

£ million

	UK exports	UK imports

HM Customs and Excise data.

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what measures her Department is taking to support British exporters to the Argentine; [24079]

(2) what action she is taking to promote trade between the United Kingdom and the Argentine. [24078]

Mrs. Roche: My noble Friend the Minister for Trade took a trade mission to Argentina in September 1997. Trade opportunities in Argentina are also promoted throughout the United Kingdom in a variety of ways, including seminars, conferences and publications, with the support of my Department and its Export Promoter for Argentina. The full range of overseas trade services are available to individual exporters, such as supported trade missions to and trade fairs in Argentina.

Internet

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what investigations she has undertaken into the prices charged by telecommunications companies to United Kingdom Internet providers for leasing data circuits to other European countries. [24007]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 19 January 1998]: The Department has not conducted any specific investigations into the prices charged by telecoms companies to United Kingdom Internet providers for leasing data circuits to other European countries, and neither has Oftel. I understand that Oftel has not received any representations about this matter, but that it would be happy to consider any such representation which it may receive.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions she has with her European Union counterparts on (a) the Internet and (b) charges for telephone and data circuits between European countries. [24016]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 19 January 1998]: These issues are regularly discussed in the European Union Telecommunications Council. On 26 February I expect to chair discussion in the Council on:

a Commission communication on Globalisation and the Information Society, looking at international co-ordination of policies towards the Internet; and a Commission communication on Member States' implementation of European Union telecommunications legislation, including the directive on Leased Lines.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions she has had with her United States counterpart on the subject of the Internet with particular reference to delays in reorganising the domain name system. [24004]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 19 January 1998]: I and my officials have remained in close contact with the US administration on the future governance of the Internet Domain Name System. We have also supported European Commission action in this area. Much of the delay in reaching a satisfactory outcome to this issue is due to the need to ensure a robust solution which fully represents the interests of all classes of Internet stakeholders in all regions of the world, and anticipates future needs.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the effect that the diversion of intra-European Internet traffic to the United States has on the United Kingdom Internet industry. [24015]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 19 Janaury 1998]: Industry views are divided, both as to whether the present traffic routing adopted by Internet service providers in the UK has a harmful effect on their competitiveness, and whether it is caused by the high prices for leased lines to European destinations compared to trans-Atlantic rates. The presence in the United States of the majority of websites in the world makes it necessary for service providers throughout Europe to lease lines to the US, spare capacity on which can be cheaply used to access each others' networks. I do however share industry's concern at high intra-European leased line prices. I am confident that the full liberalisation of the European Union telecoms market from this month will bring about a rapid and significant fall in these prices.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are her priorities in respect of policies on the Internet during the United Kingdom's presidency of the European Union. [24002]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 19 January 1998]: I attach very strong importance to ensuring that we achieve an environment in the European Union which will foster the development of the Internet. I aim to take this agenda forward during the UK Presidency through discussion of the issues of converging technologies, on Globalisation and the Information Society and on the EU Internet Action Plan.

Amway

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations her Department has received since 1 May on the operation of Amway; if she will publish her responses; what investigations her Department has made into the operations of Amway; what representatives of Amway her Ministers have met since 1 May 1997; and what meetings representatives of her Department have held with individuals to discuss the operation of the company. [24001]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 19 January 1998]: The Department has received numerous letters from one individual and a letter from the hon. Lady on 15 October. I have placed a copy of my reply to her in the Library of the House, but regard other replies as personal to the recipient.

In line with established practice in such cases. Ministers do not confirm or deny whether investigations are taking place or not.

Ministers of this Department have not met representatives of the company during the period in question, nor have officials had any meetings.

Action 2000

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if Action 2000 will define the levels of millennium compliance for each sector of industry. [24378]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 20 January 1998]: Action 2000 is encouraging businesses in all sectors of the economy to decide quickly what steps they need to take to make their critical systems compliant, and will be taking a particular interest in the plans of businesses in key sectors. Action 2000 will aim to benchmark the existing level of compliance across all sectors of the economy and monitoring progress.

Biotechnology

Dr. Kumar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps her Department is taking to develop manufacturing activity in the biotechnology sector. [24070]

Mr. Battle: My Department is committed to getting the climate right for the development of the UK's biotechnology sector. We support a range of research through the Research Councils and technology transfer through, for example, LINK, EUREKA and SMART and specific Biotechnology Challenges to encourage the start-up and growth of new companies.

These measures will help sustain the strong science base and catalyse industrial research and development needed to underpin future manufacturing and production in this sector.

Biochemical Engineering

Dr. Kumar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what assessment she has made of the impact of reductions in the level of support for biochemical engineering research and training in the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council budget; [24071]

(2) what assessment she has made of the level of Government support required in respect of biochemical engineering research and training over the next five years. [24069]

Mr. Battle: Government support for biochemical engineering research and training is primarily the responsibility of the Biotechnology and Biological Science Research Councils (BBSRC). In accordance with its Royal Charter and the well-established relationship between the Research Council and Government, it is for the BBSRC to determine the nature and level of its support for areas of research and training, drawing on the advice of its research and user communities.

I understand that the BBSRC has recently commissioned a review of all its biochemical engineering research and training chaired by Professor Bernard Atkinson, which is due to report in the early summer of 1998.

Employment Law (Seafarers)

Mr. Prosser; To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list those sections of United Kingdom employment law from which British merchant seafarers are presently excluded. [24167]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Section 199(1) of the Employment Rights Act 1996 specifies provisions in that Act from which mariners—whatever their nationality—are excluded where they are employed in a UK registered ship under a crew agreement approved by the Secretary of State. The provisions in question are sections one to seven (concerning the right to a written statement of employment particulars), Part II (protection of wages) and sections 86 to 91 (minimum period of notice).

Section 199(4) of the 1996 Act specifies provisions from which merchant seamen are excluded. These are sections eight to ten (right to itemised pay statement), sections 50–54 (time off work) and Part XII (payments where an employer is insolvent).

Other exclusions from the 1996 Act, as set out in section 196, apply equally to seafarers and other employees working wholly or mainly outside Great Britain, except that section 196(5) and 199(6) provides that certain of these exclusions do not apply to seafarers in certain circumstances.

Equivalent provisions applying in Northern Ireland are included in Article 242 of the Employment Rights (Northern Ireland) Order 1996.

Ethical Trading

Dr. Tonge: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made in discussions with industry and commerce on ethical trading and the labelling of goods to give information on the ethics of their production. [22872]

Mrs. Roche: Increasingly companies are responding to consumers interests by voluntarily adopting codes of practice to help ensure the ethical production of their goods, including those originating overseas. The Government support the Ethical Trading Initiative, a partnership between business, non-governmental organisations and unions which aims to promote the use of such codes, the pursuit of best practice in monitoring them and developing a positive engagement between importers and suppliers to help the latter comply with the codes. The ultimate aim is the universal ethical production of goods sold in the UK. Some goods are already marketed with an indication of ethical production, and moves towards widespread transparency will be welcomed.

Electricity Cabling

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representation she has received from electricity consumers, concerning the laying of underground cables in North West Wales. [24293]

Mr. Battle: One letter has been received which raised the question of underground cables in North West Wales since the General Election last May.

HEALTH

Edgware Hospital

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement concerning the review of Edgware Hospital. [22591]

Mr. Milburn: Following Barnet Health Authority's review of local health services to be provided from the Edgware Hospital site, the health authority has now submitted the recommendations from the review. I am pleased that the process of public consultation adopted by the health authority has achieved a considerable degree of local support and a high level of consensus on the range of services to be provided.

The review has produced workable proposals about the general direction and future of the Edgware Community Hospital. Barnet Health Authority and the Barnet Healthcare National Health Service Trust, working closely with representatives of the local community, will now need to develop these proposals in more detail to satisfy the formal approval processes.

Hospital Trusts (Car Parks)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was received by each hospital trust which has a car park contract operated by Controlled Car Parking, in the last financial year for which figures are available; and if he will estimate the profit made by CCP on each contract in the last financial year for which figures are available. [24166]

Ms Jowell: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Breast Screening

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many breast screening units are not able to screen all women in the 50 to 64 years of age category every three years; and if he will make a statement. [24338]

Mr. Boateng: As at July 1997, 32 units in England were having some difficulty maintaining a three-year screening interval and as a result some women are having to wait longer than three years between screenings. Most of the 32 are less than three months behind schedule.

The Government have made clear that adherence to national standards and rigorous quality control is essential to deliver an effective breast screening programme. Regional Directors of Public Health have been instructed to review the performance of the breast screening programme in their region and, where necessary, agree action plans so that national standards are met, including screening intervals.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account his Department has taken in allocating funds for breast screening of demographic changes. [24340]

Mr. Boateng: The number of women eligible for screening is rising steadily as a result of the post-war baby boom, with a projected increase of almost 10 per cent. between 1997 and 2002. Demographic pressures on the health service as a whole are taken into account in discussion between the Department and Her Majesty's Treasury on public expenditure.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the number of women aged between 65 and 75 who attend breast screening. [24339]

Mr. Boateng: In 1995–96 (the most recent figures available), 57,535 women aged 65 and over were screened for breast cancer. This is a significant increase on the 1994–95 figure of 39,193, and the Government are delighted that more women than ever aged 65 and over are requesting National Health Service mammogram. We do not collect date specifically on the number of women aged 65 to 75 screened each year.

Acheson Report

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the letter (reference S/J/PSO/11213/97) when he expects to receive the Acheson Report relating to accident involvement. [22797]

Ms Jowell: Sir Donald Acheson is expected to report to Ministers in spring 1998, with the full report of the Independent Inquiry into Inequalities in Health to be published in the summer.

Rohypnol

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the Government will ban the drug rohypnol. [24673]

Ms Jowell: Rohypnol is the proprietary name for flunitrazepam, a prescription-only medicine for the short-term treatment of insomnia. It is not prescribable under the National Health Service but may be supplied under private prescription. In view of its attractiveness to drug misusers for self-administration it is already controlled under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971.

There are no plans at present to withdraw the drug rohypnol. Because of concern about possible misuse of rohypnol the manufacturers have modified the formulation, including a dye that will show up in a drink. This new formulation has been approved by the United Kingdom licensing authority and we understand that it will be marketed in the near future.

The Government plan to bring forward amending legislation shortly which will increase the amount of regulation on the drug in the UK, including making it an offence to possess the drug without lawful authority.

GP Fundholders

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what trainjng general practice fundholders receive on how to handle personnel matters; and what plans his Department has to improve such training. [23044]

Mr. Milburn: General practitioner fundholders are expected to equip themselves with the skills to perform the full range of their management duties. Regulation 23(7) of the National Health Service (Fund-holding Practices) Regulations 1996 provides for the practice fund management allowance to be used to meet the cost of training members of the practice and their staff.

The White Paper, "The New NHS" (Cmnd 3807) sets out the Government's intention to develop Primary Care Groups which will succeed the GP fundholding scheme and other current purchasing and commissioning arrangements. The training and development needs of Primary Care Groups will need to be kept under review by all concerned as the new arrangements evolve.

Care Leavers

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent research findings are available from the assessment of services for care leavers, following the Government commitment to monitor the implementation of the Children Act 1989 as it relates to provisions for children leaving care. [23945]

Mr. Boateng: A major research study of leaving care schemes was commissioned by Government following implementation of the Children Act 1989. The research was undertaken by Leeds University and published in 1995 under the title "Moving On". Copies have been placed in the Library.

Further research was commissioned in 1995 from Sheffield University to study the extent to which the extended families of care leavers might offer personal support during the transition to independence. The fieldwork has been completed and the study will be published shortly under the title "Leaving Care in Partnership".

Neuroleptic Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new proposals he has to reduce excessive prescribing of neuroleptic drugs to residents of homes for the elderly. [24755]

Mr. Milburn: The responsibility for prescribing, including repeat prescribing, of medication rests with the doctor who has clinical responsibility for the patient's treatment. We have no present proposals to issue guidance on the prescribing of drugs specifically to residents of homes for the elderly.

The Department provides support for doctors in their clinical decisions, providing information through the British National Formulary, the Drug and Therapeutics and Medicines Resource Centre Bulletins and the Prescribers' Journal, copies of which are available in the Library. Advice is also available from most general practitioners' computer systems which have drug databases with facilities to flag up potential interactions with other drugs or diseases, and when patient review is due. We also encourage the use of community pharmacists in the review and management of medication.

Fibre

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is Her Majesty's Government's recommended daily amount for fibre; and what assessment he has made of the amounts recommended by other organisations. [24459]

Ms Jowell: The Committee on Medical Aspects of Food and Nutrition Policy (COMA), in its Report, "Dietary Reference Values for Food Energy and Nutrients for the United Kingdom" published in 1991, set a Dietary Reference Value (DRV) for the population average intake of non-starch polysaccharide (dietary fibre) at 18 grams per day. In setting this DRV COMA took account of the recommendations of other national and international bodies in this area. Copies of the Report are available in the Library.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Bradford, North (Mr. Rooney) of 22 December 1997, Official Report, columns 459–61; if she will estimate the (a) regional distribution and (b) distribution between household income bands based on quartiles of the income range of claimants of disability living allowance care, disability living allowance mobility and attendance allowance in each year from 1992–93. [22994]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is set out in the tables.

1. The estimates for the financial years 1994–95 and 1995–96 are based on the Family Resources Survey (FRS).

2. The estimates for the combined financial years 1992–93 and 1993–94 are based ont he Family Expenditure Survey (FES). As the FES has a smaller sample size than the FRS we have combined two financial years and not provided estimates for the separate components of DLA.

3. The measure of income used is household equivalised net income before housing costs (BHC). Measured income will include the value of the DLA and AA received. The distribution of recipients changes if the value of DLA and AA from household income as in the following table.

Position in the household income distribution of benefit units in receipt of Disability Living Allowance or Attendance Allowance (GB)

Top 25 per cent.	12	7
All	100	100

1. Incomes are equivalised to adjust for household size and composition. No adjustment is made to household income to reflect any additional needs that people with disabilities might have.

2. Recipients in institutions are not covered by the Family Resources Survey.

3. The FRS is a sample survey and all estimates must be treated as approximate.

4. FRS estimates are available on a GB basis only as the FRS doesn't cover Northern Ireland and NI has no equivalent survey. FES estimates relate to the UK.

5. Results show the proportion of benefit units receiving AA and DLA by position of the benefit unit in the household distribution of income. A benefit unit is defined as a single adult or couple together with any dependent children . A household can comprise more than one benefit unit, for example a pensioner living with their grown up children.

6. Sample sizes are such that differences between the years are unlikely to be statistically significant.

7. For the income distribution which excludes benefits the knock on effect on Income Related Benefit receipt has not been estimated, though this is likely to be small on average.

8. As the question is using a series of years the FES comparable measures of income and FES comparable grossing factors have been used on the FRS.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate for the current year and for 1992 average pensioners income from all sources (a) for all pensioners and (b) for the age groups (i) over 75 years of age, (ii) over 80 years of age and (iii) over 85 years of age. [23669]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is set out in the table.

	1995–96		1992

Pensioner units where the head is aged over 85	191.70	133	135.70	122

Source:

The Pensioners' Incomes Series 1995–96 based on the Family Expenditure Survey.

Notes:

1. The latest year for which information is available is 1995–96.

2. Pensioner Units are defined as single (non-cohabiting) persons over State pension age or couples (married or cohabiting) where the man, defined as the head, is over State pension age.

3. All figures are in July 1995 prices and are rounded to the nearest 10 pence.

4. Figures based on small numbers of pensioner units are subject to sampling error. Therefore, year on year comparisons of small groups, particularly those pensioner units aged over 85, may not be robust.

Incomes

Ms Hewitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the net income of (i) married couple with one earner and two children, (ii) a lone parent with two children and (iii) a single person with no children, on gross earnings of (a) half of average earnings, (b) three-quarters of average earnings, (c) average earnings and (d) twice average earnings allowing for child benefit; and what is the net income of the same groups after allowing for council tax. [23929]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is in the tables.

Net income of a married couple with one earner and two children

Average earnings	367.60	234.32	210.21	226.82	202.71
Twice average earnings	735.20	481.20	457.09	473.70	449.59

1. The weekly average earnings figure of £367.60 has been taken from "Labour Market Trends", published by the Office for National Statistics. It represents national weekly average earnings for all full-time employees at April 1997.

2. For family types with two children, one child is assumed to be under five and the other between five and 10-years-old.

3. The net income figures in the table reflect each family's net weekly income after income tax, National Insurance Contributions, housing costs and all income from benefits (including Child Benefit) have been taken into account.

4. Net incomes also depend on whether or not the family are local authority (LA) or private tenants, since this affects the amount of rent payable and also (possibly) the amount of housing benefit received. Net incomes for both LA tenants and private tenants are included in the table.

5. Each family type is assumed to live in local authority or private rented property appropriate to its size, and to pay average amounts of rent and council tax at April 1997.

6. No Council Tax Benefit is payable in any of the situations covered: earnings are too high.

Councillors' Allowances

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will bring forward proposals to exclude members' allowances received by councillors when calculating benefits and other entitlement. [24156]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We have no immediate plans to change the way councillors' allowances are treated when calculating benefits although we are keeping the individual benefit rules under review. Councillors do already enjoy some important concessions in the benefits system which are not available to other people.

Lone Parents

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the projected change in the numbers of lone parents over the next 10 years. [23522]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the form requested. Neither the Office for National Statistics, which is responsible for demographic statistics on the family, nor the Government Actuary's Department produces projections of the number of lone parent families.

The Department of Social Security makes its own projections for planning purposes and these indicate that the number of lone parent families in Great Britain could increase by about 500,000 to over 2 million by 2006. Such estimates are subject to considerable uncertainty and may over-estimate growth over the next 10 years.

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the level of advice and guidance and staffing available in the pilot projects of the Lone Parent Initiative will be matched when the national roll-out takes place. [24111]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Government plan to continue providing a high quality service once the New Deal for Lone Parents is extended nationwide. Precise staffing levels have yet to be decided but the intention is that advice and guidance available to lone parents and their Personal Advisers will match that available in the eight pilot areas.

Notes:

1. From April 1998, for the New Deal for Lone Parents programme, will be delivered to all lone parents nationally making a new or repeat claim for Income Support.

2. From October 1998, for the New Deal for Lone Parents programme, will be delivered to all lone parents nationwide, existing and new claimants.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the number of claimants and the number of new claims of (a) lone parent benefit and (b) lone parent premium in the Newcastle Benefits Agency district in each year since 1992. [22984]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of Social Security Benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 21 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if she will list the number of claimants and the number of new claims of (a) lone parent benefit and (b) lone parent premium in the Newcastle Benefits Agency (BA) district in each year since 1992.

The information is not available in the format requested. Lone parent benefit details are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Similarly, the number of new claims to Income Support (IS) which include the entitlement to lone parent premium could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The following figures relate to the number of IS customers in the BA's Newcastle District, which includes the Newcastle St. James and Newcastle East offices, who were in receipt of lone parent premium from 1992 to 1996 and for 1997 the higher rate of the family premium, which from April 1997 replaced the lone parent premium. They do not include those lone parent customers who are pensioners nor those registered sick who would qualify for a higher rate premium such as a pensioner or disability. These figures are a snapshot taken at the ene of November in each year; they are the latest available and may be subject to amendment.

Year	Number of cases
1992	7,625
1993	7,645
1994	7,663
1995	7,616
1996	7,529
1997	6,977

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Child Benefit

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to review the operation of child benefit. [24492]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Our manifesto commitment is clear: we will retain Child Benefit where it is universal today, from birth to age 16, and uprate it at least in line with prices.

An inter-Departmental review of all the arrangements for financial support for young people choosing to stay in education beyond compulsory school age is continuing. Child Benefit for 16–18 year olds is part of that review.

Welfare to Work

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances those individuals who have refused to take up one of the four options under the welfare–to–work scheme and had their jobseeker's allowance removed for four weeks will (a) go back onto jobseeker's allowance for six months and (b) go onto income support. [24552]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Jobseeker's Allowance is intended for people who are out of work for reasons beyond their own control. Young people who unreasonably perpetuate their own unemployment by refusing to take up one of the four options offered under the New Deal will be subject to benefit sanctions for as long as they continue to refuse. There is no fifth option of a life on benefit.

Young people will not qualify for Income Support unless they do so under current arrangements.

State Earnings-related Pension Scheme (Rebate)

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the publication date for the Government Actuary Department's report on upgrading the SERPS rebate; and what are the terms of reference for the report. [24491]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Vauxhall (Kate Hoey) on Friday 16 January 1998, Official Report, column 344, which explained that a copy of the report I have received from the Government Actuary has been placed in the Library of both Houses. Its terms of reference are clearly set out in the introduction of the report.

Orders to set new rebate levels from April 1999, with an accompanying report from the Government Actuary, will be brought before both Houses shortly.

Mortgage Protection Policies

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the effect of (a) income from mortgage protection policies and (b) income from other loan insurance policies on entitlement to income-related social security benefits. [24713]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Payments from a mortgage payment protection insurance policy (MPPI) are treated as income for income-related benefit purposes. In Income Support and Jobseeker's Allowance (Income-Based) different rules apply depending on whether or not payment is made directly to the lender or the borrower. If payment is made direct to the lender, the full amount is ignored including capital repayments, endowments, PEPs, building insurance and mortgage payment protection premiums and any ineligible interest payments. The only exception to this is when Income Support Mortgage Interest (ISMI) commences and MPPI is already in payment, the MPPI income is offset against the amount of ISMI due. If paid direct to the borrower, the amount taken into account is the excess after housing costs and related insurance premiums have been deducted.

Income from other types of loan insurance is treated in the same way as most other types of income. It is disregarded if, under the terms of the policy, it is payable to a third party only (in this case, normally the creditor). If it is paid to the insured person it will be taken into account. It may also be taken into account if it is being paid to a third party but could be paid to the insured person.

This approach to the treatment of income in the income-related benefits has been unchanged for many years. Representatives of the insurance industry have recently approached the Department and are having discussions with officials about the application of the rules.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Hill Farming

4. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to assist hill farmers. [22304]

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further steps he proposes to take to assist hill livestock farmers; and if he will make a statement. [22326]

Dr. John Cunningham: In my statement to the House on 22 December 1997, I set out proposals for a special aid package worth £85 million to the livestock industry. Hill Farmers will be particular beneficiaries. Consultation on the detailed arrangements are continuing with the European Commission, and I hope to announce these shortly.

Farm Incomes

13. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to monitor farm income in Yorkshire. [22314]

Mr. Rooker: Farm incomes in Yorkshire are monitored through the Farm Business Survey, conducted in this part of the United Kingdom by Askham Bryan Agricultural College. The college publishes the results annually in "Farming in Yorkshire". It is expected that the next edition of this report, covering results for 1996–97, will be published in February 1998.

22. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will meet farmers from Leicestershire to discuss the fall in farm incomes during 1997. [22324]

Mr. Rooker: I have no plans to meet farmers from Leicestershire, but I am always ready to listen to farmers or their representatives.

Fisheries

14. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the Government's priorities with regard to reform of the CFP. [22315]

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which aspects of the Common Fisheries Policy he is seeking to reform. [24762]

Mr. Morley: The Government are pursuing a wide-ranging agenda of improvements to the Common Fisheries Policy. Our priorities include making the CFP a more effective instrument for conservation, improving enforcement, introducing a greater regional dimension into decision-making, strengthening the economic benefits that countries derive from their quotas and improving the way we manage quotas in the UK.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the United Kingdom share under the 1983 allocation relating to fisheries will remain constant irrespective of any new members joining the EU (a) during and (b) after the transitional period to the Common Fisheries Policy has expired. [23700]

Mr. Morley: The Government are committed to maintaining the UK's share of fish established under the principle of relative stability both up to and after the review of the Common Fisheries Policy in 2002.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what benefits he seeks to achieve for British fishermen by reform of the Common Fisheries Policy. [24761]

Mr. Morley: By improving the Common Fisheries Policy, the Government seek to safeguard fish stocks and secure a sustainable future for the sea fishing industry.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what procedure he will follow to achieve reform of the Common Fisheries Policy; [24712]

(2) what is his time scale for achieving reform of the Common Fisheries Policy. [24711]

Mr. Morley: The Common Fisheries Policy as a whole will be reviewed by the Council of Ministers in 2002. However, the Government are working to achieve improvements before then by promoting measures in the areas which it has identified as priorities.

Food Standards and Safety

15. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in addition to the Food Standards Agency, what plans the Government have to promote improved food standards and safety throughout the country. [22316]

Mr. Rooker: We are acting essentially as if the Agency were already in place. We continue to strengthen our approach to food safety issues, giving clear priority to the protection of public health and building on our commitment to openness, transparency and responsiveness to the consumer.

26. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further research is being carried out by his Department to ensure the safety of UK meat products. [22328]

Mr. Rooker: The Department funds a substantial programme of research to ensure the safety of meat and meat products. This focuses on the control of foodborne zoonoses and potential zoonoses, meat hygiene and food hygiene. The results of this research, which includes work on transmissible spongiform encephalopathies, contribute to the data on which policy decisions and actions are based. In all, it is expected that some £16 million will be deployed in this way during the 1997–98 financial year.

Milk Quotas

16. Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of milk quotas. [22317]

Mr. Morley: Current legal authority for the milk quota system is due to expire at the end of March 2000. We are pressing for reform of the dairy regime in Brussels to help our industry compete effectively on world markets. Detailed legislative proposals are expected from the Commission in March this year and these will be the subject of careful scrutiny and negotiation.

Beef Farming

17. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to visit Somerset to discuss the beef sector with local farmers. [22318]

Dr. John Cunningham: I have no specific plans to visit beef farmers in Somerset in the near future. However, I continue to have meetings with the National Farmers Union and other organisations representing farmers interests, when matters affecting the beef sector arise.

Pigs (Tail Docking)

18. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to enforce the regulations relating to the tail docking of pigs; and if he will make a statement. [22319]

Mr. Morley: The regulations concerning the tail docking of pigs are enforced by the State Veterinary Service. We have instructed our Veterinary Officers to pay particular attention to this practice when carrying out their inspections.

Genetically Modified Organisms

19. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had with food retailers about genetically modified organisms. [22320]

Mr. Rooker: I have held a number of meetings with food retailers since May where I have explained the Government's determination to ensure that all foods which contain genetically modified material are both safe and clearly labelled.

Common Agricultural Policy

20. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which specific changes to the CAP would receive his support. [22322]

Mr. Rooker: The Government will support proposals to reform the CAP which would secure a more market oriented policy with lower overall costs and which do not discriminate against UK farmers.

Beef Ban

21. Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress he is making on lifting the ban on British beef. [22323]

Mr. Rooker: The Commission has approved a draft proposal for the Export Certified Herds Scheme which will be presented to the Standing Veterinary Committee very soon. The scheme would operate in Northern Ireland initially but the principles could be extended to Great Britain once the computerised tracing system is fully functional.

In October we submitted proposals for a UK scheme to export beef from cattle born after 1 August 1996 (Date Based Export Scheme). In its Opinion of 9 December the Scientific Steering Committee gave a positive response to the principle of a Date Based Export Scheme. Officials are currently discussing the next steps with the Commission.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department evaluated from other EU countries prior to its decision to ban the sale of beef on the bone. [22321]

Mr. Rooker: The research into BSE infectivity on which the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee based its recent advice on dorsal root ganglia and bone marrow was carried out in the UK. The Committee keeps under review research findings worldwide, but, in the absence of any relevant research results from other countries, this particular advice was based solely on UK research.

Beef

23. Mr. Grogan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to improve confidence in British beef. [22325]

Mr. Rooker: The Government have continued to support various initiatives to help restore and improve consumer confidence in beef. As a result we have seen significant improvements in the level of beef consumption, indicating the return of consumer confidence.

25. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will continue to allow family butchers to remove beef from the bone. [22327]

Mr. Rooker: Yes. The Beef Bones Regulations 1997 permit bones to be removed from bone-in-beef in food premises, which include butchers' shops.

Fishing Industry

27. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) Spanish and (b) Dutch fishermen fishing against the UK quota have had their licences removed since 1 May. [22329]

Mr. Morley: No owners of UK registered fishing vessels have had their licences removed since 1 May.

28. Mrs. Humble: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations. [22330]

Mr. Morley: I last met representatives of the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations on 19 December 1997.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what relationship his Department envisages witht he Scottish Executive in negotiations on the common fisheries policy. [22302]

Mr. Morley: Scottish Executive Minsters and officials will be fully involved, as part of the UK team headed by this Department, in formulating and supporting the UK's negotiating line on Common Fisheries Policy matters.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all overseas visits made since 1 May 1997 on which he or any other Minister in his Department has been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code, indicating (a) who accompanied him (b) the cost to public funds of each such visit. [23263]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 15 January 1998]: I can confirm that under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code, Mrs. Cunningham accompanied me on two official overseas visits, the details of which are given. Her costs, in respect of the visit to Rome, have not been met from public funds.

Date	Location	Meeting	£
25 May 1997–27 May 1997	Netherlands	May Informal Agriculture Council of EU Ministers	[1]2,288.00
10 October 1997–12 October 1997	Rome	Bilateral with Italian Agriculture Minister	1,062.00

Countryside Stewardship Scheme

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the number and location of Countryside Stewardship Scheme public access sites in (a) the Brighton, Pavilion constituency and (b) East and West Sussex; what steps have been taken to inform the public of access to Countryside Stewardship Scheme access sites; and what sums his Department has (i) spent to date and (ii) contracted to spend in respect of payments for public access to these sites. [23936]

Mr. Morley: There are no Countryside Stewardship Scheme public access sites in the Brighton, Pavilion constituency.

There are 25 public access sites in East Sussex and 16 in West Sussex. Their locations are as follows:

East Sussex

1. Hole Farm, nr Herstmonceux
2. Forge Farms, nr Burwash Weald
3. Rocks Farm, nr Brede
4. Hempstead Farm, nr Hailsham
5. France Bottom, nr Alfriston, Willingdon levels, Folkington Hill
6. Hewenstreet Circuit, nr South Chailey
7. Wagmary Wood, nr Brede Broad Oak
8. Great Danegate Farm, nr Rotherfield
9. Pebsham Farm, nr Bexhill
10. Court Lodge Farm, nr Wartling
11. Lewes Brooks, nr Lewes
12. Highfields Circuit, nr Mayfield
13 Barelands, nr Wadhurst
14. Brightling Park, nr Brightling
15. Chilly Brooks, nr Lewes
16. Scrag Oak Farm, Nr Icklesham
17. Eridge Old Park, nr Frant
18. Foxhunt Park Farm, nr East Hoathly
19. Sunninglye Farm, nr Bells Yew Green
20. Ouse Banks, nr Uckfield
21. Pippins Farm, Pembury
22. Little Buds, Hastings
23. Lunsfold Farm, Hastings
24. Northease Farm, nr Lewes
25. Hale Court, Hartfield.

West Sussex

1. Wiggonholt Common, nr Wiggonholt
2. Kings. Barn Farm/Foxhall Farm, nr Steyning
3. Daylands Farm, nr Ashington
4. Pulborough Brooks, nr Pulborough

12. Frylands Farm, nr Wineham
13. Lower Fittleworth Meadows, nr Fittleworth
14. Apuldram Manor Farm, nr Chichester
15. Imberhorne Farm, nr East Grinstead.

The list includes sites on which grant is already being paid and new sites entered into the scheme in 1997 on which grant has yet to be paid.

The sums spent on these sites to date is:

East Sussex: £76,827

West Sussex: £82,163.

The sums contracted to be spent are:

East Sussex: £217,840

West Sussex: £198,687.

The figures for contracted expenditure include the total ten-year cost for each access agreement, i.e. the sums spent to date plus the value of payments scheduled for payment during the remaining years of the agreements.

The Department informs the public of access to Countryside Stewardship scheme access sites by actively promoting the location of the site, how to find it and features of interest. The details, which include a map of the site, are published annually in the Department's Conservation Walks register. This is sent to all interested national organisations such as the Rambler's Association and local Tourist Information offices, Councils and Libraries. It is also available on the Internet. Registers, which are available on a county basis, are regularly updated and copies can be requested from the Department's offices. Details of sites have also been included in several local authority and other publications and the register has been publicised through the "Country Walking" magazine.

Offshore Dredging

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has evaluated regarding the effect of offshore dredging for aggregates on sea defences and coastal erosion. [23699]

Mr. Morley: Licences for the extraction of marine aggregates are granted by the Crown Estate only if there has been a favourable response under the Government View Procedure, co-ordinated by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. In contributing to the Government View, this Department takes account of studies undertaken by independent experts for each licence application to assess the potential impact on the coastline.

Farming (New Entrants)

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for 1998–99 to provide financial support to new entrants into farming; and on what criteria such support will be based. [24361]

Mr. Morley: For many, the most appropriate way to enter the industry is through employment. Training is important. We are providing over £3 million in the next three years through the Department's contract with ATB-Landbase and through Sector Challenge to facilitate training as well as a grant to the National Federation of Young Farmers Clubs to support education and training activities. Newcomers to sheep and suckler cow farming may also apply to the National Reserve for free premium quota, subject to availability.

Whales

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy in respect of the applications by indigenous populations to recommend whaling. [23404]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 19 Janaury 1998]: The Government recognise the need to preserve the way of life and culture of indigenous peoples, and within the IWC has supported the granting of aboriginal subsistence quotas where these were justified by the needs of the indigenous people concerned and are fully sustainable. We consider it unlikely, however, that indigenous people who are not currently whaling will be able to demonstrate a valid need.

Agriculture Council

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 19 and 20 January; and if he will make a statement. [24853]

Dr. John Cunningham: I chaired the first meeting of the European Union Council of Agriculture Ministers under the United Kingdom Presidency of the EU on 20 January in Brussels. My noble Friend, Lord Donoughue, Parliamentary Secretary responsible for the farming and food industry, represented the United Kingdom. My noble Friend, Lord Dubs, Under-Secretary of State in the Northern Ireland Office, was also present.

I informed EU Ministers of the United Kingdom's priorities in the Agriculture Council for the six months of the UK Presidency, emphasising in particular the priority we shall attach to starting negotiations on the CAP reform elements of Agenda 2000, on making progress on animal welfare proposals, on bringing the EU banana regime into line with the recent WTO ruling, whilst respecting the EU's obligations to ACP and EU producers, and completing the forthcoming CAP price fixing.

In the course of the Council, the Commissioner gave a presentation of his recent proposal to amend the EU banana regime, and Ministers gave their initial reactions to this. I undertook to take forward the technical work on this proposal as rapidly as possible in order to facilitate early agreement in the Council in the interests of all those, in particular producers in the ACP countries, who are affected by the WTO ruling.

I invited colleagues to give their views on the Commission's recent reports on the operation of the agri-environmental and forestry regulations introduced as part of the 1992 CAP reforms. This gave rise to a useful debate which will inform the Commission's preparations for the agri-environmental and rural development elements of the forthcoming Agenda 2000 proposals.

The Agriculture Commissioner gave a brief report to the Council on the recent ruling by the WTO Appellate Body on hormones in beef. The Council will hear further reports from the Commission on the handling of this ruling once there has been time to analyse its implications in greater detail. The Commissioner also reported in depth his recent exchanges with the United States Agriculture Secretary about issues in discussion between the EU and the US concerning the adoption of a veterinary equivalence agreement. Commissioner Fischler emphasised the constructive and positive nature of recent exchanges, and expressed the hope that an agreement could be concluded in the near future. I emphasised my wish to see this achieved as soon as possible during the UK Presidency.

Countryside Access Legislation

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultation there will be with the farming community in discussions preceding any countryside access legislation. [22307]

Mr. Morley: The Government have already had preliminary discussions with a number of organisations including those representing the farming community. It will hold further meetings and will consider carefully all points made in response to the consultation document which will be issued shortly.

SCOTLAND

Health Service Trusts (Appointments)

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names of the persons he has appointed to the posts of chairmen/women and non-executive directors of National Health Service trusts; and if he will make a statement. [19712]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 10 December 1997]: The information requested has been placed in the Library and lists all appointments to Health Boards and NHS Trusts since 1 May 1997. In making these appointments, I have ensured that the voice of Scotland's local communities will be heard in the boardroom of these health bodies.

Dental Services

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many dentists were engaged in NHS practice on (a) 31 October 1992 and (b) 31 October 1997, in each health board area in Scotland. [18703]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 8 December 1997]: The information requested is contained in the table:

Number of principal dentists offering NHS general dental services in Scotland[1]

[2] A dentist is counted in only one Health Board even if he/she practises in more than one Health Board area.

[3] Figures for October 1992 are not available from the Common Services Agency's Dental Practice Division. The nearest available date is September 1992.

Human Identification Centre

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the facial reconstruction techniques carried out by the Human Identification Centre at Glasgow University; and if he will make a statement on their application. [20251]

Mr. McLeish: The Scottish Office is aware of the work in this field being carried out at the University of Glasgow. The work, which is not yet complete, has the potential to benefit a wide range of disciplines, including plastic surgery and the modelling of facial characteristics based on skulls with no other form of identification.

Locate in Scotland

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the resources available to Locate in Scotland. [22033]

Mr. Wilson: Locate in Scotland's total budget for the current financial year is £8.8 million. This covers staff costs, operations and marketing.

Welfare to Work

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the number of places likely to be offered and the number of likely applicants for places in the New Deal and welfare to work programmes in each area within Scotland. [22253]

Mr. Wilson: Current estimates suggest that in 1998–99 in Scotland around 30,200 young people who have been claiming Jobseeker's Allowance for six months or more will enter the Gateway stage of the programme. Of these around 40 per cent. are expected to find un-subsidised jobs and the remainder will take up one of the programme's four options. The table provides a breakdown into each of the 23 New Deal delivery areas in Scotland.

Planning for the New Deal for people aged 25 or over who have been unemployed for two years continues. The information required is not yet available.

Economic Policies

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Government's economic policies for Scotland. [22748]

Mr. Wilson: The Government's central economic objective is to achieve high and stable levels of economic growth and employment so that higher living standards and greater job opportunities can be shared by all. The conduct of UK macroeconomic policy is based on creating economic stability, with low inflation and low public borrowing, and improving the environment for long-term investment in technology and in education and training.

The specific requirements of the Scottish economy are being addressed by The Scottish Office in conjunction with Scottish Enterprise, Highlands and Islands Enterprise, the Local Enterprise Companies and the other economic development agencies. By raising skill levels and increasing investment, we will work towards the goal of improving living standards across the country.

Unemployment

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the trends in respect of long-term unemployment in Scotland. [22749]

Mr. Wilson: The Office for National Statistics (ONS) produces two measures of unemployment. The first is derived from the quarterly Labour Force Survey, and is defined on a consistent and internationally recognised basis set out by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and counts as unemployed people who are: (a) without a paid job; (b) available to start work within the next two weeks and (c) have either looked for work in the last four weeks or are waiting to start a job already obtained.

ONS also publishes figures on the number of people who are claiming Jobseeker's Allowance or National Insurance Credits. This is published monthly and known as the Claimant Count.

Defining long term unemployment as those who have been unemployed for 12 months or more, the data requested are shown in the table.

Number of people in Scotland ILO unemployed for 12 months or more

Summer 1992 to Summer 1997 (not seasonally adjusted)

	Number
Summer 1992	96,000
Summer 1993	102,000
Summer 1994	92,000
Summer 1995	92,000
Summer 1996	75,000
Summer 1997	70,000

Poor People

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will carry out an assessment of the impact of his Department's current policies on the (a) income, (b) employment opportunities and (c) living standards, of the poorest 30 per cent. of the population. [23340]

Mr. Wilson: The Scottish Office recognises the need to assess the impact of its policies on all groups in the community.

A key factor in improving the income and living standards of the poorest 30 per cent. of the population will be the creation of better employment opportunities. The New Deal programmes for the young and long-term unemployed, for lone parents and for those with a disability or long-term illness are designed to help participants into real, lasting and worthwhile employment.

We shall shortly be issuing a consultation paper on social exclusion in Scotland to take views on current policies and practices and on options and priorities for the future. This consultation process will be followed by a "summit" to discuss the way forward. We have also established a "Social Exclusion Network" of senior officials to co-ordinate the efforts of Government departments and Agencies in Scotland.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all overseas visits made since 1 May 1997 on which he or any other Minister in his Department has been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code, indicating (a) who accompanied him or her (b) the cost to public funds of each such visit. [23250]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 15 January 1998]: None.

Urban Transport

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his statement of 12 January 1998, Official Report, column 22, if he will list (a) the legislative requirements and (b) the financial resources needed to meet the integration needs of Scotland's urban transport system. [23309]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 16 January 1998]: My right hon. Friend is to publish in the spring a Transport White Paper setting out our proposals for an integrated, sustainable and effective transport system appropriate for the people of Scotland. The legislative requirements and the financial resources needed will depend upon the policies to be pursued.

Broadcasting

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his statement on 12 January 1998, Official Report, column 63, when he will make a statement on the position of the Scottish Parliament and broadcasting. [23311]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The Scotland Bill provides for broadcasting to be reserved. The White Paper indicated that the Scottish Parliament will be able to invite broadcasters operating in Scotland to give evidence to it. The provisions in the Bill are consistent with that. There will be opportunities to debate broadcasting in the Committee and subsequent stages of the Bill.

Devolution

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what basis the Minister of State asserted in his oral statement on 13 January 1998, Official Report, column 157, that asymmetric devolution should improve the government of the United Kingdom. [23532]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 16 January 1998]: My hon. Friend's statement reflects the Government's belief that the government of the United Kingdom will be improved by the decentralisation of power throughout Britain. The Government are committed to a programme of devolution appropriate to the needs and aspirations of each part of the United Kingdom which brings government closer to the people and gives people more control over their own affairs.

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his statement of 12 January 1998, Official Report, column 115, on which devolved matters, arising out of clause 27(7) of the Scotland Bill, the United Kingdom Parliament can legislate after the Scottish Parliament is established. [23304]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 16 January 1998]: Clause 27(7) of the Scotland Bill makes it clear that the ability of the Scottish Parliament to make legislation does not affect the power of the Parliament of the United Kingdom to make laws for Scotland. This applies in respect of all matters whether devolved or reserved.

NHS Primary Care

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums were spent on NHS primary care services in Scotland in (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96 and (iii) 1996–97, broken down by (a) pharmaceutical services, (b) general medical services, (c) general ophthalmic services and (d) general dental services; and what percentage of the total each represented in each of the above years. [23842]

Mr. Galbraith: The information requested is set out in the table:

FHS Expenditure

	1994–95		1995–96		1996–97
	£'000	Percentage of total	£'000	Percentage of total	£'000	Percentage of total

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums have been allocated to the NHS primary care service in Scotland in 1997–98, and the total broken down into (a) pharmaceutical services, (b) general medical services, (c) general ophthalmic services and (d) general dental services; and what percentage of the total each of these represents. [23841]

Mr. Galbraith: The information requested is set out in the table:

FHS 1997–98

	£(000)	Percentage
Pharmaceutical Services	599,481	53.16
General Medical Services	336,372	29.83
General Dental Services	162,192	14.38
General Ophthalmic Services	29,288	2.60
Misc. (refund of patient charges not due)	282	0.03
Total	1,127,615

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the sums paid for drugs, medicines, dressings and appliances prescribed and dispensed by dispensing doctors in Scotland under the NHS primary care service in (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1996–97, and the allocation for 1997–98, and the budget from which these sums were drawn. [23826]

Mr. Galbraith: The amounts reimbursed to dispensing doctors in respect of items dispensed in the financial years 1994–95 to 1996–97 are set out in the table.

No specific allocation has been made for the reimbursement of dispensing doctors in 1997–98.

The budget from which reimbursement is made is on Class XIII, Vote 4 Hospital, Community Health, Family Health, and other health services and Welfare Food, Scotland.

Totals	15,146,520	15,782,191	17,379,826

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of the Scottish NHS primary care pharmaceutical budget was allocated to the remuneration of pharmacy contractors in (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1996–97; how this proportion is determined, and what proportion of the sums allocated to the Scottish NHS primary care pharmaceutical budget for 1997–98 has been made available for this purpose. [23840]

Mr. Galbraith: The proportion of the Scottish NHS primary care pharmaceutical budget allocated to the remuneration of pharmacy contractors in 1994–95, 1995–96 and 1996–97 and 1997–98 is set out in the table.

Remuneration of community pharmacists is not determined as a proportion of the budget but is determined in negotiation with the profession within the parameters of the Government's policy in relation to public sector pay.

The amount allocated for the remuneration of pharmacy contractors in 1997–98 reflects the introduction of local contracts for certain pharmaceutical services. £3.82 million was top sliced from the amount allocated for remuneration and distributed to health boards to pay for locally contracted services.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the fees and allowances paid to dispensing doctors in Scotland under the NHS primary care service in (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96 and (iii) 1996–97 and the allocation for 1997–98; from which budget these sums were drawn; and for what reason. [23839]

Mr. Galbraith: The information for Scotland for the financial years 1994–95 to 1996–97 is shown in the table.

No specific allocation has been made for dispensing doctors' remuneration in 1997–98.

The budget from which these sums were voted is on Class XIII, Vote 4 Hospital, Community Health, Family Health, and other health services and Welfare Food, Scotland.

Please note that all payment rates have been given to two decimal places.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the levels of (a) suckler cow, (b) ewe premium and (c) HLCA payments for beef and sheep per animal at cash prices and at 1997 prices for each of the last five years and his proposals for 1998–99. [23483]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 16 January 1998]: Set out below are the levels of payment per animal under the three schemes, at cash prices and at 1997 prices, except for proposed rates for 1998–99 which are not yet known. Rates for the Sheep Annual and Suckler Cow Premium Schemes are fixed by the Commission. The 1998 rates of Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance have yet to be finalised and approved by the Commission following the 1997 Autumn Review of Economic Conditions in the Hills and Uplands.

Paedophiles

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his proposals to set up a mechanism to track paedophiles throughout the United Kingdom. [23738]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 19 January 1998]: The Sex Offenders Act 1997, which came into force on 1 September 1997, requires certain convicted sex offenders, including those who have been convicted for sexual offences against children, to register with the police their name, current address and date of birth, and any subsequent changes to these details. This is a UK Act, which will help the police in each territorial jurisdiction to keep track of such offenders even when they move between jurisdictions.

Section 48 of the Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Act 1997, which was brought into force in November 1997, extended police powers to take DNA and other samples from persons convicted of certain serious sexual or violent offences. This will significantly enhance the national DNA database, which is a vital tool in the investigation of such crimes.

The Sex Offender Orders, proposed in the Crime and Disorder Bill currently before Parliament, will provide a further measure of protection for the public by prohibiting behaviour by convicted sex offenders where that is causing concern for public safety, and obliging them to register with the police.

I know that the police in Scotland are fully committed to their operational role in monitoring the whereabouts of known sex offenders and given that the Sex Offenders Act is a UK measure there is full co-operation between Forces across the UK.

Rights of the Child

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Scottish Office will respond separately to the UN Committee Report on the United Kingdom's performance in implementing the UN Convention on the Rights of The Child. [24343]

Mr. Galbraith: No. The obligation to report to the UN Committee applies to the UK as a whole. The forthcoming Report to the Committee will therefore be a UK Report, although it will fully recognise the significant contribution Scotland is making in implementing the Convention.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to appoint a children's rights commissioner in Scotland. [24345]

Mr. Galbraith: The Government have no plans to appoint a children's rights commissioner in Scotland. There are already in place independent complaints procedures and inspection arrangements for services provided by local authorities. Voluntary organisations such as ChildLine and the Scottish Child Law Centre, which are both supported with Government grant, also play an important part. However in the process of preparing the Second UK Report to the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child this year, an assessment may be made of the potential contribution such an appointment might bring to safeguard the interests of children.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to involve young people in Scotland in the process of preparing the Government's response to the report on the United Kingdom's performance in implementing the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. [24342]

Mr. Galbraith: During 1998 the Government will be preparing the Second United Kingdom Report to the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child in accordance with the requirements of Article 44 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 1989. Early in that process there will be a UK wide Launch Conference at which children will be making a presentation. We are currently considering the means by which the views of Scottish young people can best be reflected in the Scottish contribution to the Report.

Forestry Stewardship Certification Scheme

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects Forest Enterprise to commit itself to the Forestry Stewardship Certification Scheme. [24311]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 20 January 1998]: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by Forest Enterprise. I have asked its Chief Executive, Dr. Bob McIntosh, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Bob McIntosh to Mr. James Paice, dated 22 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Scotland has asked me to reply to your Question about when it is expected that Forest Enterprise will commit itself to the Forestry Stewardship Certification Scheme.

Forest Enterprise has no current plans to seek certification by the Forestry Stewardship Council. The wider issue of certification of British forests is being actively debated within the UK forestry community and the Forestry Stewardship Council is a party to these discussions. It is hoped that a scheme which satisfies all parties can be brokered by the Forestry Commission and at that stage Forest Enterprise will decide whether, in addition to independent certification, it sees market advantages in seeking endorsement by the Forestry Stewardship Council or indeed any other similar body.

I hope this answers your question, but please come back to me if you would like further information.

Unpasteurised Milk

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to lift the ban on the sale of raw unpasteurised milk for drinking in Scotland. [24737]

Mr. Galbraith: None.

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the practice of consumers in Scotland purchasing raw unpasteurised milk for drinking which originated from outlets in England. [24738]

Mr. Galbraith: The Dairy Products (Hygiene) (Scotland) Regulations 1995 prohibit the sale in Scotland of unpasteurised cows' milk for drinking. They do not prevent consumers purchasing, for their own use, raw cows' drinking milk in England and returning with it to Scotland.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

National Curriculum (Swimming)

Valerie Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what effect the proposed revision of the curriculum structure for Key Stage II, in respect of literacy and numeracy, will have on the swimming requirement. [24390]

Ms Estelle Morris: The measures announced by my right hon. Friend on 13 January were designed to encourage a sharper focus on literacy and numeracy and will give primary schools greaterflexibility in how they approach six National Curriculum foundation subjects including physical education. Schools will continue to be required to teach all these subjects, and will be required to have regard to their existing programmes of study.

Valerie Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of children in 1996–97, achieved the minimum swimming requirement of the national curriculum at Key Stage II, and on what basis the calculation was made. [24389]

Ms Estelle Morris: This information is not currently collected by the Department.

School Population

Mr. Dorrell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment by how much he expects the school population to increase in the summer of 1998 as a result of the introduction of a single school leaving date of 30 June. [24299]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 20 January 1998]: The single school leaving date for 1998 and successive years is the last Friday in June in the school year in which child reaches age 16. In 1998 the date will be Friday 26 June. It has been estimated that under the previous arrangements as many as 17,000 young people, many of them capable of securing good GCSE results, had been leaving school earlier in the year with no qualifications.

Education Spending (Northumberland)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much was spent in total on education in Northumberland at constant prices in each of the last 10 years. [23994]

Mr. Byers: The following table shows total gross expenditure by Northumberland local education authority from 1987–88 to 1996–97, the latest year for which figures are available. These figures have not been adjusted for any changes of function.

Total gross expenditure: (1997–98 prices)

Nursery Education

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the current average cost of providing a full-time nursery place in Northumberland Education Authority. [24017]

Mr. Byers: In 1996–97, the latest year for which data are available, the net institutional expenditure per nursery pupil was £2,000.

Education Expenditure

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the amount spent per pupil in each unitary authority in England for 1996–97 and the projected investment per pupil for the year, indicating the percentage change between the figures. [24060]

Mr. Byers: The following table gives the information requested for those unitary authorities formed as a result of Local Government Reorganisation. The figures are derived from the budget and outturn statements produced by the local education authorities under section 122 of the 1996 Education Act, for the financial year 1996–97.

The General Schools Budget (GSB) for any financial year for each LEA is defined as the amount appropriated by the authority for meeting expenditure in the year in respect of all schools required to be covered in the year by an scheme made by the authority (s101(3)a Education Act 1996).

Class Sizes

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average class size in the Ludlow constituency of (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools. [24429]

Mr. Byers: The average class size of classes taught by one teacher in maintained primary and secondary schools in the Ludlow constituency in January 1997 were 26.4 and 20.2 respectively.

Temporary Classrooms

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many temporary classrooms are at present located on (a) nursery, (b) primary and (c) secondary school sites in Northumberland Education Authority's area. [23988]

Mr. Byers: Figures supplied by Northumberland Education Authority indicate that they have 5 nursery units in temporary classrooms on primary school sites, 44 single and 9 double other temporary classrooms located on primary school sites and 36 single and 10 double temporary classrooms on secondary school sites. There are also 4 single and 1 double temporary classrooms on sites at special schools.

Classroom Technicians

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the numbers of classroom technicians broken down to show those employees in (a) part-time, (b) full-time, (c) permanent part-time and (d) all other categories. [24061]

Mr. Byers: The latest available information is shown in the following table.

These figures supersede those shown in the Answer given on 8 December 1997, Official Report column 432; the figure for special schools is a revised figure.

Full-time equivalent numbers of technicians[1] in schools in England: January 1997

	Full-time	Part-time	Total
Nursery	n/a	n/a	n/a
Primary	n/a	n/a	n/a n/a = not available.

[1] Includes laboratory assistants/technicians, design technology assistants/technicians (including home economics assistants, craft technicians), IT technicians.

[2] Includes maintained and non-maintained special schools.

Due to rounding there may be discrepancies between the sum of constituent items and the total shown.

Northumberland Education Authority

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what were the numbers of staff and the administrative costs of the Northumberland Education Authority and the number of school pupils for which the authority was responsible in the last three years for which figures are available. [24018]

Mr. Byers: The following table sets out the requested information for the years 1994–95 to 1996–97, the latest year for which all three sets of figures requested are available. Data for different years may not be directly comparable, owing to changes in the pattern of direct service delivery by the LEA.

Rugby

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list by name, nationality and club (a) ruby league and (b) rugby union players who are not British citizens and have permission to work in the United Kingdom. [22730]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department is not able to provide the information in the form requested. Work permits are not required by citizens of the European Economic Area (EEA) or their spouses or by some Commonwealth citizens through their UK ancestry. During 1997 the Overseas Labour Service issued 124 work permits for rugby league players and 32 permits for rugby union players.

Beef Industry

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the impact on rural employment levels of the current crisis in the beef industry. [22596]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Department for Education and Employment has made no estimate but the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has commissioned an independent study to provide a comprehensive assessment of the economic impact of BSE across the whole UK economy and within particular regions. For those whose employment prospects may have been adversely affected, the Department for Education and Employment has a wide variety of programmes to help unemployed people find work or improve employability through education and training.

Student Loans

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what would be the maximum a student studying for a B.Ed honours degree paying full tuition fees on the grounds of parental income could borrow under the student loan scheme; how much of the loan the student would be expected to repay in the first year of a teaching career; and how many years are permitted for the repayment of the whole of the loan. [22866]

Dr. Howells: The maximum amount that a student can borrow will depend on the length of the course and the place of study, as well as the student's and his or her parents' or spouse's income. A student completing a four-year course outside London which began in 1999 who took out the full loan available each year might expect to have borrowed a total of between £10,470 and £13,710 in 1998 prices, depending on his or her individual, parental or spouse's income.

A typical graduate teacher earning £14,463 in the first year of his or her career (in 1998 prices) would be expected to repay about £33.50 per month, slightly less than 3 per cent. of income. The length of the repayment period for the whole of the loan would depend on the individual graduate's income throughout his or her career and on the total amount borrowed. The more the graduate earned, the quicker he or she would repay the loan. We estimate that a typical teacher might take around 11 years to repay.

Outstanding loans will be cancelled if borrowers have not repaid by the time they reach the age of 65, provided there has been no default.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the sale of the existing tranche of the Student Loan portfolio will be completed; and what level of subsidy to the private sector has been agreed. [22867]

Dr. Howells: Final bids from the shortlisted bidders are due on Friday 16 January and the sale will be completed before the end of the financial year. The level of subsidy will depend on the outcome of the competition.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the distribution of households in each region of England between the income bands he recommends for the assessment of future tuition fees; and if he will estimate the marginal fee contribution increase rate against household income increase in the income band where a fee contribution short of the total amount is required. [22975]

Dr. Howells: On the basis of the most recent information reported by the LEAs for English and Welsh domiciled students attending institutions in the UK we have estimated that just over 30 per cent. of students (where parental income is taken into account) will make no contribution to fees. This corresponds to a residual family income of less than £16,945. Just under 30 per cent. of students will contribute less than £1,000, corresponding to a residual family income between £16,945 and £27,115.

Under the present mandatory awards regulations, parental contributions are calculated on the basis of residual income, which is derived by subtracting certain allowances from parents' gross income for income tax purposes. Total household incomes will thus usually be higher than the figures for gross income and residual income quoted above, but the figures will vary from household to household according to their family circumstances.

The table sets out figures for 1995–96 for each of the regions of England, as requested.

South East	26.2	21.7
South West	34.2	26.7

[1] Made by LEAs in England to Students normally domiciled in their area.

[2] Regional totals have been grossed to compensate for missing returns.

In academic year 1998–99 a students contribution to the £1,000 tuition fee will be calculated as follows: Students with residual family income between £16,945 and £21,659 will be required to contribute £1 for every extra £13 of residual parental income above £16,945. Students are then expected to contribute a further £1 for every £9.20 by which residual family income exceeds £21,660.

Higher and Further Education Institutions (Mergers)

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment who has the ultimate responsibility for agreeing the merger of higher and further education institutions; and what is his Department's policy on such mergers. [22868]

Dr. Howells: Final decisions are for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, normally on the basis of advice from the Further Education Funding Council for England following consultation with interested parties. He will consider each case on its merits. He would welcome closer working relationships between FE and HE institutions, whether or not a formal partnership is involved.

Student Support Agency

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the efficiency savings which will result from the operation of the Student Support Agency. [24424]

Dr. Howells: Much would depend on the functions of the agency, the timetable for its introduction and the alternatives.

The National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education recommended reforms to student support. It recommended that student support should be administered centrally, to improve efficiency and reduce costs. The Government see some attractions in this approach but consider that it needs to be examined in more detail.

The Government are also conscious that there are complex transitional arrangements which form part of the Dearing student support reforms. Until the academic year 1999–00, there will be very many different entitlements for students in the HE system. Therefore the Government are adopting a traditional approach which will allow the new arrangements to bed down. After that, it is the Government's intention to review the means of administering student support.

For the transitional period we shall be setting rigorous performance standards for LEAs, and the specific grant funding regime will be based on these standards. The Government are keen to ensure that students are given a high level of service that inspire confidence in the reforms. Our review, which will report in 2000, will consider this fully.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 23 January 1998

HOME DEPARTMENT

Lewes Prison (Suicide)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the circumstances surrounding the suicide of a prisoner within Lewes Prison on Tuesday 20 January. [25000]

Ms Quin: The inquest into the apparent suicide of a prisoner in Lewes prison on 19 January has been opened and adjourned. It would, therefore, be inappropriate for me to comment at this stage in detail on the circumstances surrounding the death.

Political Advisers (Support Staff)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many secretarial and support staff work full-time in support of his political advisers. [25195]

Mr. Straw: Three—the same number as supported the previous Administration's special advisers.

Departmental Publicity

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the cost of media presentations and press conferences which he has given, other than those held at his Department. [25147]

Mr. Straw: Media presentations and press briefings on Home Office subjects are, by and large, held at the Home Office. Where I meet the media on, for example, regional visits, there is little or no additional cost added to the visit costs. I have not held any media presentations outside the Department which have attracted expenditure.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many overseas visits have been made by his Department's political advisers at public expense since 1 May. [25149]

Mr. Straw: One—to Brussels to attend the Justice and Home Affairs Council meeting in May 1997.

Sex Offenders

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce national standards for the supervision of serious sexual offenders; and if he will make a statement. [25051]

Ms Quin: I am awaiting the report of a recent thematic inspection by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Probation on the role of the probation service in protecting the public from sex offenders; and will consider what further guidance or standards might be useful in the light of the report's conclusions.

Paedophiles

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the outcome of recent discussions regarding the release from prison of convicted paedophiles; and if he will make a statement. [24663]

Ms Quin: We are still considering, in the light of problems arising in recent cases involving the placement of sexual offenders following release from prison, what further legislation or other changes would help to protect the public.

Prisons (Drug Tests)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons that are participating in willing anonymous salivary HIV/Hepatitis B surveillance studies conducted under the auspices of the Public Health Laboratory Service at Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre, London, in collaboration with HM Prison Service's Directorate of Healthcare. [25057]

Ms Quin: The following prisons are participating in the unlinked anonymous survey of HIV and hepatitis in the prison population of England and Wales: Dartmoor; Feltham; Ford; Holloway; Leyhill; Littlehey; Manchester; and Wakefield.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average queuing time for the Public Inquiry Office at the Immigration and Nationality Directorate in Croydon; what is the average time taken to answer (a) telephone inquiries and (b) inquiries by letter to the Immigration and Nationality Directorate in Croydon; and if he will make a statement. [23915]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: During the last quarter of 1997, the average time for a case to be decided in the Croydon Public Inquiry Office was 5 hours 30 minutes and, for telephone inquiries to the Telephone Inquiry Bureau to be answered, 3 minutes and 24 seconds. A sample of 2,370 letters of inquiry between June and September 1997 showed that in 92 per cent. a full or holding reply had been given within the target of 20 working days.

Poor People

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will carry out an assessment of the impact of his Department's current policies on the (a) income, (b) employment opportunities and (c) living standards, of the poorest 30 per cent. of the population. [23337]

Mr. Straw: Crime and the fear of crime disproportionately affect those who are most disadvantaged in our society. Our policies for tackling crime and its causes are designed therefore to have a particular impact on those estates and neighbourhoods where crime and antisocial behaviour are most prevalent. We are also pursuing initiatives to strengthen the family, promote a vigorous voluntary sector and tackle social exclusion (including by enhancing training and treatment programmes for offenders). The Home Office Research and Statistics Directorate will continue to manage a varied programme of research to evaluate the effectiveness of our policies, including their impact in reducing social deprivation.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Poor People

Mr. Pond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will carry out an assessment of the impact of his Department's current policies on the (a) income, (b) employment opportunities and (c) living standards, of the poorest 30 per cent. of the population. [23341]

Mr. Morley: The Department evaluates policies against a number of criteria for their impact. One of our key priorities is to reform the Common Agriculture Policy of the European Union on more rational lines and reduce its costs as the CAP imposes costs on consumers of food as well as tax payers.

Agricultural Aid

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his policy towards (a) capping of aid to individual farms, (b) livestock quotas, (c) the future of milk quotas, (d) the linkage of aid to production units and (e) the linkage of aid with environmental measures. [25071]

Mr. Rooker: The Government's long-term objective is to secure a Common Agricultural Policy free from production controls, moving away from production-related farm support and with many resources directed to targeted agri-environmental and rural development objectives.

Flood Defences (Sussex)

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what extra funding is being made available for flood defences in Sussex; and if he will make a statement. [24850]

Mr. Morley: I should like to express both my sympathy for residents in Sussex who suffered distress and damage in the recent storms and my appreciation to the staff of local operating authorities in responding to the immediate effects.

There are two main sources of funding for the Environment Agency's flood defence programme; this Department provides grant aid towards the cost of capital works and local authorities provide cover for maintenance and the balance of capital expenditure. Discussions are continuing between the Ministry and the Agency to clarify the break down of any additional spending in Sussex between those two sources. Until that issue is resolved, no decisions can be taken on any change in funding allocations.

SCOTLAND

Devolution

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his statement of 12 January 1998, Official Report, column 32, what advantages in Brussels have accrued to (a) Catalonia, (b) Andalucia and (c) Baden-Württemberg which are not currently available to the Scottish Office in Brussels; and if he will list the special arrangements which exist within the (i) European Commission and (ii) Council of Ministers for dealing with matters relating to devolved legislative entities within member states. [23310]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 16 January 1998]: From the contacts I have had with the Catalonia and Baden-Württemberg offices, I conclude that these offices have contributed to improving the quality of information available to their regional governments and have helped those governments contribute to their domestic debate on European proposals. Although there are frequent informal contacts between devolved governments and the European institutions, there are no special arrangements for dealing with matters relating to devolved legislative bodies within the Commission and the Council.

Council Leisure Services

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future provision of council leisure services with particular reference to outsourcing. [23832]

Mr. MacDonald: It is the responsibility of local authorities to decide how best to provide services for their communities, and in particular to decide whether those services are provided directly by the council, or outsourced and supplied by a private sector contractor or another body. In making such decisions, councils must of course abide by any relevant legislation, including Regulations dealing with any relevant transfer of employees affected, and in particular have to bear in mind their statutory obligation to make arrangements to secure the best value for money in the services they provide.

Commission on Local Governments and the Scottish Parliament

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is able to announce the remit and membership of the proposed commission on local government and the Scottish Parliament. [25431]

Mr. Dewar: I can today announce the remit and membership of the Commission on Local Government and the Scottish Parliament.

The Commission will:

- consider how to build the most effective relations between local government and the Scottish Parliament and Scottish Executive so that collectively they can best serve Scotland's people;
- consider how councils can best make themselves responsive and democratically accountable to the communities they serve; and
- report to the first Minister of the Scottish Parliament as soon as possible after his or her election. In addtion, the Commission may choose, or be asked to submit, an interim report to the Secretary of State for Scotland.

The Commission's final report should be considered by the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Neil McIntosh has agreed to serve as Chairman of the Commission. The other Commissioners are Professor Alan Alexander, Mr. Andrew Cubie, Mr. Graham Leicester, Miss Eileen Mackay, Councillor Margraet Millar, Mr. Matt Smith, and Miss Maureen Watt.

DEFENCE

Manchester Ringway and Buxton Weather Stations

Mr. Levitt: To Ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the categories of meteorological data which are currently available from the weather stations at (a) Manchester Ringway and (b) Buxton; [24086]

(2) if he will give the (a) average daily maximum temperatures, (b) average daily minimum temperatures and (c) number of days of snowfall, month by month, from the Manchester Ringway and Buxton weather stations for the most recent 12 month period available [24085]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Meteorological Office. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Ewins to Mr. Tom Levitt, dated 23 January 1998:

I am replying to your Questions to the Secretary of State for Defence about meteorological data available from Manchester Ringway and Buxton weather stations and the temperature readings recorded there for the last twelve months. As Chief Executive of the Meteorological Office, this matter falls within my area of responsibility.

I enclose a list of the categories of meteorological data observed on a daily basis at the weather stations concerned, together with details of the average temperatures and snowfall levels at the two sites for the year ending 31 December 1997.

Army Prosecuting Authority

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 January 1998, Official Report, columns 408–09, if he will investigate the origin of the statement from an MoD source contained in the Press Association report of 1 December. [24986]

Dr. Reid: The author of the Press Association report in question contacted my Department's Press Office on 30 November, following up a story in that day's Sunday Telegraph. He was informed by my officials that the Army Prosecuting Authority, an independent body, had decided not to prosecute Major Joyce at that time. Responding to a question about the reference in The Sunday Telegraph to a letter from the Lord Chancellor, my Department's Press Office drew on the reply I gave the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson) of 17 November 1997, Official Report, column 69.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

New Opportunities Fund

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on his plans to include the environment as one of the themes within the New Opportunities Fund. [24466]

Mr. Banks: The National Lottery Bill currently before Parliament will establish the New Opportunities Fund to support time-limited initiatives in health, education and the environment. The first three initiatives will provide ICT training for teachers and librarians and content digitisation; out of school hours activities; and healthy living centres. The Bill also provides for future initiatives to be determined by Order, after consultation. Those future initiatives will include support for the environment, which will also continue to benefit from Lottery funding through the other good causes.

TREASURY

Ecclesiastical Buildings

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 19 December 1997, Official Report, column 335, concerning VAT on church and cathedral maintenance, what criteria the Financial Secretary used to arrive at the response given; when the decision was discussed; and who the decision was discussed with. [23203]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government believe that using the VAT system to relieve the expenditure of churches is an inefficient way of preserving the heritage. We prefer to target direct support through grants. A relief of the kind envisaged would contravene our agreements with our European partners.

Private Pensions (ACT)

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of current and future pensioners with private pension plans who will be affected by the changes to advance corporation tax. [23910]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: No such estimate is available. A large number of factors influence the private pensions people can expect to receive. It is therefore not possible to produce meaningful estimates for the effect of particular factors in isolation. The corporation tax changes introduced in the last Budget will be good for the economy as a whole and so should benefit pensioners along with everyone else.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultation he intends to introduce with respect to future Government plans for public expenditure; and if he will make a statement. [24718]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 22 January 1998]: New plans will be announced following the conclusion of the Comprehensive Spending Review which involves 24 departmental reviews and six cross-departmental reviews. The terms of reference of these reviews have been made public to encourage comments from those interested; departments are also consulting interested bodies. The results of the reviews will be announced to Parliament for scrutiny and examination in keeping with the principles of openness to which the Government are committed.

IT Equipment

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's policy regarding the recycling of information technology equipment within his Department and relevant agencies and to other Government departments or agencies; and what arrangements have been made in this respect. [23281]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 21 Janaury 1998]: The disposal of information technology (IT) equipment within the Treasury is governed by the objective of obtaining the best value for money. Our current procedure is firstly to see if it can be used elsewhere in the Department, and then if internal recycling is not possible to dispose of it to a third party organisation for refurbishment and recycling elsewhere.

Until the latter part of last year we had a contract for the disposal of surplus IT equipment with RD Computers Ltd., which was awarded following a procurement competition initiated about two years ago. We currently have arrangements with the Disposal Sales Agency of Ministry of Defence and ware constantly seeking for companies who can improve the value for money aspects of this process.

Child Benefit

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the revenue which would be raised from taxing child benefit, assuming no change to separate taxation of spouses. [24127]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 20 January 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my hon. Friend the Paymaster General gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 470.

WALES

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the average annual GDP growth over the three years 1998 to 2000 in (a) South West Wales and (b) Wales; and what was the corresponding average in each case for each of the three years 1995 to 1997. [23602]

Mr. Hain: The Welsh Office has not made a forecast of annual GDP growth over the three years 1998 to 2000. No GDP data exist for South West Wales. The most recent GDP figures for Wales and for the old counties of Wales, relative to the UK, are given in the following table.

GDP per head Wales and Welsh Counties as percentages of UK

Hawarden Airport

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what plans he has to encourage the more frequent use of Hawarden Airport; [24162]

(2) if he will visit Hawarden Airport; and if he will make a statement. [24163]

Mr. Hain: The development of Hawarden Airport is a matter for British Aerospace, the owners of the Airport.

As part of my continuing discussions about the scope for developing north–south transport links, I am due to visit Hawarden on 6 February to meet senior representatives of British Aerospace. I would hope to hear the company's views about making use of Hawarden for scheduled air services, and to see the facilities at the Airport.

Income Statistics

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the personal disposable income per head for Wales as a percentage of the United Kingdom average in each of the last three years for which figures are available. [23596]

Mr. Hain: The information requested, for the years 1993, 1994 and 1995, is given in the following table.

Personal disposable income per head, Wales as a percentage of United Kingdom

	Percentage
1993	87.0
1994	88.2
1995[1]	86.3

Redundancies (Deeside)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he is taking to ameliorate the impact upon Deeside of the proposed redundancies announced by Kimberley Clark at Deeside Industrial Park. [24160]

Mr. Hain: The TEC (CELTEC) and the Employment Service in North Wales are liaising with the company's consultants to see what help can be given to the staff who are to be made redundant. The TEC consider this redundancy to be a significant one and covered by the definition of "significant redundancy". This means that employees can be considered for Training for Work immediately (rather than having to wait six months). The local authority, as well as the Welsh Office and its other agencies, also stand ready to offer every possible assistance.

Rail Investment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet Shotton and Buckley town councils to discuss investment in the rail infrastructure; and if he will make a statement. [24164]

Mr. Hain: My right hon. Friend and I have no plans to meet Shotton and Buckley Town Councils to discuss investment in the rail infrastructure, which is principally a matter for Railtrack. However, I understand that the company confirmed during 1997 target dates for investment at seven local railway stations—Shotton High Level, Hawarden, Buckley, Penyffordd, Hope, Caergwrle and Cefn-y-Bedd. In addition, North Western Trains are taking forward over the next few years a £5 million programme of enhancements, including the provision of real-time information and improved security and lighting, which I understand will include stations in the Shotton and Buckley areas.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with Railtrack and Northwest Railways concerning the establishment of a rail station in the vicinity of Deeside Industrial Park. [24161]

Mr. Hain: The provision of railway infrastructure, including track, signalling and stations is principally a matter for Railtrack. However, I was pleased to announce on 10 December 1997 as part of the 1998–99 Transport Grant settlement the award to Flintshire County Council of £480,000 in support of the Deeside Integrated Transport Strategy.

Part of this award will be used by the County Council to begin to develop plans for a railway station to serve the Deeside Industrial Park. The first stage is expected to comprise mainly preliminary and design studies to identify, for example, the required size and location of a new station and the necessary associated infrastructure. In taking forward this work, I understand that the County Council plans to collaborate closely with local public transport operators, neighbouring local authorities and Railtrack.

Modern Apprenticeships

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many modern apprenticeships have been started in 1997–98 in each TEC area to the latest date, and which of the TECs have exhausted their approved starts and budgets for 1997–98. [24358]

Mr. Hain: The number of Modern Apprenticeship starts up to 30 November 1997 by TEC area in Wales is shown in the following table. These figures will be subject to updates in future periods. At this date none of the TECs in Wales were indicating that they had exhausted their approved starts and budgets for 1997–98. Welsh Office officials are monitoring the situation closely.

Education Spending

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the average amount spent per pupil of (a) primary and (b) secondary school age in each of the local authorities in Wales. [24168]

Mr. Hain: The information requested is given in the following table.

Local authority net current expenditure per pupil on primary and secondary education[1]

Rail Fares

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from rail users concerning the differences between fare levels for journeys within Wales and for journeys from Wales to English or Irish destinations; and if he will make a statement. [24295]

Mr. Hain: I have received one representation about this matter. The regulation of rail fares is the responsibility of the Franchising Director. I understand that he has powers to regulate fares where it would be in the interests of passengers to do so.

The Franchising Director has imposed a cap on the price of key fares and operators are not able to increase such fares overall above the rate of inflation. From January 1999, those fares will be capped at one percentage point below the rate of inflation for each of the next four years.

Train operators are free to make available discounts which they believe will attract more passengers and fill seats which would otherwise remain empty. Such discounts are a commercial matter for the operators and outside the scope of the Franchising Director's regulation of fares. However, operators are under no obligation to offer discounts between particular destinations, or to price their services in a way which reflects the inclusive deals offered by other operators or agencies.

Hospital Trusts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will announce his proposed reconfiguration of hospital trusts; and if he will make a statement. [25319]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I hope to be able to make an announcement by early April this year about the proposed shape of trusts on which public consultation will take place. A final decision can be taken only after detailed consideration of the response to that consultation. I expect this to be in about October or November 1998.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Sewage Treatment

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many sewage treatment plants in the United Kingdom include ultra-violet treatment systems; and if he will list their locations. [23716]

Angela Eagle: A list from the Environment Agency on locations of the thirty-five sewage treatment works which include ultra-violet treatment in England and Wales is attached in the table. The information relating to Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland respectively.

Northern Uplands Programme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what funds remain available in the current financial year and until 1999 allocated to the Northern Uplands Programme; and if he will list the programme of expenditure for the current and succeeding financial years. [23661]

Angela Eagle: Within the Northern Uplands Objective 5(B) Programme unallocated funds of £40.39 million are still to be committed to projects. This amounts comprises ERDF, ESF and EAGGF. Projects may continue to be submitted for approval up to the end of 1999 with those gaining approval then having a further two years in which to incur expenditure.

We would assume that of the total programme funding of £86.93 million the expenditure, in terms of grant claimed in respect of projects, would follow the following schedule.

1998–00: 73 per cent. (£63.46 million)

2000–02: 27 per cent. (£23.47 million).

M65–M6 Link (Colne)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact on Colne of the increased traffic resulting from the completion of the M65–M6 link; and if he will make a statement. [23373]

Ms. Glenda Jackson: The M65 Blackburn Southern Bypass, Junctions 1 to 6 opened on 15 December 1997 linking the existing M65 at J6 Whitebirk with the National Motorway network at the M61 and M6.

During the planning stages, the Highways Agency predicted that completion of the road would result in a 10 per cent. increase in traffic on the existing M65 east of Blackburn (Junctions 6 to 7).

Colne is some 15 miles east of the end of the Blackburn Southern Bypass and we have no reason to believe that the traffic impact on Colne will be any greater than that 10 per cent. estimation. We will be monitoring traffic flows on the new section of M65 as soon as possible during the coming year once traffic patterns have settled down.

Housing (Northumberland)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, transport and the Regions what is his estimate of the number of local authority tenants not in receipt of housing benefit in Blyth Valley. [24029]

Ms Armstrong: Precise figures are not collected by the Department but it is estimated that about one third (around 3,000) of the local authority tenancies in Blyth Valley were not in receipt of housing benefit in May 1997, the latest date for which data are available.

Road Safety

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what new measures he plans to improve road safety in the vicinity of schools. [23829]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Much of what the Government need to do to improve road safety in the vicinity of schools involves advising local authorities about the measures that are known to be effective.

DETR guidance to local authorities on their 1998–99 TPP submissions stressed the priority we attach to bids that focused on safer routes to school projects. Despite severe financial pressures, we have supported packages which seek to improve the road safety of children going to and from school in Hampshire, Oxfordshire, Hertfordshire and Surrey. Local authorities can also implement safety engineering schemes in the vicinity of schools using the local safety scheme element of their TPP allocation. Self enforcing 20 mph zones, employing traffic calming measures, may be installed to slow traffic in the vicinity of a school. It is for the local highway authority to decide if and where such zones would be suitable.

Helping children develop the skills needed to cope with traffic is a high priority for local authorities. Publicity plays a role and we are launching a new "Hedgehog" child safety campaign later this month promoting the 'Stop, Look, Listen, Live' message.

We are looking at the number, type and effectiveness of measures set up in England and Wales to try to improve the safety of children going to and from school. We will issue guidance to local authorities on this next year.

As part of the work on the road safety strategy we will consider what further measures could be introduced to improve the safety of children on our roads.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many times his wife has accompanied him on overseas visits; and what was the cost of her travel and other expenses. [25158]

Mr. Prescott: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) on 15 January 1998, Official Report, column 265.

Political Advisers (Support Staff)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many secretarial and support staff work full-time in support of his political advisers. [25194]

Angela Eagle: The special advisers to my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions are supported by one administrative officer and one personal secretary.

SSAs

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the changes in SSA methodology introduced for 1998–99, showing the effect of each change on (a) SSAs for each class of authority and (b) SSA for each local authority in England in (i) percentage and (ii) cash terms. [24521]

Ms Armstrong: Tables showing the effects of the proposed methodology changes have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Council Tax Benefit

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for each local authority the total amount of council tax benefit paid to residents and the figure in each case expressed as a percentage of the total council tax collected in each local authority. [24522]

Ms Armstrong: I have today placed in the Library of the House a table showing the amounts which each billing authority estimated as the amount of Council Tax benefit granted to Council Tax payers in respect of 1996–97 Council Taxes, and the figure in each case expressed as a percentage of the sum of the estimated 1996–97 Council Tax receipts in 1996–97 and the estimated amount of Council Tax benefit granted to Council Tax payers in 1996–97.

Workplace Safety

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reasons the Safety Assessment Federation and CEOC have not been invited to participate in the International Conference on the Importance of Good Design and Manufacture of Machinery in Improving Safety in the Workplace to be held by his Department in April. [25029]

Angela Eagle: Registration forms for the 'Safety by Design' Conference, should be available in early February. Copies will be sent to the Safety Assessment Federation and CEOC. I hope that they will apply for registration and participate in the Conference, which will be in Manchester on 29–30 April.

The Conference is aimed at an international audience and industry: Speakers reflect that audience. The role of conformity assessment and the involvement of Notified Bodies in securing high levels of safety on machinery will be addressed by the Swedish Board for Accreditation and Conformity Assessment and an official from the European Commission who has specific responsibility for this area of work.

I hope that the hon. Member will join me in wishing this important conference, which is being run as part of the United Kingdom's Presidency of the European Council of Ministers, every success.

Planning Inspectorate

Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the Planning Inspectorate's Annual Report and Accounts for 1996–97. [25604]

Mr. Caborn: The Planning Inspectorate's Annual report and Accounts has been published. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

The Inspectorate have just completed the first year of a demanding three year programme to restore appeal handling times to optimum levels. They have succeeded in meeting the majority of their business targets in 1996–97 and even on those that were missed substantial progress has been made: handling times have improved; new inspectors have been appointed; and measures taken to reduce the time to arrange inquiries and hearings.

The Agency has also been able to maintain the programme of development plan inquiries and has once again met its targets for handling this work. This will help ensure that full coverage of up to date development plans is achieved as soon as possible, providing greater certainty for all involved in the planning process.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Greece

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy in relation to the conditions of mentally and physically handicapped children in institutions in Greece. [24530]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We have discussed the treatment of mentally and physically handicapped children with the Greek authorities. The Greek Health and Welfare Minister announced on 20 January that a bill was currently being drafted to reform the welfare system in Greece. The Greek Under-Secretary for Welfare has said that the national welfare system (PIPKA) is to be merged with the children's foundation (MITERA), so that services can be better organised.

Israel

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 12 January 1998, Official Report, column 22, when he expects Israel to provide copies of the internal legislation relevant to the implementation of the origin and mutual assistance protocols annexed to the EC/Israel Interim Agreement. [24555]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In accordance with the agreement at the 28 November EC/Israel Co-operation Committee, Israel has now provided the European Commission with copies of this internal legislation. These are being examined by EC officials.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Israel's current internal legislation on the application of rules of origin to exported goods (a) incorporates the same definition of the borders of Israel as that accepted by the EC and (b) distinguishes between goods produced within the internationally recognised borders of Israel and those produced in Israeli settlements outside these borders; and how the current legislation differs from that in effect from 1 January 1996 in relation to control mechanisms envisaged in the EC/Israel agreement. [24556]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The EC/Israel Interim Agreement came into force on 1 January 1996. Israel has since revised its internal legislation to ensure that the conditions for benefiting from preferential rates of duty in the EC are respected. Copies of this legislation are now being examined by EC officials. This internal legislation gives no definition of the borders of Israel nor makes any reference to Israeli settlements. Certain goods produced in the West Bank and Gaza are eligible for preferential access to EU markets under the EC/PLO Interim Association Agreement. No information is available on the internal legislation in effect before 1 January 1996.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Israel will repay to the EC the import duty lost by mislabelling of Brazilian orange juice as Israeli. [24557]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Under EC law, it is the importer or his representative, not the exporting country, who is liable for any customs debt which arises where goods imported at a preferential rate are found not to meet the appropriate rules of origin. Any financial assistance provided by the exporting country to the EC importer is therefore a commercial matter between the two parties.

US–UK Mutual Defence Agreement

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on which occasions since 1968 the US Government have notified Her Majesty's Government of changes in their policy towards the importing of plutonium from the UK under the UK–US Mutual Defence Agreement 1958; and what form such notifications took. [23807]

Mr. Spellar: I have been asked to reply.

The United States Government have not notified the United Kingdom of any policy changes regarding the importation of plutonium during this period.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations the United States Government had with Her Majesty's Government prior to the release on 22 December of a US Department of Energy fact sheet on the quantity of plutonium acquired by the United States from the United Kingdom under the US–UK 1958 Mutual Defence Agreement on Atomic Energy matters. [23796]

Mr. Spellar: I have been asked to reply.

There was full consultation between the Ministry of Defence and the United States Department of Energy prior to the release of the fact sheet, during which we gave our agreement to the text.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what variations have been made to Article 2 of the Amendment of 27 September 1968 to the agreement for co-operation on the uses of atomic energy for mutual defence purposes, of 3 July 1958. [23793]

Mr. Spellar: I have been asked to reply.

Article 2 of the 1968 amendment refers to Article III bis of the 1958 UK-US Mutual Defence Agreement. Variations made to the wording of Article III bis since 1968 have been to extend the time limits for transfers of special nuclear materials together with two textual amendments. An amendment, Cmnd 9434, which entered into force on 16 November 1984 added a new paragraph C referring to the transfer from the United States of enriched uranium for military purposes. The most recent amendment to Article III bis is Cm 2785 which entered into force on 23 December 1994. This amendment (a) extends the time limit to December 31, 2004 and (b) advises of a textual change to one phrase in paragraph C.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what quantities of plutonium with a plutonium-240 content in the range two to 10 per cent. the United Kingdom has exported to the United States under the provisions of the 1958 US-UK Mutual Defence Agreement on atomic energy matters. [24049]

Mr. Spellar: I have been asked to reply.

Between 1960 and 1979 the United Kingdom exported 0.1 metric tonnes of plutonium with a pu 240 content between 2 per cent. and 10 per cent. to the United States under the provisions of the 1958 Mutual Defence Agreement. I am withholding further information concerning other transfers under Category 1 of the exemptions to the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information concerning defence, security and international relations.

NORTHERN IRELAND

TSN Resources

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made to date in the consultations with interested parties, with particular reference to future TSN values and methods of allocations and funding for grounds. [21229]

Mr. Worthington: Under changes announced to LMS formulae for 1998–99 the overall TSN allocation to the voluntary grammar school sector will be reduced to reflect the fact that they do not have significant problems of educational disadvantage. Further consultations with educational interests on the allocation of TSN resources will begin later this year. Those consultations will focus on more effective targeting of TSN money at the most needy schools.

Funding for voluntary grammar schools' grounds and pitches will be retained in 1998–99, at a reduced rate, pending further consideration of the issue. A further round of consultations with schools on this and other proposals for further changed in the formula finding arrangements will also be held later this year.

Graffiti

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will give the RUC the power to obliterate or remove graffiti and markings of a sectarian nature; and if she will make a statement. [23689]

Mr. Ingram: Article 18 of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) (NI) Order 1985 provides District Councils with the power to remove or obliterate graffiti which is considered detrimental to the district; the exercise of such powers is a matter for district councils.

The Roads (NI) Order 1993 provides power for the Department of the Environment (NI) to remove graffiti from the public road: the Roads Service of the Department uses these powers where it considers it appropriate to do so.

There are no plans to transfer responsibility for this work to the RUC.

Document Leaks

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in what respects her Department applied different procedures in respect of (a) the leak of the Drumcree memorandum differently, (b) the leak of personnel files from the Department of Agriculture Private Office; what factors underlay differences in procedure; and if she will make a statement. [23693]

Marjorie Mowlam: The letter I sent to the hon. and learned Member on 14 August 1997 explained the background to these cases. When it became clear that the investigation into the leak of personnel files from the Department of Agriculture involved only members of the Northern Ireland Civil Service, each individual was informed of their right of silence under paragraph 1081 of the NICS Pay and Conditions of Service Code. Given the particular seriousness of the leak of the Drumcree memorandum which might have put at risk the lives of a number of civil servants, as well as threatening to undermine the Government's handling of the marching issue, all individuals questioned were informed of their right of silence but no undertaking about not drawing adverse inferences was given. In the event of the Drumcree inquiry no member of staff who was questioned chose to exercise their right of silence.

Giro Fraud

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many awards were made in 1997 to Post Office staff for assistance in relation to DHSS giro fraud; and what was the total expenditure on such awards; [23690]

(2) if she will require originals of replaced giros to be held back by the Post Office on encashment for inspection by her Department for evidential purposes. [23691]

Mr. Worthington: Responsibility for the subject has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its Chief Executive, Mr. Chris Thompson. I have asked him to arrange for a response to be given.

Letter from Chris Thompson to Mr. Robert McCartney, dated 21 January 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions on the number and value of awards made under the Post Office award scheme in 1997 and on the possibility of the Post Office retaining the originals of replaced giros.

The number of awards made in 1997 to Post Office staff for assistance in relation to DHSS giro fraud was 83 and the total expenditure on such awards was £830.

As to retaining the originals of replaced giros, I should explain that the Social Security Agency is covered by an arrangement between the Benefits Agency in Great Britain and Girobank Plc whereby Girobank provides for the encashment of girocheques through Northern Ireland Post Offices.

Under the arrangements, encashed girocheques are accounted for weekly by Post Office and retained for 1 week. They have then returned to the Agency's Finance Branch of reconciliation and accounting purposes. All reconciled giros are retained in date and Post Office order for a period of 12 months from their encashment and are available for follow-up investigation and evidential purposes.

If a benefit office has doubts about the authenticity of a request for a replacement giro, practical precautions are taken, which may include contacting the relevant Post Office to determine if the original giro was cashed or otherwise, to try to prevent later encashment. Where the Post Office indicates that an original has been cashed and is still held, benefit offices may, on occasions, consider it appropriate to retrieve the giro directly.

More normally however, reconciliation and accounting action will proceed in the knowledge that follow up action on both originals and replacements is taken in every instance by the Agency's Fraud Branch. I would, therefore, not consider it of advantage to ask the Post Office to hold back originals of replaced giros.

I hope this explains the position for you but I would be happy to provide any further information you require.

Legislation (Staff Costs)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many staff are employed in each Northern Ireland Office/Civil Service Department on preparing legislation; and what are the total and average staff costs in each Department. [23694]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Stolen Army Weapons

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to the answer of 10 December 1997, Official Report, columns 554–58, concerning weapons stolen from the Army during the past 10 years, how many of the recovered weapons were known to be in the possession of (a) Loyalists, (b) Republicans and (c) others. [22801]

Dr. Reid: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is set out below for all British Army weapons lost, stolen or otherwise unaccounted for in Northern Ireland in each of the past ten years.

		Number of weapons recovered from:
Year	Total recovered	Loyalists	Republicans	[1]Others
1988	4	—	3	1
1989	7	4	1	2
1990	3	1	—	2

[1]Others—Non-terroris'/criminal/not known.

[2] I regret that the answer I gave the hon. Member on 10 December incorrectly placed one weapon in the "Not Known" category which should have been shown under Republican.

PRIME MINISTER

Royal Family (Gifts)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy in respect of gifts received by the sovereign or members of her family on behalf of the nation in respect of their retention, their public availability and the availability of information in respect of all gifts so received. [24301]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 January 1998]: Details of official gifts to the Sovereign or other Members of the Royal Family are generally made public through press releases at the time they are received. All official gifts are recorded and retained in public museums, the Royal Library or royal palaces, and are displayed to the public or used on public occasions where possible. Requests from members of the public for information about gifts to The Queen and other Members of the Royal Family are answered by members of the Royal Household.

No. 10 Downing Street

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what access and toilet facilities No. 10 Downing Street provides for people who are wheelchair users; [23776]

(2) what plans he has to make adaptions to No. 10 Downing Street to improve access facilities for wheelchair users. [23777]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 January 1998]: No. 10 Downing Street has a number of facilities for the disabled. Portable ramps are available to give access to the house; a passenger lift which can accommodate wheelchairs and which gives access to all floors; a stair climber to enable wheelchairs to be taken up the main stairs; and a wheelchair lift to facilitate access to the State Rooms. A disabled toilet has also been installed.

Whilst no further work is planned, provision for the disabled is kept under review.

Vitamin B6

Mr. Paice: To ask the Prime Minister if he was consulted about the proposed new restrictions on the retail sale of vitamin B6 prior to the announcement; and what representation he was received and what discussions he has had with the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on this subject. [24307]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 January 1998]: I have received a large number of representations on the subject of the proposed controls on dietary supplements containing vitamin B6.

The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will be consulting on the draft regulations to introduce new controls.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the division of responsibility within Government in respect of the year 2000 problem. [24733]

The Prime Minister: The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster is co-ordinating action across the civil service and its agencies. A Ministerial Group (MISC 4), chaired by the President of the Board of Trade, is co-ordinating work to ensure that the national infrastructure is not damaged by the failure of electronic systems related to the 2000 date change. Secretaries of State are responsible for action within their own Departments.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister how many receptions he has held at Chequers since he took office; how many people have attended; and what was the cost of these events. [25141]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, column 858.

HEALTH

Premature Mortality Rates

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he intends to take to reduce premature mortality rates in deprived areas; and if he will make a statement. [24828]

Ms Jowell: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Pond) on 20 January 1998, Official Report, column 499.

Dental Caries and Angina

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence his Department has assessed over the last 10 years which indicates a relationship between incidences of (a) dental caries and (b) angina with diet; and what new steps he plans to take to tackle these diseases. [24463]

Ms Jowell: The evidence linking diet with dental caries which the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food and Nutrition Policy (COMA) considered is cited in its reports Dietary Sugars and Human Disease published in 1989, and Dietary Reference Values for Food Energy and Nutrients for the United Kingdom published in 1991. Evidence also came from the National Diet and Nutrition Survey: children aged 1½ to 4½ years Volume 2 Report of the dental survey published in 1995. Copies of these reports are available in the Library. Angina is a symptom of cardiovascular disease (CVD) and the evidence reviewed by COMA linking diet with CVD is cited in its report Nutritional Aspects of Cardiovascular Disease published in 1994.

We will be setting out our new strategy to reduce the burden of CVD shortly in our Green Paper Our Healthier Nation. As part of our strategy for reducing dental caries the Health Education Authority (HEA) has been commissioned to provide an update on oral health for health visitors and school nurses which will cover dietary concerns and we have commissioned a further similar resource from the HEA for the carers of pre-school children.

District Nurses

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to increase the provision of district nurses in areas with the greatest health care needs. [24827]

Mr. Milburn: The Government are employing a twin strategy to match supply and demand by investing in more training and strategies to improve the recruitment, retention and return to practice of trained staff.

In 1997–98, a total of £766 million is being spent on non-medical education and training which incudes: provision for an extra 1,300 new nurse training places, and an allocation of £10.4 million to support recruitment and retention initiatives such as return to practice programmes.

In 1998–99, a further £50 million will be invested in health professional training—including a further £30 million for new nursing and PAMs training commissions. The extra money will also support improved facilities for expanding training opportunities in primary care.

Community nurses, working within Primary Care Groups, will play a key role in delivering the aims of the Government's new NHS White Paper.

Drug Users Database

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to extend the regional database of drug users into a reconstituted national database; and if he will make a statement. [23924]

Ms Jowell: The Regional Drug Misuse Databases hold anonymised information about people presenting to services for problem drug users for the first time or for the first time for six months. Data from each of the databases are collected and analysed centrally by the Department of Health and published as the Statistical Bulletin "Drug Misuse Statistics", which presents data both at national and regional levels. Copies of the most recent bulletin for the six month period ending 31 March 1996 have been placed in the Library.

The Department is currently at an early stage of work with health authorities, database managers and other interests on the strategic development of the Regional Drug Misuse Databases.

Hypertension

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence his Department has assessed on the relationship between the incidence of hypertension and the consumption of salt in the diet. [24462]

Ms Jowell: The evidence assessed by the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food and Nutrition Policy is cited in their 1994 report Nutritional Aspects of Cardiovascular Disease. Copies of the report are available in the Library.

Cannabis

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with pharmaceutical companies in respect of the British medical Association's report on the therapeutic uses of cannabis; and if he will make a statement. [24836]

Mr. Boateng: We have had no official discussions with pharmaceutical companies in respect of the British Medical Association's report on the therapeutic uses of cannabis. However, the Home Office and the Medicines Control Agency have always indicated that they are prepared to look at well founded research proposals in this area.

Private Residential and Nursing Homes

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to subject the accounts of private residential and nursing homes to a public auditing procedure. [24821]

Mr. Boateng: We have no plans to do so.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Libel Actions

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many libel actions have been decided by (a) a judge and (b) a jury in each of the last 10 years. [24000]

Mr. Hoon: The information is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what conditions have to be satisfied for the courts to allow a libel action to proceed without a jury. [24036]

Mr. Hoon: It is a matter of judicial discretion as set out in the Rules of the Supreme Court Order 33 rule 5.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list, by country, those localities where magistrates courts have been closed in each of the last five years and those localities where magistrates courts have been proposed or agreed for closure in 1998. [23958]

Mr. Hoon: The information requested is not collected centrally and could be collected only at a disproportionate cost.

Magistrates courts are provided by the local paying authority for the use of the magistrates courts committee (MCC). Closure decisions are for the MCC to determine, although the paying authority may appeal to the Lord Chancellor against a proposed closure.

The administration of the magistrates courts is based on units known as MCCs, not counties. Whilst MCCs have tended to be based on the old county boundaries, the effect of local government reorganisation and the amalgamation of MCCs means this is now changing.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Special Educational Needs

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each education authority the number and percentage of (a) primary and (b) secondary pupils statemented as having special needs. [23654]

GCSE Results

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what were the percentage declines in the average annual percentage point rates of increase in each of the percentages of all 15 year old pupils, excluding only those in special schools, achieving at least (a) 5 GCSEs at grades A*–C, (b) 5 GCSEs and (c) 1 GCSE in the quinquennial period 1992 to 1997, compared with the corresponding average annual rates of increase in the quadrennial period 1988 to 1992. [23653]

Dr. Howells: The information requested in respect of GCSEs is shown in the following tables.

Schools (Private Finance Initiative)

Mr. Dorrell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list those new capital schemes for school developments which have been approved under the PFI since 2 May 1997. [23106]

Mr. Byers: Since 2 May 1997, the Department has approved the PFI scheme to provide replacement buildings and facilities management for the Colfox School in Dorset. The contract (worth £15 million in capital investment) was signed in November 1997. In addition, the PPP scheme to build and operate a new primary school in the Victoria Dock area of Kingston-upon-Hull (with a capital value of £2 million) has received conditional approval from the Department.

Furthermore, many local authorities are actively developing PPP schemes to provide a range of asset-based services, including energy management, IT systems and catering facilities—over 20 of which are receiving support from the Department. More than 25 local authorities have expressed an interest in becoming one of 5 large-scale pilot PPP projects under the New Deal for Schools. PPP schemes to provide a range of asset-based services for grant maintained and voluntary aided schools are also receiving support from the Department.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what will be his Department's budget in cash and constant 1996–97 prices for (i) further and (ii) higher education and in England (a) in 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) planned for 1998–99; and what sums these figures represent for each WTE Student in each of those years. [22976]

Dr. Howells: The total level of the Department's budget in cash and constant 1996–97 prices for (i) further education and (ii) higher education, and the Government funding per full-time equivalent student are shown in the following table:

Equal Opportunities

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much Government money was spent on the Equal Opportunities Commission in (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97; and what estimate he has made of the annual gross cost of enforcing the Sex Discrimination Acts in (i) 1995–96 and (ii) 1996–97. [23472]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Department for Education and Employment made the following grant-in-aid payments to the Equal Opportunities Commission: (a) £6.429 million in 1995–96 and (b) £5.821 million in 1996–97. There is no estimate of the annual gross cost of enforcing the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 in these years.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the regulations to extend the number of waiting days in Jobseeker's Allowance from three to seven with effect from April 1999 will be laid. [25724]

Mr. Keith Bradley: As I announced on 2 July, we are proceeding with the previous Government's decision that the number of waiting days before Jobseeker's Allowance becomes payable will be increased from three days to seven days from April 1999.

The Jobseeker's Allowance (Amendment) Regulations 1998 (S.I. 1998/71) which extend the number of waiting days in Jobseeker's Allowance from April 1999, together with the Social Security Advisory Committee's Report (Command Paper Number 3829), have been laid in the House.

As the Committee is aware, we have taken steps to ensure that no one will have to wait longer than under the current system before benefit becomes payable. We have also agreed to follow the Committee's recommendation to monitor carefully how the administrative easement works in practice.

For those participating in the New Deal for young unemployed people, the Government have introduced a change to the linking rules so that jobseekers will not have to serve a further set of waiting days if they claim Jobseeker's Allowance at the end of their time on the New Deal. Our priority is getting people back to work. Our Welfare to Work measures will do this.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Chorley (Mr. Hoyle) of 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 458, when she expects (a) the range of options for those with long-term health problems or disability to move into work to be (i) fully tested and (ii) the comprehensive spending review of such benefits to be complete; and if her departmental spending plans for 1998–99 and succeeding years require her to make savings in such benefits before the range of options financed by the windfall tax have been fully tested. [22998]

Mr. Denham: The Government believe that work is the best form of welfare for people of working age, and have set aside £195 million to fund a programme improving opportunities for people with disabilities or long-term illness who want to work. This money has been set aside over the lifetime of the current Parliament, during which the programme will be developed, implemented and evaluated. One key element will involve funding a number of innovative schemes to test ways of helping people to move into or stay in work, and a tendering exercise was launched on 9 December. The first schemes will start later this year, and will run for 12 months initially. Plans for introducing personal advisers will also be announced later this year.

My right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary announced the Comprehensive Spending Review, expected to take about a year to complete, on 11 June last year. This Department's spending plans for 1998–99 and subsequent years make no assumptions about possible changes in expenditure on benefits arising from either the Comprehensive Spending Review or the welfare to work programme.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she expects to make a decision on the review of the eligibility of Mrs. E. Otter of 9 Crowder Meadow, South Brent, for disability living allowance; and if she will make a statement as to the delay. [24717]

Mr. Denham: One of our key aims is to rebuild integrity in, and public support for, the Social Security system and the way in which public money is spent. Benefits should go to those who are properly entitled to benefit. This is why we have continued with the Benefits Integrity Project.

The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Rxecutive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with further details.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 22 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking when a decision will be made to Mrs. E. Otter's claim for Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and the reasons for the delay.

The Benefit Integrity Project (BIP) was set up in response to the recent Benefit Review of DLA. Over the next two years, specially trained staff will make enquiries by postal questionnaire or home visit in over 400,000 cases to establish whether DLA is being paid correctly. Mrs. Otter was contacted through the enquiry work of BIP.

Mrs E. Otter's DLA was reviewed on 31 October 1997. The Adjudication Officer (AO) decided that there had been a relevant change in her circumstances which meant that Mrs Otter was no longer entitled to either the higher rate of mobility or middle rate of care from 28 August 1997. Mrs Otter requested a review of this decision on 7 November 1997. In the light of additional information submitted by Mrs Otter, the AO requested a report from an Examining Medical Practitioner, which was completed and returned to the Disability Benefits Directorate on 13 January, 1998. On 15 January, an AO reviewed the decision made on 31 October and Mrs Otter was sent a notification of this decision on 20 January 1997.

The Disability Benefits Directorate aims to complete 60% of review decisions within 55 working days, and 80% within 75 working days. These targets have been set to take account of the fact that reviews can take time to complete, because the review process involves the gathering of further information. It is expected that Mrs Otter's case will meet this target and be completed within 55 working days.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Administration Costs

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the cost, as a percentage of the money disbursed, in administering (a) income support, (b) incapacity benefit, (c) disability living allowance, (d) attendance allowances, (e) social fund loans, (f) Social Fund grants, (g) child benefit, (h) state retirement pension, (i) SERPS and (j) maternity benefit. [22997]

Mr. Denham: Administration costs of the main benefits expressed as a percentage of benefit expenditure are shown in the Social Security Departmental Report. The 1997 Report is available in the Library of the House and shows the following figures for financial year 1995–96:

	Per cent.
Income Support	9
Incapacity Benefit	5.1
Disability Living Allowance	4
Attendance Allowance	4.4
Social Fund[1]	36.7
Child Benefit	2.2
Retirement Pension[2]	1.1
Maternity Allowance	15.1

[1]The Social Fund figure covers both loans and grants.

[2]SERPS is covered by Retirement Pension.

Figures for financial year 1996–97 are being finalised and will be included in the 1998 Departmental Report scheduled for publication following the Spring Budget Statement.

Appeals

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the success rate at social security tribunals of appellants against withdrawal of benefits through failure to pass the all work test (a) before December 1996 and (b) since January 1997. [23148]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

The proportion of all Tribunal decisions given in the appellants' favour relating to the all work test

Per cent.

	Decisions in appellants' favour
Before December 1996 (i.e. of the appeals heard and decided between September 1995 and December 1996)	45.0
Since January 1997 (i.e. of the appeals heard and decided up to the end of September 1997)	42.4

The table includes cases where entitlement to National Insurance Credits is at issue but where no benefit is in payment.

SERPS

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much would be saved in each of the next 10 financial years by ending the accrual of rights to state earnings-related pensions in respect of years of employment after 1998–99. [23111]

Mr. Denham: The information is provided in the table.

Estimated reduction in expenditure on SERPS if the scheme was closed to future accruals from April 1999

Millions

Year	Reduction in expenditure
2000–01	negligible
2001–02	£10
2002–03	£30
2003–04	£70
2004–05	£120
2005–06	£180
2006–07	£250
2007–08	£340
2008–09	£440

1. All figures are rounded to the nearest £10 million and are in constant 1997–98 prices.

2. Due to the way SERPS is calculated, the pension of people reaching State pension age in 1999–2000 is not affected by the ending of SERPS accruals in that year.

3. Changes to National Insurance revenue have not been included.

Disabled Drivers Association

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the outcome of consultations with Disabled Drivers Association on the disablement living allowance. [23515]

Mr. Denham: Following the meeting between the Disabled Drivers Association (DDA) and my noble Friend the Under-Secretary on the 26 November 1997, information was supplied to the DDA on the number of disabled people who had their mobility component of Disabled Living Allowance suspended as a result of admission to hospital and the emerging findings on the Benefit Integrity Project.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the numbers and percentages of pensioners in each region of the United Kingdom who are (a) dependent on means-tested benefits, (b) in each quartile of national income distribution, (c) in each quartile of national pensioner income distribution, (d) taxpayers and (e) dependent on pension income other than the state basic retirement or supplementary pension of more than £2,500. [23667]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is set out in tables available in the House of Commons Library.

Maternity Pay

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women received statutory maternity pay in excess of (a) £1,000, (b) £2,000, (c) £5,000 and (d) £18,000 per week over the latest 12 months for which figures are available. [23283]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the form requested and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Lone Parents

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will publish the number of lone parents in each parliamentary constituency. [23523]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the form requested. Estimates of the number of one parent families are available by local authority area from the 1991 Census. This information can be obtained from the 1991 Census County Reports, Part 2, Table 89—which are available in the House of Commons Library.

Income Support

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the percentage uptake in respect of those entitled to receive income support among pensioners in terms of (a) numbers of people and (b) expenditure. [24879]

Mr. Keith Bradley: In 1995–96, the estimated take-up of Income Support by pensioners was between 60 per cent. and 66 per cent. by numbers of people and between 72 per cent. and 78 per cent. by expenditure.

We are determined to get help to those pensioners not claiming their Income Support, and have commissioned research to help find out why they do not claim. From April, we will be running a number of pilot exercises to find out how best to encourage them to claim.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the percentage uptake in respect of those entitled to receive income support in terms of (a) numbers of people and (b) expenditure. [24878]

Mr. Keith Bradley: In 1995–96, take-up of Income Support was estimated to be between 76 per cent. and 82 per cent. by numbers of people, and between 88 per cent. and 92 per cent. by expenditure.

Occupational Pension Schemes

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many occupational pension schemes which were previously contracted-out on the contracted-out salary-related scheme basis have elected to be contracted-out as contracted-out money purchase schemes since 2 July 1997. [24880]

Mr. Denham: During the period 2 July 1997 to 21 January 1998, the Contributions Agency received 285 elections from contracted-out salary-related schemes switching, under the provisions of regulation 76A of the 1996 Contracting-Out regulations (SI 1172),— to contracting-out on a money purchase basis. Of these, 173 have been processed.

Child Poverty

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what definition of poverty is being used by her Department in its Welfare Reform Focus Files publication in relation to the estimate of the number of children living in poverty. [25030]

Mr. Keith Bradley: There are various measures which point to this figure of nearly 4 million children. There are 4.2 million children in households whose income (after housing costs) is below half the average income (3.3 million before housing costs). There are 3.8 million children in households whose income (after housing costs) is in the bottom quintile of the income distribution (3.6 million before housing costs). These are indicators of the scale of the problem to be addressed in reforming welfare.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 304

SESSION 1997–98

12th January—23rd January 1998

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
